At The Front For 18 Months

France, Feb., 27th

Dear Parents: Just a few lines to let you know that I am living also that I received your most welcome letter the other day, and was glad to hear from you. I have just finished reading Frank Geddes' letter in The Times and find myself in the same billets to night. We just landed. I did not see Frank, but he may be within ten minutes walk of me, but I don't know what battalion he is in.

We are in a lovely beech grove, and the boom of the guns can be heard all round. It is a sight to watch after dark, the flash of the guns and the star lights, and the clatter of machine guns and rifle fire. The shell shattered village, the old walls of the church shelled in 1870, the ruined houses are all about us. Then you count the days you have to put in before you will be taking your turn in the trenches, in mud and gun fire. Wonder if we will have luck enough to get back to watch the guns once more Then you say to yourself; "Well, I have put in 18 months and surely I can put in a few more. I have seen some tough spots, and sometimes death has been tapping at my back door. I have been hit twice but I have never told you It was only a flea-bite. One piece of shrapnel put me to sleep for awhile and put a scar over my left eye, but still it was not bad and I am as good as ever again. I have been through three trench raids and we had three mines blown on us. I was also through the Somme drive and am in the Snipers' section. We get some good hunting. We have some good times and lots of fun I saw Roy Thomson at the Somme, but have not seen any of them lately It seemed like old times to see so many Port boys as I did when I was over on leave. I had a fine time and it was good to get away from the noise for a few days.

A Great Need

If there is one thing needed in this community, it is a more up-to date system of testing eyes and fitting glasses Mr. R. C Crawford has arranged to fill that need, and at great expense has arranged with Frederick W. Mayor, the eminent eye specialist, to be at his drug store in Port Elgin, for ten days beginning Monday April 9th, to give free demonstrations of the wonderful "shadow test" system of sight-testing, each morning, afternoon and evening. This is a great opportunity. Glasses should be changed and eyes tested regularly, and from this date forward Port Elgin and vicinity are to have this "shadow test" at their command, for Prof. Mayor has come for the express purpose of instructing and making Mr. Crawford proficient in the new and latest system of sight-testing. Remember the place, and watch for further announcement.

Prose on the Buyer's Guide

A very good piece of prose on the Buyer's Guide, was contributed by Miss Lily Allan of Saugeen, as follows:

Whoever investigated the Buyer's Guide, truly wasn't sorry when his lines to the Port Times he supplied; for it's an ideal thought to advertise articles to be bought, and to give people justice as they ought. On the right hand side you'll find the Buyer's Guide underlined; and your memory it will always remind; for it's there doing its work, and its duty it will not shirk, and when this paper you read, I do not think you need to ask where is the Buyer's Guide, for its trade mark is right on the outside.

Miss Hazel Webb left Monday for Chatham, where she will take vocal training. Miss Webb has delighted our people frequently with her singing, and it will be a source of satisfaction to know that she is to train her natural talent. She has interpreted many beautiful solos with such sweetness and clearness, that it would seem superfluous, at first thought, for her to train. But there are vast possibilities in the realm of music, and The Times rejoices, with all its readers, that Miss Webb is to take the opportunity of advancing herself.

The remains of the late Garfield Floto arrived here from Windsor Monday, and interment will take place this afternoon to Port Elgin cemetery. Deceased is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Floto, of Port Elgin. He left here three years ago for Windsor, where he has been a locomotive fireman running out that city. He contracted typhoid fever, but was ill only a few days. Garfield was a bright young man of good character, well liked and popular with all the young people, and his demise is deeply regretted. Services are being held in the Evangelical church this (Wednesday) afternoon. Rev. Mr. Gischler officiating.

Hollanders and Herrings.

Holland can claim the honor of having first established herring fisheries and taught its people the very great nutritious value of this fish. A Dutchman, Wilhelm Benkelszoon, discovered the secret of preserving herrings in the fourteenth century, and the salted herring made its appearance on the market in precisely the same manner as it now does, for the preserving process has undergone no marked change. Your Dutch fishermen is an expert at his job and can manage as many as 1,200 fish in an hour, working at top speed. He ties a short knife to the third and fourth fingers of his right hand by a string, which is attached to the handle of the knife. He thrusts it through the gill cavities and, with a sharp cut, brings away the gills, heart, gullet and pectoral fins of the unfortunate herring.

Women's Time Schedules.

Few women speak of a train starting slightly off the even hour, as the 3.03 train for example, or the 3.12. "Three" will do. It bothers a man a heap to go hunting for a 3 o'clock train by feminine directions, when it is a 3.12 train. For some women "3" will do for the 2.54 train; it's near enough. Then the man following feminine directions, unless he is on his guard against these pitfalls, is lost.

Probably, if it were not for his business training, which teaches a man that 3.02 is not 3, and 3.01, not 3.01½, not 3.01¾, but 3.02, he'd be better natured about women's time schedules.—Exchange.

"Pray Before Being Married."

Here is a Russian proverb that might be made good use of. It certainly would dispel a multitude of sorrows, especially the last one, which would prevent many hasty marriages and relieve the courts of many divorce cases. It takes matrimony out of the pale of whims and makes a divine consideration of it. The proverb runs this way:

"If you go to war, pray; if you go on a sea journey, pray twice, but pray three times if you are going to be married."

Good advice, all of it. There is too much that is hysterical in the matrimonial venture, and a little praying will tend to relieve the mind.—Ohio State Journal.

Dublin Castle.

Dublin castle has a history of over seven centuries, for it was King John who in 1204 ordered it to be built, "well fortified, with good fosses and thick walls strong enough to defend or control the city." Henry III., when about to visit Ireland in 1243, ordered the addition of a hall, "with sufficient windows and glass casements," and other improvements were made in succeeding reigns, particularly by the Duke of Clarence, son of Edward III., who as viceroy spent much money on the castle to make it convenient (as his father complained when called upon to pay) "for his sports and other pleasures."—London Standard.

It surely isn't all peaches and cream in this fighting game.

A CURIOUS CUSTOM.

How the Dusky Maidens of Western Africa Win Husbands.

The natives of western Africa, and especially those on the coast, retain many quaint customs. When a girl has reached her eleventh or twelfth year she is considered quite old enough to enter into the bonds of matrimony. She is taken to the bank of the nearest river and an offering to the particular deities that she and her tribe worship is made with all due solemnity beside the stream. The dusky maid is then publicly washed in the river; a bracelet of black and white beads and gold is placed around her waist, or, if her family are not rich enough to provide beads of gold, her waist is simply marked with white lines.

She is then dressed in the best of the family wardrobe and is escorted in a procession through the town to show to all beholders of her beauty that she has reached the marrying age. Her hair is fantastically plaited and she is perfumed with scents.

All this done, if she is lucky a number of eligible young bachelors comes forward and make offers for her hand and heart, and the match is arranged on a strict cash basis. The preliminaries concluded, the marriage takes place. The bridegroom gives a feast, to which he and his family and the bride and her family all come. On the day after the feast the bridegroom shows his appreciation of his wife by powdering her head and shoulders with fine clay, and once more there is a procession through the streets of the village.

HOW M. C. LINDOS FOUND A CURE IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

One of the Reasons Why Dodd's Kidney Pills Have Had a Phenomenal Growth of Popularity in the West.

Ellscott, Alta., March 29th.—(Special.)—The growth of popularity of Dodd's Kidney Pills in this section of the Great West has been phenomenal. They cure kidney disease. That much has been proved again and again. One of the latest proofs comes from M. C. Lindos, well known and highly respected here.

"Thanking Dodd's Kidney Pills seems a small way of expressing my gratitude," M. C. Lindos states. "I suffered from headaches and dizziness and was unable to find anything that would do me any good. I tried several medicines that were advertised to cure my trouble, but they did not.

Dodd's Kidney Pills were recommended to me by a friend and I sent for a box and gave them a trial. The result is that I am feeling fine now. I shall always keep a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills handy."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cured M. C. Lindos because the trouble came from the kidneys. Lumbago, rheumatism, dropsy, heart disease, diabetes and Bright's Disease are other troubles that come from sick kidneys. To cure them cure the kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Your Corner.

Don't you like your little corner of the world?
Have you sweetened it with sunshine and with song.
Have you tried to make it brighter as you toiled,
Have you tried to right its sorrow
and its wrong?
Do you think it's just the finest spot
you know,
And the noblest spot for effort that could be?
Have you made it shed around a brighter glow?
Have you tried to help the rest of us to see?
Are you happy in your station and your time,
And contented with the way that things go on;
Have you made the little corner round
you chime,
Does it sparkle with the dewdrops
in the dawn?
Do the thousands that go marching on their way
Stop to smile before the beauty that you've brought
From the chaos and the turmoil of the fray
By a little friendly purpose and sweet thought?
Don't you like the little corner He has given
For your gladness and your use and your delight?
Have you made it just a little nearer
Heaven,
Have you turned it from its darkness and its night?
It's your corner and it ought to be so fine
No other corner anywhere could glow
With the beauty and the gladness and the shine
The [illegible] special little corner's learned to know.

SUBMARINE HAS EARS.

Microphones Direct This Ship When Submerged.

Although the submarine is blind after it dives it can be made to hear with the aid of microphones or electric ears. Edward F. Chandler, an inventor who has made a close study of submarine problems, has worked out a method of utilizing microphones whereby a submerged craft may direct its course accurately toward a hostile ship. He gives an interesting explanation of this method in the Popular Science Monthly.

"In the modern telephone," says Mr. Chandler, "the transmitter is essentially a microphone, the pressure of the sound waves being communicated to the conductors by means of a diaphragm. The submarine equipped for battle under the sea is provided with microphones on its port and starboard bows. Telephone ear-pieces enable the submarine commander to listen to the sounds gathered by the microphones. If the submarine is not pointed head on toward the ship to be destroyed the microphone on the offside will hear less than the other, and the difference in the volume of sound received by the two microphone detectors will be noted at once in the telephone receivers. The commander changes his course until he hears equally well with both ear-pieces.

"While it is perfectly feasible to direct a submarine by telephone it is much more effective to convert the microphone vibrations into visual signals. As a result the commander of a submarine has only to watch a finger move over a dial in order to know what course he should steer. In a sense he sees the sound which the microphone detectors hear.

"While a visual steering indicator is primarily depended upon to guide the submarine on its deadly errand, telephones are connected with the microphones, to be used when the occasion arises. With their aid the commander can distinguish one under-water sound from another and interpret it correctly. A tramp steamer can be microphonically distinguished from a Mauretania, a torpedo boat from a super-dreadnought, and above all a sub-surface craft from a surface craft. Thus the character of an unseen ship miles away can be ascertained.

"But apart from listening to passing ships, the telephones will be required to receive messages from an admiral on a battleship five miles away. Both warships and merchantmen are equipped, with submarine signalling devices—devices which send forth either bell sounds or rhythmic vibrations. It is easy to see how useful they can be made to telegraph orders to a submarine under water five miles or more away."

Difference in Complexions.

The difference in the complexions of people is due to the varying amounts of pigment; very dark people, those with dark eyes and dark hair, have a great deal of this coloring material in their cells. A great many people are neither light nor very dark. They have less than the dark-complexioned people and more than the light-complexioned people. When the hair turns gray it is because the pigment has disappeared. As this is due to the loss of this coloring material, dark complexioned people turn grey sooner than light-complexioned people. The structure of the skin showing how these cells are made in layers can be seen by examining the skin with a microscope.

FOLK TALES.

Ethical Wisdom Always Taught by Them.

At the bottom of the folk tale there was nearly always a basis of folk wisdom—the perception that right-thinking and doing could bring people through all worldly, and even personal, limitations and obstacles. The stories were told by the common folks, who had to contend with every kind of material disadvantage, says the Christian Science Monitor. But they managed to grasp the essentials of existence in that hard schooling, and the greatest, simplest and most universal of folk tales, the parables, were told to them.

In the folk tales of the world, according to the standing of the nation's ethical barometer, we find certain lessons taught perpetually. Kindness is always repaid in some unexpected form or other, even when the kindly act has passed from the doer's memory; and the humblest person or creature may prove the most powerful friend in time of need. The old woman by the roadside with her burden, the old man with his stick, the traveler, the ill-treated dog or cat, even the insect in difficulties, the tired horse—all are agencies of untold good to those who befriend them, while those who pass with closed hand and heart find fortune strangely, adamantly adverse.

Again, the others with money, the eldest sons and heirs, who strut in confident pride, depending on, or puffed up by their material possessions, are the losers in the supreme quest, where the younger sons, often plain, sometimes dull or slow, but always kind hearted and always poor, are assured of triumph; and, in the story's course, slow wits develop and simple common sense and trust are shown to be of greater value in predicaments than the learning of schools. Indeed, a most delicate distinction is made between intellect and intelligence. Book learning, coupled with pride and scorn, is shown to be worthless, while good cheer, a sense of humor and a kind heart invariably solve the knottiest problem presented.

Bad news should be broken gently, not to mention cold storage eggs.

CHILDHOOD CHIMES.

Oh, happy were the days we spent
Aroon our mither's knee;
No one beneath the firmament,
Was half sae kind as she;
She tellt us, and took great pains
To please our roving e'e;
When we were puir wee toddling weans
Aroon oor mither's knee.

Refrain:
A mither's friendship is sincere,
A mither's love's divine;
Our mither dear, we'll aye revere
For Auld Lang Syne.

When we were puir wee toddling weans,
Frae sin and sorrow free,
Misfortune's mystic icy chains,
On life's weird sombre sea,
Did never press us hard and sair
And knock us a' ajee,
Every day was bright and fair,
Aroon oor mither's knee.

Thae bonnie days are past and gane,
And braw and big are we;
A crookit road we may hae ta'en,
And wild, and wayward be;
But oh, we ken tho' folly reigns,
Our hearts were pure and free,
When we were puir wee toddling weans
Aroon oor mither's knee.

Orang Utan.

The large anthropoids of Borneo and Sumatra are usually called orang outangs. This form, it seems, is not correct. Orang signifies man and outang, or utang, debt, something owing, so that orang outang would simply mean a man in debt. The correct Malay name is orang utan, or outan. This signifies the forest man in distinction to orang dusum, or village (civilized) man.

China's Altar of Heaven.

There is no altar in earth which vies in marble majesty with the Altar of Heaven — Tien Tain in the south of the Chinese city of Peking, which Emperor Yung Le of the Ming dynasty, reared in A. D. 1420, with its triple balustrades, stairs and platforms of pure white marble carved miraculously its great circle covering a wide area in the midst of a vast inclosure. Standing alone, deserted under the blue Chinese sky, it is a dream of majesty and beauty. As the great setting of a scene of ritual pomp that calls for thousands and thousands of robed celebrants with music, incense, sacrifice, it is transcendently imposing and impressing. There the emperor knelt once a year and worshipped "the only being in the universe he could look up to"—Shang Ti—the emperor of the world above, whose court was in the sky and the spear tips of whose soldiers were the stars.

The Rabbi of Lyons.

He bowed and held it to the lips of the stricken son of France,—
And the shells burst fast and the thick smoke hung over the soil of old Romance,—
A Rabbi holding a crucifix, bending to earth:— Nay, friend,
Did you ever see a hunted Jew to his
"Christian" tyrant bend
As the Rabbi of Lyons bowed there—bowed low with the crucifix
Of Christ rejected by Christians . . .
Can oil with water mix?
Then mix Christ's love with the "Christian's" . . . but the Rabbi of Lyons Recked not the nameless crimes of hate that unto his race were done
In the name of the Christ whose symbol of Love he held as he was bid—
And as the Christian asked the Jew, so the Jew for the Christian did . . .

Perchance the dying soldier then, through the closing dark divined
In clearer splendor the mystery of the love and grace entwined
By the fingers of a Jew around the crucifix of Christ,
And perchance his lips on those fingers too pressed a kiss that well sufficed! . . .

* * * *

He bent, he bowed, with the crucifix; he held it firmly and well
For a dying Catholic to kiss . . .
Then crashed a sudden shell
And the Grand Rabbi of Lyons by the side of the Christian fell.

Bird Bathers.

An ornithologist, swimming in the blue sea, said: "Birds enjoy baths as much as we do. Take, for instance, wild ducks. Wild ducks adore a fresh water bath. Though they feed over salt water, they will bathe only in fresh. They'll fly thirty or forty miles inland for their weekly fresh water dip.

"Sparrows go in for a wet bath and a dry one—a wet bath of clean water and a dry one of clean dust.

"The partridge takes a loam bath. He loosens up a square foot of the chocolate colored loam and bathes his plumes in it for half an hour at a stretch.

"All birds love a bath of ashes. Wherever, in the prairies, you see an ash heap, the sign of a forest fire, a flock of birds will rise up from it if you go too near—birds that have been polishing their feathers in the silvery ashes as a servant polishes knives."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

FOR LARGER FARM CROPS IN ONTARIO

Timely Information by Expert at Legislature Agricultural Committee.

GROW MORE BEANS

Seed Grown in Locality Where It Will Be Used is Advocated.

At the inaugural meeting of the Agricultural Committee of the Legislature held recently in Toronto a propaganda was instituted towards meeting the problems imposed by the war on the agricultural industry. At the request of Sir William Hearst, Minister of Agriculture, Prof. C. A. Zavitz, of the Ontario Agricultural College, spoke at some length on the ways and means of increasing crop production and the right kinds of materials to use. Sir William himself made a few remarks emphasizing the need not only of growing foodstuffs, but of growing those kinds of foodstuffs which will be most needed both here and in the mother country.

There was a desire on all sides, said Prof. Zavitz, to do all possible to meet the very trying conditions that existed at the present time, but he hoped the suggestions he had to offer would be of real service in connection with the increase, if possible, and especially the quality of the crops of Ontario for the coming year.

BETTER CROPS WITH LESS LABOR

Owing to the scarcity of labor all possible means should be adopted to economize labor. While many of these suggestions were obvious, their importance could not be too strongly emphasized if actual results were to be achieved on the year's operations. He, therefore, said as a first consideration the farmer should get ready for the year's crop before the snow disappears from the ground. The seed should be selected, cleaned and got ready for spring sowing. In the great majority of cases it had been found that the seed which produced the best results was that grown in the locality where it would be used. In college they had learned from a long series of experiments that "plump" seed gave much better results than small seed, but more seed would have to be used in sowing, as the plants from this class of seed were larger and more vigorous than from small seed.

PLANT AT THE RIGHT TIME.

The next point made was the importance of planting the seed at the right time. Much had also been learned in this respect by experiments at the college. Briefly these results indicated that in the case of spring wheat it was important to get it in the ground just as quickly as the land could be worked. This should be immediately followed by oats. The barley should be put in next, then peas and beans. Getting the seed into the ground at the right time means an addition of bushels per acre.

BEANS SHOULD BE GROWN.

Turning his attention to the crops that might be sown to advantage, Prof. Zavitz urged an increased sowing of beans. Beans were grown extensively in Michigan and New York States, and it was reasonable to assume that Ontario, lying between them, could grow beans profitably. The bean was a highly concentrated food product, and the seed available in Ontario was comparatively free from disease. The variety that he thought could be used to best advantage was the common white pea bean. They are already grown to some extent in every county in the province, and could be greatly extended with profit. Prevailing prices are high and will continue to be as long as the war lasts. He very strongly urged the growing of more beans.

The pea crop might also be increased, but he did not urge this strongly. Like the bean, the pea was a concentrated food.

ROOM FOR MORE OATS.

Another crop that could be increased to great advantage, said Prof. Zavitz, was oats. The oat crop was exceedingly important. It was needed to feed our live stock, and live stock was greatly needed. The oat crop of Ontario was worth in value about one-quarter of all farm crops. Reiterating his former advice about sowing good seed, he declared the farmer should insist on getting seed oats of a known variety. There was a limited supply of O. A. C. No. 72 oats, and he understood the Dominion Government was arranging to get "Banner" seed oats from the west; in fact, about 400,000 bushels had been collected for seed purposes in the terminal elevators. If the farmer could not secure these he suggested that No. 1 commercial seed oats be purchased, but on no account the ordinary commercial feeding oats. This point he strongly emphasized as being essential to success—first home-grown seed and next western seed of known variety.

Prof. Zavitz warned the farmers against purchasing at a high price oats that were exploited by United State seed houses when the same quality of seed could be purchased in Ontario at from one-third to one-quarter the price.

THE POTATO SITUATION.

At the request of the committee, Professor Zavitz referred briefly to the potato question. The existing high price of potatoes, he thought would result in a great many people in cities and towns using vacant land for potato growing this year. This crop could also be very well extended, because of its great food value. As to methods to be employed in sowing, he said, that best returns would be secured from sowing small. Immature potatoes from good, healthy plants, as distinguished from small potatoes of a poor variety. Large potatoes, when used, should be cut into pieces of about two ounces in weight. Experiments along this line had been conducted over a series of years, and the two-ounce seed, under exactly similar conditions to one-ounce pieces and less, had given a yield of 177 bushels per acre. This was also demonstrated at the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa where they got better results from potatoes from Indian Head than from places further south. Not because the potatoes came from Indian Head, but rather that the potatoes did not come to the same degree of maturity. Give first preference to your home-grown seed by all means.

The weather conditions last year, said Professor Zavitz, were abnormal. Fortunately most of the seed in Ontario was free from disease. The labor shortage continued to be acute, and it could not well be overcome while the war lasted. But he was assured that if the suggestions that he had thrown out to the committee were adopted seriously by the farmers of Ontario, the seed prepared before the snow disappears, sowing done at the proper time, and "plump" seed selected, free from disease of blight, the results to the farmers from this season's crop, given reasonable weather conditions, would be astonishing to the farmers themselves and a great help to the country.

RUSSIANS IN MESOPOTAMIA

Force Driving Turks From Persia Cross the Border.

Foe Still in Retreat From Kermanshah.

Petrograd Cable, via London—— Russian troops, driving southwestward from Sakkiz, Persia, have crossed the Mesopotamian frontier into Turkish territory, the War Office announced to-day.

The Turks are still in retreat in the district southwest of Kermanshah.

The season of bad weather has begun on the Perso-Mesopotamia fighting front, the statement announces. It reads:

"Caucasus front: In the direction of Sakkiz our advanced detachments pursuing the Turks have crossed the frontier into Turkish territory. In the direction of Kermanshah the pursuit of the Turks continues. The bad weather season has begun.

"Western and Roumanian fronts: There has been great reconnoitering activity by enemy detachments, and also reciprocal firing."

"DOPE" FIEND KILLS THREE

Vancouver Police Chief and a Boy Are Dead

Also the Slayer — Two Others Wounded.

Vancouver, B. C. Report.—Three killed and two others wounded is the total to date of an attempt by the police to effect the arrest yesterday of a negro named Tait in a house at the corner of Jackson avenue and Harris street. George Rolph, a nine-year-old boy, is [illegible] one of the killed.

Tait is well known to the police as a "dope" fiend. The police were called to the house by the landlord, whom Tait had assaulted. When Tait saw the police approaching the house he opened fire with a shotgun, the first shot hitting young Rolph, who lived half an hour. Chief of Police McLean joined the attacking force and in a rush on the house was brought down, and when the body was recovered it was found his head had been half shot off. Detective Cameron received two wounds in the head, and Constable Johnson was wounded in the face.

At 11 o'clock last night the police rushed the house and gained entrance, only to find that Tait was dead, but a woman, Frankie Russell, was uninjured. She was arrested.

It is not known whether Tait killed himself or was killed by a shot from the police. It was found that Tait had been armed with a shotgun and an automatic revolver.

CONGRESS EXTRA SESSION CALLED ON STATE OF WAR

President Summons Houses For April 2, Probably to Declare the Condition Exists.

Members Overwhelmingly In Favor---Governor Advocates Aid to Allies.

Washington report says—President Wilson to-day called Congress in extra session on April 2nd.

The purpose of the extra session is to take action on the state of war which admittedly exists between the United States and Germany.

Congress probably will be asked to declare that a state of war has existed since some recent date, when German submarines began conducting their most warlike operations against American commerce.

In his proclamation calling Congress together, the President states that it is for the purpose of receiving a communication from him concerning "grave questions of international policy".

The proclamation does not state specifically that the President considers a state of war exists, but leaves the question for discussion in his address, and for action by Congress.

The President's proclamation follows:

"Whereas, public interests require that the Congress of the United States should be convened in extra session, at 12 o'clock noon, on the second day of April, 1917, to receive a communication by the executive on grave questions of national policy;

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the Congress of the United States to convene in extra session at the capitol in the city of Washington, on the second day of April, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon, of which all persons who shall at that time be entitled to act as members thereof are hereby required to take notice.

"Given under my hand and the seal of the United States of America, the 21st day of March, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, and of the independence of the United States the141st.

In his address at the opening of the extra session the President will recite the overt acts committed against the United States by Germany. The foremost overt act which brought the President to his decision was the torpedoing without warning of the American merchantman Vigilancia, with the loss of fifteen lives, some of them Americans.

The sentiment in Congress is understood to be overwhelmingly in favor of a declaration that as a result of Germany's acts against the United States a state of war already exists.

Officials and diplomats have openly acknowledged that a state of war between the United States and Germany has existed for some time, but that the situation became most pronounced last Sunday, when the three American ships were destroyed by submarines in quick succession, and some American lives were lost. Practically all the President's closest advisers at once made up their minds that Germany was actually conducting war against the United States, and that the situation must be met promptly.

WOULD AID THE ALLIES.

New York Report——W. P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, in an address here last night, declared it was his personal belief that Congress should immediately enact legislation enabling the Government to lend its credit to the Entente Allies, who are fighting for a cause in which all Americans are interested. He said the United States Government should not hesitate to extend a credit of one billion dollars, taking as security therefor the simple obligation of Great Britain and France.

"We should remember," he said, "that we have a common cause. My personal opinion is that it is clearly the duty of every man of influence to exert every honorable means in his power for the purpose of inducing Congress to do what it can do most quickly and effectively in the present crisis."

WALL STREET APPROVES

New York report says—President Wilsons call for an extra session of Congress a fortnight in advance of the date originally enacted was received in Wall street shortly before the opening of the stock market and met with general approval. First prices were firm to strong, war shares rising 1 to 3 points. United States Steel was the conspicuous feature, however, its first offering comprising 25,000 shares at 117 1-4, an extreme gain of three quarters of a point.

Shippings also displayed marked strength, but rails were little changed, except for a three-point rise in Seaboard Air Line preferred.

RUSHING PREPARATIONS.

Washington Report——The Cabinet, which urged the move upon the President at yesterday's session, is described by its members as having been more thoroughly united than it has been on any other question that has come before it.

All the resources of the United States, industrial as well as military, are steadily being mobilized to place the nation in the fullest state of readiness for any eventuality.

For the present the responsibility rests with the navy, which is arming American merchant ships, placing rush orders for submarine chasers, spending $115,000,000 by special authority of Congress to hurry the naval construction already under way, advancing the graduation of classes at Annapolis, protecting American harbors against invasion by German submarines, and marshalling the industrial resources necessary to stand behind the fleet.

Plans for the army are not so fully matured. It is believed, however, that President Wilson will realize the possibility of the army's participation in war when he addresses Congress, by discussing the need of universal military training. In a tentative way plans for marshalling the full strength of the regular army, the National Guard and the raising of a volunteer army of 500,000 men have been worked out in the Army War College. The volunteer army of 500,000 is planned as a nucleus of what eventually would be an army of 3,000,000, and would be assembled in training camp.

The mobilization of industrial resources has gone much further. Hundreds of great corporations, through the efforts of the Council of National defence, have prepared themselves to utilize their full efficiency in the defence of the nation.

President Wilson chose April 2 for the opening of the extra session because he thought it would be impossible for all members of Congress to reach Washington earlier.

CHEAP COPPER FOR FORCES.

Washington Report——The principal American copper producers have agreed to furnish the Government copper needed for the army and navy during the coming year at sixteen and a fraction cents a pound, about one-half of the current market price. Forty-five million pounds is the amount to be delivered. This solves one of the important problems in connection with large orders for munitions, soon to be placed, and is the first big concession in response to the appeals to the patriotism of the country's industries since the navy's agreements with the shipbuilders and steel makers for profit cutting. The action of the copper producers was announced by the Council of National Defence.

AN AIR MIRAGE.

Experience of a British Aviator at the Front.

London Cable.—An account of a mirage in the clouds is given in a letter from a British flying Corps officer on the Western front. He says:

"I had often wondered what it would feel like to see a machine coming straight for me and to know that a collision was inevitable. I had the experience this afternoon, only the collision did not take place.

"I was on patrol with five other machines over the lines, and had just gone into a cloud bank. Just before going I saw the 'plane on my right turning to cross in front of me. Suddenly I saw a machine of the same type as mine appear out of the cloud about fifty feet away, making straight for me.

"Instinctively I jammed my nose hard down and went as near a nose dive as possible. The other plane did the same. I turned. The other turned into me.

"I was in a cold perspiration all over by this time, so I thought 'Here goes; if I am going to crash, it might as well be complete.' So straight for it I went. We got closer and closer, and-bift' my machine and—its mirage in the clouds met.

"It seemed like a hideous nightmare and I can still see the machine doing its utmost to crash into me. I think I can say I have had the full horrors of a collision in the air without its actually taking place. I finally got out of the clouds, and had not the faintest idea where I was, until a shell reminded me that I was a little too close over the German lines."

The surgeon may boast that he never loses a case, until he operates on the Stock Exchange.

CHURCHILL ON HIS DEFENCE

Former First Lord of Admiralty Makes Reply.

To Criticism of the Gallipoli Campaign.

London Cable.——Winston Spencer Churchill, former First Lord of the Admiralty, in the debate on the report of the Dardanelles Commission in the House, severely criticised the manner in which the Dardanelles Commission's report had been prepared.

"They built up the narrative by clippings and snippings from documents and by single sentences from the evidence of witnesses," said Mr. Churchill. He added that this method was in direct conflict with accepted principles and detrimental to public and personal interests.

Mr. Churchill admitted, however, that the commissioners had swept away, directly or by implication, many serious and reckless charges, and that the burden of responsibility which he had borne alone for the last two years was now shared with the most eminent men the country had produced in generations. He therefore welcomed the report as an instalment of fair play.

The decision with regard to the Dardanelles, said Mr. Churchill, was not based on the opinions of experts, but on the plans of experts and the readiness of experts to execute those plans. Nobody had a right to say naval opinion was not marshalled behind the Admiralty's action.

The speaker deprecated what he characterized as attempts to ascertain whether the experts were enthusiastic toward the enterprise long after it had failed, and at the time the search was being made for a culprit. Such methods were pernicious to the last degree to efficiency and the resolute conduct of the war.

Warmly denying that he urged Lord Fisher, then First Sea Lord, to give his silent and reluctant consent to the enterprise, Mr. Churchill said:

"Lord Fisher did not declare definitely that he consented to undertake the operation. After balancing all the possibilities he exerted himself to the utmost and even offered to go out himself and take charge of it. It was not until the new situation had arisen and the Admiral on the spot was unwilling to go forward that Lord Fisher said he would not press him."

Then, Mr. Churchill added, the differences between Lord Fisher and himself began for the first time.

Nearly twenty others, mostly women and children, were killed by shell fire. The bureau has received the following from Saloniki:

[illegible] Report.—A wide gulf [illegible] submarines was reported to-night by Captain H. L. The [illegible], Captain Smith said, were detected lurking beneath the surface of the sea by aeroplane observers of the [illegible] patrol. The aeroplanes signalled for trawlers and circled about, directing the placing of nets. In a little while the nets were drawn completely about the unsuspecting submarines, which were [illegible] and brought to the surface. AFTER HOLLWEG.

German Party Working to Have Chancellor Removed.

Amsterdam, March 21.—A Munich despatch to the Berlin Tageblatt says the "national committee for the swift overthrow of England" held a secret meeting on Monday and discussed measures for forcing Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg out of office. The despatch adds that a great popular demonstration is to be held next Monday.

The "national committee for the swift overthrow of England," is a new organization as far as any previous despatches from Germany are concerned. Reports from various sources for some considerable time have told of apparently widespread hostility throughout Bavaria to the German administration.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

St. Marys council had quite a hot session last week when several questions came up such as oiling streets, curb and gutter repairing, etc. The Mayor threatened to have the weigh scales locked up unless the council committee had them repaired at once. It appears there had been much complaint over the scales on account of incorrect weighing. This is one of the things a small town should watch closely. Much harm is done to the trade of any place if the slightest inaccuracy occurs at the public weigh scales.

A subscriber writes The Times regarding the late arrival of trains pointing out that the Grand Trunk might assist its patrons by arranging its schedule so as to correspond somewhat to the actual running of the trains, and thus do away with a lot of weary waiting at the depots. The season has been a bad one for operating trains on time, and the people generally are willing to make allowance for the extra burden on the railways. The suggestion of our correspondent is, however, a fairly good one, but perhaps with the clearing away of the snow better time will be made.

According to The Kincardine Reporter, the council there is receiving some criticism in some quarters because they prohibited dancing in the pavilion. The Reporter, in dealing with the matter, says: "The coming summer may see hard fighting and many casualties. Our own boys are 'over there' and we know not the hour some homes will be saddened by sorrowful news. It behooves us as a people to forego our pleasures and show that splendid feeling for the families of those who have fathers and brothers at the front. Dancing for a brief period is not a matter of life and death with any, and we feel that a dance would be turned from joy to sorrow if word came that any of our brave lads had fallen."

The farmer needs the country town. True, but the country town has a greater need for the farmer. There is a big field of opportunity for a town such as Port Elgin if it had a good live board of trade to see that this place was made a good place for farmers to trade; that this was a good point from which to ship farm produce; to see that proper accommodation was provided at the shipping place; to see that the town provided good service in every little detail which the farmer needs to use when he comes to town. These are the little things which bring trade to a place and which make a town grow. Making the most of one's neighborhood means co-operation between town and farm, based upon a recognition of their common interests and dependence upon each other.

The Presbyterian church in Canada raised over a million dollars to carry on its work last year. When the great patriotic givings of the Canadian people are taken into consideration, this shows a wonderful progress. Still more impressive in connection with this denomination is the fact that it had the previous year an indebtedness in its Home Mission department amounting to over $150,000 and last year that debt was reduced to $20,000. Many church leaders wondered what would happen to the church funds when the big demands for patriotic purposes were increasing. But it has been shown in the above progress that men have been drawn nearer their church through giving to other causes. And it usually works out that way. A good giver to other things never neglects his church.

One of things which is helping to keep the young people interested in life in the country in this section the past couple of years, is the preparation of plays given at various entertainments. During this winter the young people of Saugeen made nearly three hundred dollars for Red Cross by this means, while the young people of Bruce, with a well-acted comedy are approaching the five hundred dollar mark for Red Cross funds. The present year may see a revival of the debating and literary societies in town and country. In the Burgoyne district the young people have a fine organization for literary development, and the desire is growing for something better than the usual impromptu program which was quickly gotten up, and usually contained very little for intellectual advancement.

There is considerable activity among the political organizations in Bruce, several of the Conservative township organizations have called meetings, and it is understood that the Liberals of Bruce are to hold a convention early in May. As this is a general convention, we presume the ladies will make their appearance. At least it would be most opportune for those who have desires to become candidates to see that the women are invited. Wiarton had the only branch of the Federal Women's Liberal association, in this section, and it is quite likely these ladies will be prepared, with their experience, to take part in any convention which might be held.

Dominion-Wide Prohibition

A movement has been begun under the Dominion Alliance to inaugurate Dominion wide prohibition.

Under this same leadership Provincial prohibition was pressed home on the legislators, and it is hoped to enlist the co-operation of the Dominion parliament for a Dominion-wide prohibitive law.

This should appeal to every citizen, and should add to the list of workers to this desirable end. There are many who would not be reconciled to any half measure and wanted total prohibition or none. This movement should enlist all of these people, and as well those who, since last September, have become convinced that even provincial prohibition was a good thing.

Men and women in every community are being asked to make another effort, as they did last year, and here is one opportunity in which they can render mighty service, by signing the petitions and co-operating in freeing our beloved country from a national curse.

Likes Port Elgin Grits

Alex. Vandrick writes from Saskatoon as follows: "I wish you would send me the Auditors' Report. It would be good to have published in The Times. Port Elgin's debt is very small, considering the fine waterworks system and many other fine conveniences. I was much pleased to know that my old friend D. J. Izzard was elected warden. If he should run for parliament I should like to give him a vote, although he is a hard shelled Grit, but Port Elgin has a lot of good Grits, at least I found them so. Saskatoon is a good business place, and is going ahead. I may change from here to Brandon."

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export. It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

"A vegetable garden for every home"

Nothing should be overlooked in this vital year of the war. The Department earnestly invites everyone to help increase production by growing vegetables. Even the smallest plot of ground, when properly cultivated, produces a surprising amount of vegetables. Experience is not essential.

On request the Department of Agriculture will send valuable literature, free of charge, giving complete directions for preparing soil, planting, cultivation, etc. A plan of a vegetable garden, indicating suitable crop to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free to any address.

YOU can't tell by looking at a cow how much butter-fat she will produce, and you can't tell by looking at a separator how much of that butter-fat it will save or lose; but you have our word that the separator we sell will skim milk cleaner than any other, and the machine stands ready to prove our claim.

A fair offer should be given a fair trial, and a firm with nearly forty years' experience in building the highest grade cream separator ought to be given forty minutes' consideration when they offer to prove that the De Laval is the superior of every other cream separator made to-day.

You buy the best land and the best seed, the best cows and the best feed—you are not satisfied with the cheapest. Should not the same principal apply to your farm machinery? Poor soil and poor machinery produce a bumper crop of failures every year.

Three good cows and a DeLaval separator will show more profits than five cows and a cheaper separator. There are only two kinds of cows—producers and consumers. They represent the profits and the costs of your business. Good cows produce more than they consume. Poor cows, like cheap separators, are worth less than they cost. The DeLaval Cream Separator saves all the profits. Why not try a DeLaval We arrange payments to suit purchaser.

JAS. GEORGE & SON

SAUGEEN ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY : : INTRODUCE METER SYSTEM : :

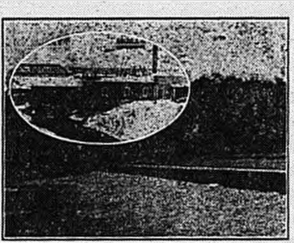
Some time ago the Saugeen Electric Light Co. announced, through The Times, that the meter system would be installed in Port Elgin, and the old flat rate would go forever.

This means that all current used for lighting, for ironing or power, or in fact in any capacity, will be measured by meter and sold to the user at a reasonable rate.

The company say they are now, and will continue, to give their power at Hydro rates. The Hydro commission announce that they are giving the people service at cost. The Saugeen Electric light Co. say they will meet that price, and are giving now to meter users current at the Hydro rate being charged in Chesley, Listowel and Palmerston. Consider this, because it means that these places are larger centres than we have up this way, and naturally their rate would be lower. By Hydro the more power used the less the cost.

But the change to meters will be a big one for Port Elgin. Since the installation of electric lights our people have always used all the light they needed, in fact the light was often burning when there was no need. In these days of cost systems, when every business man, to stay in business, must count his costs and eliminate all waste, so in the electric light business the day of wasting power is past and must be paid for on the basis used.

Of course no man can honestly argue against this system. After the meters are installed, and every householder has his place properly wired so that every room will have lighting, the company claim he will be convinced that, for service given by the Light Co. he is not paying as much as under the old system. There is this about the change, people will not leave their lights going in rooms they are not using.



THE DAM AND POWER HOUSE OF SAUGEEN ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY, ON SAUGEEN RIVER

However, this article is written with the object of showing our readers how the meter system is based.

In the first place there will be no charge for the meters, and in the second the power will be a 24 hour service.

To try to get the new rate so that our readers might understand it, The Times consulted Mr. Stafford, the manager of the Light and Power Co. and these figures are taken from an actual case in Port Elgin now on meter.

The house is 21x25 two story first part; 21x15 two story second part; 31x15 third part; giving a total area of the house of 1900 ft. the outside dimensions of the house are taken and reduced by 10 % and the nearest figure to the [illegible]dred taken. The correct consumption in this case was 15 K. W. and is figured as follows; 1900 ft. area at 3c— 57c
15 K. W. at 5c— 75c

Total $1 32
Less prompt payment disc't 13

Net total $1 19

15 K. W. at the old rate would be $1.35 not showing a saving of 16 cents for the month's bill.

According to the above, the company makes out that the new method will be a saving to the users, and also a saving to the Company, for all light used will be measured and paid for and there will be no more waste on either party.

The natural question arising out of this demonstration of a lower price by the Company is: Why does the Light Co. offer lower rates?

Well, they have their money invested in the plant, lines, etc., and they know that only by competing with Hydro on the same basis can they hope to remain in business. Even under this favorable quotation by the company, Hydro development will reach this section gradually.

Some of the little things the new system will make possible were given The Times by Manager Stafford. He says at the above rates one may use an electric toaster one hour for 2½ cents; an electric iron for 2½ cents per hour; a vacuum cleaner will work for a whole 10 hour day at a cost of but 5 cents; a 10 watt lamp will burn 100 hours for 5 cents; a 40 watt lamp for 25 hours for 5 cents.

If you want to test your meter, a good way is to burn a 40-watt lamp for 25 hours and the pointer on the right hand dial of the meter will move just one division, if it's right.

The meters go into effect 1st of May.

The Children's Aid Society has decided not to buy a property for a shelter this year. Warden Izzard and the County Council Committee has recommended that the Society rent a building for the coming year on the ground that none of the available properties are suitable.

Young People of Bruce Put on Good Play

The young people of Ribey's school section journeyed through the toughest kind of roads on Friday night, to play the "Village Doctor" for the benefit of the Port Elgin Red Cross.

Under the direction of the very capable teacher of S. S. No. 13, Miss Florence P. Young, a fine lot of young people have been brought together who are above the average of amateur actors and actresses.

"The Village Doctor" is a very pretty little comedy, which provides enjoyable sentiment, and some fun. The young doctor opens up a practice in a rented department. His landlady has a very lovable daughter, a nurse, and the contest begins between the physician, and the young lawyer of the town. The various patients who visit the doctor, have all the ailments imaginable. The acting by the patients was well done. Some of them were most amusing.

Mr. Solomon Wiseacre, the old man with a sore back Mr. Lovejoy, who is in great distress with a compound fracture of the heart because of his infatuation for two young ladies in the village. Mrs. Groan who had all the pains and aches imaginable until the Dr. prescribed low diet for her and she left the office wonderfully improved. Miss Knowing and Miss Clinger two society ladies called on the Dr. and invited him to join their literary club and further impressed the doctor with the strong mind of Jane. Miss Clinger herself being much interested in the Drs. affairs. Widow Ware and children were in a sad plight and the kind heartedness and skill of the Dr. were fully brought in in the way he attended to their sad plight.

Mrs. Grabbe was in very poor health. The doctor advised her to go on a trip, but Mr. Grabbe was quite opposed to this. Mrs. Crane was quite interested in the doctor's affairs. Mrs. Frost was trying to sympathize with her. Tom Brave was congratulated when arriving from the war. Everyone was amused to see Mr. Archie McLean act his part as Dr. Old in the runaway accident. He let the nurse care for the Dr. to restore him to health again. The Dr. won the fair Jane after all his trials and troubles. They held a reception and all were invited, everyone telling Jane what a lucky girl she was. Mr. Brook attempted to make a speech but he was unsuccessful.

Of course the heavy part of the acting fell to Miss Young, Mrs. McGillivray and Roy Salmon. They were perfectly at home in their parts, and put into the proceedings plenty of spirit. Miss Young is a very clever young lady, and much of the success of the play is due to her energy. Mrs. Nell McGillivray as Mrs. Crane, assumed a difficult task with perfect ease, while Mr. Salmon made a capital doctor, and a first class lover.

Between acts entertaining readings were given by Miss Young and Miss Robertson; a solo by Miss Blythe, quartets by Miss Blythe, Miss Nicholson W. Nicholson and W. Howe, and some fine Scottish reels by Mrs. John H. McGillivray.

During the reception Jim McKenzie in his funny make up of the feeble old man, provided a deal of amusement.

Those taking part were:
Dr. Young—Mr. Roy Salmon.
Mrs. Crane—Mrs. Nell McGillivray.
Jane Crane—Florence P. Young.
Miss Knowing—Mrs. Wm. McCulloch.
Belinda Clinger—Pearl Nicholson.
Lawyer Brief—Mr. Wm. Nicholson.
Simon Grabbe—Isadore Siefert.
Mrs. Simon Grabbe—Miss Blythe.
Solomon Wiseacre—James McKenzie.
Mrs. Ware—Ruby Jones.
Mrs. Frost—Sadie Cameron.
Tommie Ware—F. McKenzie.
Johnnie Ware—Budd Philps.
Mrs. Groan—Miss Mamie Matheson.
Mr. Samuel Lovejoy—Elmer Ribey.
Dr. Old—Mr. Archie McLean.
John Brook—Joshua Howe.
Tom Brave—Orville Ribey.
Mr. Softly—W. Howe Jr.
Miss Beautiful—Miss B. Robertson.
Hester Nelson, Jeanette Dobson, Myrtle Airth, Jennie McDonald, Chrissie McLean.

At the close, Inspector Bald, in moving the thanks of the gathering, to the players, paid a tribute to the good work for Red Cross. J. J. George seconded it. Mr. Arch McLean replied briefly.

At the close the players were entertained to lunch at the Red Cross tea rooms.

Considering the night the attendance in the hall was good. Mr. E. R. Sayles was chairman.

The draw was made for a centre piece donated by Mrs. Pattison. Mr. Arch McLean made the draw, the lucky winner being Miss Chambers, Port Elgin.

Tells how to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn or callus the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off with the fingers.

Freezone dries the moment it is applied, and simply shrivels the corn or callus without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but will positively rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or hardened callus. April 1, 1917.

Jesus Gives Sight to the Blind.—John 9: 1-38.

Comentary.—I. A blind man healed (vs. 1-7). 1. as Jesus passed by—It was the Sabbath and it is natural to suppose that Jesus was going to or from the temple. This was shortly after his discourse to the Jews upon the subject of soul freedom. he saw a man.... blind from his birth—Jesus did not turn his eyes away from those in destress. He "saw" the afflicted man at the pool of Bethesda and healed him. He "saw" the blind man and gave him his sight. He sees us in our blindness and desires to make us see. There are six of Christ's miracles of healing the blind recorded, but this is the only instance of his giving sight to one who was born blind. There are many in the east whose eyes are diseased, many who are blind. There are several causes that, working together, contribute to this condition. The brightness of the sun, the dust carried by the wind and lack of knowledge of how to care for the eyes of some of these. The unsanitary way of living tends to cause these affections of the eyes and to spread them from one to another. The cases of those born blind are not numerous.

2. who did sin....that he was born blind—The theory that special afflictions are the consequences of particular acts of transgression is an ancient one. Job's friends who came to comfort him in his affliction could not see why he should be afflicted as he was, unless he had grievously sinned. God's words about him forever exploded that theory. Suffering is in the world because of sin, but particular cases of affliction are not generally traceable to particular sins. The disciples' question shows that they connected the man's blindness with some one's previous sin. Their question shows that they were in confusion, for the man was born blind, and he could not have sinned previous to his birth. It is scarcely supposable that the disciples had in mind the theory of the transmigration of the soul. 3. neither hath this man sinned nor his parents—Jesus does not recognize a connection between suffering and sin in individuals. In this reply he declares that the state of blindness in the man was not the result of his sin or that of his parents. He is not to be understood as saying that they had never sinned. works of God....made manifest in him—Not that this man was born blind for the sole purpose that a miracle might be wrought, but that his blindness furnished the occasion for Jesus to perform the divine work of healing, and thus to show himself to be God.—Binney. The works of God include his miracles and all those acts in which he manifested himself.

4. The works of him that sent me—Jesus does not let us forget the fact that he was sent by the Father into the world, and that, too, for a definite purpose. He was constantly employed in the work the Father gave him to do. While it is day—Night and day here mean, as so often in literature of all kinds, life and death.—Plummer. It is not improbable that these words were spoken toward evening and if so, they would be especially forceful. Jesus' earthly ministry was to be of short duration and much must be crowded into those few years. The night cometh—Christ realized how soon opportunities would pass and wisely improved every one. What an example of diligence has he left to the world! It is a lamentable fact that multitudes of his professed followers come far short of working "while it is day," and "the night cometh" and finds their work undone. 5. As long as I am in the world—Jesus intimated that he would not be long with them in the flesh. I am the light of the world—Here there is special reference to his giving light both to the man's eyes and to his soul. The Pharisees prove the truth of the saying that "the darkness comprehended it not."—Cam. Bib. He is the Light of the world to illuminate man's pathway to heaven.

6. When he had thus spoken—The discourse of Jesus was preliminary to the performing of the miracle. His words declared his divinity and his works would shortly declare the same truth. Made clay of the spittle—Saliva was applied to the eyes by afflicted persons as a curative agency very generally. In this instance Jesus used simple means, not as a curative agency, but to encourage the blind man's faith. Jesus put the clay upon the man's eyes, but as yet there was no vision. 7 Go, wash in the pool of Siloam—Jesus placed upon the blind man a test of his faith and obedience. The pool of Siloam was in the valley of Jehoshaphat, just southeast of the walls of Jerusalem. The water was supplied from a spring a little further up the valley northward. The name Siloam means "sent," perhaps because of the water's being sent from the natural spring, just mentioned. "The word 'sent' is so frequently used by Jesus of himself that we naturally apply it here also to himself as if the noiseless stream which their fathers had despised (Isa. 8:6), and which they could trace to its source, was a fit type of him whom the Jews rejected because they knew his origin, and because he had no external force."—Exp. Greek Test. Washed, and came seeing—The man had faith enough to obey the Lord's command and was healed. He went, a blind man, but he "came seeing." Neither he nor others thought he received his sight by natural means. The power of Jesus gave him sight.

II. A clear testimony (vs. 8-12). 8. Neighbors....said—The afflicted man had been blind from birth and he and his condition were well known to many. Moreover, he was a beggar, and hence a familiar object to those who went about the city. Beggars then, as they do now, took their places close to buildings used for worship, expecting to receive gifts from those who attended. The people quickly recognized him as the man who had been blind. 9. Some said—Opinions differed slightly. Some were convinced of his identity and others hesitated to say it was he, for it seemed impossible. I am he—The healed man had no hesitation in saying that he was the man. 10. How were thine eyes opened—The people could not understand how such an extraordinary thing could take place, and they were eager to learn. 11. He answered and said, etc.—He told at once all he knew of his cure in a clear, straightforward manner. He was positive that he had received his sight. He did not know much about Jesus, but he knew that he had been instrumental in opening his blind eyes. 12. He could not tell where Jesus was when the people asked him.

III. The questioning Pharisees (vs. 13-34). This miracle made no small stir among the people. The Pharisees had the cured man before them and questioned him. He gave a clear account of his healing, but they would not accept his statement regarding his blindness until they had questioned his parents. They declared that he was their son and that he was born blind. They referred them to their son for a statement as to his healing. They feared that they would be put out of the synagogue if they acknowledged Christ. The healed man gave a positive testimony and declared that Jesus must be a prophet or He could not open the eyes of one born blind. The Pharisees said Jesus could not be of God because he had healed Him on the Sabbath. The man maintained his testimony and was cast out by the Pharisees.

IV. Believing in Jesus (vs. 35-38). 35. Dost thou believe on the Son of God—Jesus would not leave the man without giving him soul benefit. Sight had come to his eyes and he had testified of Jesus' power. For his testimony he had been cast out by the Pharisees. Jesus would have him realize the full benefit of believing on Him. 36. Who is He—Here is a striking example of a heart open to the truth. He was in earnest to believe on Jesus. 37. It is He that talketh with thee—Jesus declares definitely His Messiahship. 38. Lord, I believe—Not only his cure, but the bearing of Jesus called for him to believe. Worshipped Him—The man believed that Jesus was divine and worshipped Him as God.

Questions.—What feast had Jesus come to Jerusalem to attend? What discourse did He deliver? What was the condition of the man whom Jesus saw? What question did the disciples ask? What reply did Jesus make? What did Jesus do to the afflicted man? What command did Jesus give? What was the result? What was the healed man's testimony? Why did the Pharisees find fault? What faith had the man who was healed?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—The works of God.

I. Disproved human philosophy.

II. Attested Christ's divine mission.

I. Disproved human philosophy. Jesus was passing out of the temple to avoid stoning, but without fear or hurry. He saw the blind man before his disciples saw him, and his look awakened their interest. This man vividly reminded Jesus of His mission to earth. His restoration would evidently and gloriously be the work of God. He saw what the man would become under divine grace. In response to a speculative question Jesus unveiled His deepest motives in bestowing an unsought blessing. He did not find fault with His disciples for their inquiry. He asserted that they had entirely misapprehended the philosophy of the poor beggar's history. Beneath that unpromising exterior Jesus saw the elements of a noble character and set about to bring them forth. In an unusual way the man was wrought into the plan of Christ's ministry. It was his recompense after years of weary blindness to be permitted to be the instrument through whom "the works of God should be made manifest." performance of the cure on the Sabbath day was the pivot upon which the question turned. It caused a fresh outburst of Jewish hatred against Jesus. On the ground of their allegiance to Moses they rejected the clear but evidence of Christ's divine mission. The Pharisees were technical, rather than moral, in their standard of judgment. They were biased, rather than candid, in their examination of evidence. They were divided in their conclusions. They were malignant, rather than generous, in their aims. They endeavored to make the whole thing a ceremonial crime. It was probably with the purpose of showing His contempt for the traditions of men, by which the word of God was made void, that Jesus infringed on the rules of the Talmud and struck a blow at their prejudices.

II Attested Christ's divine mission. The healed man, having nothing to conceal, gave a simple recitation of what had taken place. His conduct stood in sublime contrast to that of his parents or the Jewish rulers. In defiance of the Sanhedrin he declared that Jesus was his healer and that according to their own doctrine, no one without divine authority could perform miracles. He set his practical conviction of the claims of Christ against their speculative doubts concerning him. His general argument from scripture denied the assertion of the Pharisees that Jesus was a sinner. They desired to obliterate a fact by a false interpretation of the Sabbath law. They were aghast at the assumption of a person whom they considered under God's curse undertaking to teach the recognized guides of Israel. They confronted unanswerable logic with the language of insult. They cast him out for exercising the right of private judgment, for respectfully expressing his honest convictions and for defending the truth. A coming Messiah was a fundamental Jewish doctrine. The miracle was one of those which the Jews were especially taught to expect in the Messiah's time. The profound interpretation and lofty significance of the event perfectly harmonized with Jewish belief. Nevertheless, they thrust out the man who accepted and declared the Christ. The final cause of the man's blindness was not reached when the wonder of the healing had been wrought. In the temple where he was using his new eyes a fresh benediction met his believing soul. He beheld Jesus, and in that interview the purposes of Christ's love were fully accomplished. He lifted the man's thoughts above the circumstances of the hour. His fidelity to truth had been manifested amid sore temptations. Against them all he was loyal to his benefactor and true to himself. Such fidelity was too rare and too precious to fail of its reward. Jesus knew his further necessity and met him at the point of conscious need ready to compensate his positive, repeated, consistent testimony. He required only an answer to one question, implicitly to credit the record of God concerning his Son. He had displayed insight in apprehending Christ's character, courage in resisting Christ's adversaries, and now his faith and gratitude were evidenced in acknowledging Christ's claim. Faith followed upon Christ's words. Confession followed faith; worship followed confession.

Plants That Give Heat.

We do not as a rule think of plants as giving heat, yet at certain times some flowers show an astonishing rise of temperature. Most remarkable in this respect are certain kinds of Arum. Just at the opening of the flower in these cases there is a great liberation of heat. This is due to the fact that the respiration, or breathing, is at such times very vigorous. Some very interesting experiments have been carried out in connection with these Arums by means of placing a thermometer just inside the spathe. One of the most remarkable cases was that of a species growing on the Mediterranean coast and known as Arum italicum. The temperature of the air was 60 degrees at the time of the experiment. That inside the spathe was 110 degrees! At that time the blossoms, which when expanded are practically scentless, gave out a fragrance suggestive of wine. It is said that plants of this kind are particularly common in Mexico.—Exchange.

A woman is a paradox. No matter how plain she may be, she is still a riddle.

FARM AND GARDEN

IMPROVING THE DAIRY HERD.

The wise farmer is constantly on the alert to improve his dairy conditions. Much of this improvement can be made (and in the least time and with the least cost) by the use of a pure bred sire. But it is not only important that he should be a pure bred animal, but that he should represent a strain of good milkers. There should be a history back of that sire. It is foolish to go back five or six generations for this history. The important point is, what is the reputation of his immediate ancestors? Are they, or have they been heavy producers? Did his dam, and his granddam on his sire's side, produce milk, or butterfat, or both in large quantities.

If the immediate family history is first class in every way, the question of pedigree is largely settled. It is immediate ancestry that counts.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE BULL.

Professor Trueman, of Storrs Experiment Station, in referring to the sire, says:

The bull chosen should be a good individual as well as have a good pedigree. It is not wise to use a poor animal simply because his ancestors have been good, for he will be one of the ancestors of the succeeding generations.

The bull should be vigorous as shown by a bright eye, a wide awake, active disposition, a full crest, broad chest, fine silky hair and soft hide. He should have a large deep body, with well sprung ribs, indicating feeding capacity. He should not be coarse and beefy. The hind quarters should not be peaked, but should be comparatively light. The thighs should not be overloaded with fat, and he should be well cut up in the twist. He should have a fine, straight-away walking gait, not cross-legged. When you find one just right, buy him, and do not be too particular about the price.

This bull should be used on the best cows that can be selected from those available. They need not be pure-breds. In fact many men will get better results to stick to grades. It does not require as much skill to breed good grades as it does to breed good pure-breds. The pure-bred bull will be prepotent over the grade cows, and the calves will be more than half-blood in actual characteristics. The strong blood of the pure-bred bull impresses the offspring much more than does the weaker blood of the grade, so that the bull becomes more than half the grade herd. On the other hand, in breeding pure-breds together, great judgment is required to get the two currents of strong blood to mix well; otherwise, the results may be, been tested. That means that bulls are not ready for general or extensive use until they are three or four years old. Instead of keeping them until fully mature, the common custom is to use them freely as yearlings and 2-year-olds and then get rid of them because they may get cross. We can hardly blame the bull for getting Good breeding will not make well-developed heifers unless they are well fed. It is absolute folly to expect that heifer calves will develop into first-class cows if they are stunted when they are young. It is perfectly legitimate to get a good ration at a low cost as possible, but nothing but failure can come from trying to save money by feeding a poor or insufficient ration.

The blood of the good bull may be more strongly impressed upon the grades by closer inbreeding than is advisable when raising pure-breds. A strong bull bred to grade cows gets strong heifers, and he may be bred again to his own with a strong likelihoow of getting good results. This method gives 75 per cent. of the blood of the sire in the heifers of the second generation. It is not wise to inbred too much when raising pure-breds, but it may be practised with excellent results in the case of grades.

The average daily ration fed 2-year-old heifers in the Storrs College barn during the winter of 1908 was as follows: Hay, 8 pounds; silage, 20 pounds; grain, 1½ pounds. The grain mixture was made up of 200 pounds of bran, 100 pounds of cornmeal and 100 pounds of linseed meal.

The ration fed milking cows was made up as follows:

Hay	10 lbs.
Silage	40 lbs.
Bran	2 lbs.
Corn meal	2 lbs.
Gluten feed	2 lbs.
Cottonseed meal	1 lb.

The amount of grain and silage fed varied according to the size and condition of the cow. The grain varied from 6 to 12 pounds.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

Notice the fruit trees carefully. See which tree bears heavily, ripens on time and matures a high grade of fruit. Notice the trees that are shy bearers, the tender trees susceptible to disease and insect injury. It is highly desirable that the fruit-grower become thoroughly familiar with the tendencies of the various trees, so he will know how to treat them. Trees are much like animals. A person can always get better results with animals if he understands their peculiarities. Furthermore, one always wants to know the good trees and the poor trees. The poor will need be replaced as soon as practical. The desirable trees bearing large crops of highly-desirable fruits may be reproduced. Propagation should be from the best.

Those who have had any experience in handling sheep will know how difficult it is to get them into a barn or shed after dark. The interior is dark and they are afraid to enter. Of course, it is possible to catch one or two and carry them inside, but even then the rest will not follow. A lantern placed where the sheep can see it frightens them away instead of enticing them inside. But a lantern placed just inside the door and to one side, illuminates the interior of the barn and does not frighten the sheep. The sheep will readily and quietly enter a barn lit up in this way.

Coal ashes are of far less value as a fertilizer than wood ashes are, yet they have a value especially on a soil inclined to clay. They change the soil, making it lighter and more easily handled, and besides this it becomes more productive, because of the mechanical change made to the soil. There also is a slight element of fertility in these ashes.

That horses have their peculiar tastes in selecting the most palatable feeds is shown by recent investigations at the Ohio Experiment Station, in which some hays were eaten with great relish, while others were only partly consumed. Mixed clover and timothy seemed to satisfy their appetites best, and brome grass was also to their liking. Timothy hay stood third. None of the horses were fond of tall oat grass, while bluegrass and redtop were also near the bottom of the list of palatable grasses.

The first thing to do with scoured calves is to remove the cause and then give them lime water in the milk. Two tablespoonsful twice a day for a calf 2 months old, and for larger calves half a cupful. Make the lime water by putting a hand fuoll lime into a pail of water. When it has slacked and settled, pour off the clear portion and bottle it for future use.

It seems strange that there are so many farms where fruits are not grown. Most people like fruits, and there are very few localities and farms where some kind of fruits cannot be grown. Let every manager consider the value of a good orchard and then start one on his farm the first opportunity.

One Little Hour.

(London Poetry Review.)

Our little hour—how swift it flies
When poppies flare and lilies smile;
How soon the fleeting minute dies,
Leaving us but a little while
To dream our dream, to sing our song,
To pick the fruit, to pluck the flower,
The gods—they do not give us long—
One little hour.

Our little hour—how short a time
To wage our wars, to fan our hates,
To take our fill of armoured crime,
To troop our banners, storm the gates.
Blood on the sword, our eyes blood-red,
Blind in our puny reign of power,
Do we forget how soon is sped
Our little hour?

Our little hour—how soon it dies:
How short a time to tell our beads,
To chant our feeble Litanies,
To think sweet thoughts, to do good deeds.
The altar lights grow pale and dim,
The bells hang silent in the tower—
So passes with the dying hymn
Our little hour.

WILLIAM TELL.

The Story Was Old in Denmark Before the Swiss Borrowed It.

Do you know who shot the apple on the head of the little boy? Why, William Tell, of course! Everybody knows how Tell delivered Switzerland from the tyranny of Austria. At least everybody used to know. Unfortunately, for pure romance, the historian and the investigator have been unduly active in the past quarter of a century, and the result has left us few heroes with enough covering of romance to cover their skeletons.

We have read Schiller's beautiful and inspiring play, either in our college German course or in translation, and we cling to William Tell with all the ardor of youthful enthusiasm. And along comes the historian and tells us that it is all a myth, that the dates fixed by the Swiss chronicles on the subject do not coincide with the dates of the historic events that were supposed to be taking place in Austria at the same time and that earlier records of Switzerland make no mention of the archer's master shot.

The selfsame story is told in the Danish legends, two centuries before it crops out in the Swiss narrative, and further investigation shows that it was borrowed by the Danes, the original apple having been shot from the original child's head by a German bowman named Eigil, when King Nidung sought to test the man's skill and nerve. In that remote story it is related that Eigil concealed another arrow in his bosom with which to kill the king if he injured his child. John Fiske, the American historian, was largely responsible for robbing us of William Tell.

When a girl is a belle, it is quite natural for her to announce her engagement with a ring.

A PUZZLING CASE

CHAPTER VI.

The next day, according to my promise, I went with Tancred to see Tressinger, in order to talk over the position of affairs, which did not look flourishing for our poor friend. A very black aspect had been put on his conduct, owing to the extraordinary evidence of Ilma Celinski, who, for some reason best known to herself, had turned traitress. In truth, her conduct was most peculiar, savouring greatly of caprice, as having first attempted to save—if not his life — at least his liberty by warning him to fly, she had gone to the other extreme and done her best to convict him of the crime. I call it caprice, but it was, doubtless, more than that, as no woman would play such a dangerous game without some strong motive. I suspected that the motive was a man, and that the man was Dallas, but waited to hear Tressinger's opinion, before committing himself wholly to this view of the case.

Tancred was deeply interested in the affair, the more so on account of its difficulty, as there was nothing he liked better than to unravel one of those enigmas so frequently offered to the world by the criminal classes. Talk about the difficulty of putting together a Chinese puzzle; it is a nothing compared with the task of weaving the rope out of his own actions to encircle the neck of a criminal. As a stone at the source may determine the direction of a mighty stream, so the slightest step in the wrong direction on the part of a detective may lead him farther away from the solution of the problem, and it is only by patient observation, deep thought, and the inspiration of the moment, that a definite conclusion can be reached. A criminal case is made up of little actions, as a mosaic is formed of tiny stones; but the latter makes a picture, the former builds a gallows.

"I have been mixed up with one or two queer cases," said Tancred, as we drove to the prison, "but this is the strangest which has come within my experience. If it were the plot of a novel, the omnipotent detective, who only exists in fiction, would find out about it without the slightest difficulty; but as it is an episode of real life, we lack the assistance of the omnipotent Lecoq, and must do our best to solve the mystery alone."

"Do you think we shall succeed?" I asked, doubtfully, for things looked anything but promising.

"I cannot say," replied Tancred, shrugging his shoulders, "at present we are entirely in the dark, and the only gleam of light I can see is the lying evidence of that woman."

"Lying evidence?"

"My dear sir, you surely didn't think she was speaking the truth? Why, the whole story was most carefully prepared to blacken our friend's character, and had I cross-examined the witness, I could have shown the falsity of several statements."

"Well, and why did you not do so?"

"Because I was not quite sure of my ground. Now I know the line taken by the prosecution I will go to work and get up a defence. As I told you, yesterday, I believe there is a man behind this girl, who put the story into her mouth. A man who hates Tressinger."

"Dallas hates him like poison."

"I daresay he does. Yes, I remember your suggestion, and there may be something in it. After we have seen Tressinger, we might call on this Mr. Dallas in a friendly way, and see what position he takes up in reference to our friend."

"But Dallas is out of town."

"Out of town," repeated Tancred, thoughtfully. "I don't like that."

"What you mean?"

"Simply this, that if Dallas is, as you suspect, the man behind this Ilma Celinski, he would have stayed in town to direct operations. His going away at such a critical time argues that he has not much interest in the case."

"I'll never believe that, never!" I said, emphatically, "he loved the dead woman too much, not to be deeply interested in the tragedy of her fate."

"Well," said Tancred, philosophically, as the cab stopped at the prison door, "we will discuss the matter with Tressinger, and, after hearing his better position regarding how to proceed."

Gilbert was much relieved to see us, as judging from his haggard face, the poor lad had been suffering terribly since his arrest. The death of Mazzucata had been a terrible blow, but as misfortunes never come singly, hardly had he realized that the woman he loved was dead, when to add to his misery he was arrested on the charge of being her assassin. While yet suffering from the effects of this second blow, a third had fallen on him in the shape of Ilma Celinski's evidence, which took him completely by surprise. Up to the time of Mazzucata's death he was unaware he possessed enemies, but after these three blows which had fallen in regular succession, he could not but see that he had some powerful and unseen enemies who were determined to destroy him. They had deprived him of his beloved, they had deprived him of his liberty, and now it seemed as though they were determined to crown their iniquity by depriving him of his life.

Ever since his arrest, Gilbert had been vainly racking his brains in the attempt to find out the meaning of these terrible misfortunes which were crushing him to the earth. He was quite sure he had never injured any person, yet these unknown persons whose machinations have hitherto been successful, evidently harbored some grudge against him. Convinced of his innocence, he could not believe that his life was in peril, yet, after the damning evidence of Ilma Celinski, he saw plainly that he was in a dangerous position. Innocent men have suffered for less, and at the present juncture of affairs, it seemed as though nothing could save him from the gallows.

Thus environed on all sides by doubts, difficulties and dangers, he greatly felt the want of some one with whom to discuss the matter, and was therefore much relieved in his mind when we came to help him in his hour of need. Indeed, he was so overcome that he could not utter a word, but warmly clasped our hands, while we, in order to give him time to recover himself, took our seats silently in his cell and waited for him to speak.

"I am very glad to see you, major," he murmured, at length, "and you also, Mr. Tancred. I have been thinking——"

"Precisely, and it is your thoughts we wish to know," interrupted Tancred, cheerfully. "You have, I presume, some suspicions as to the person or persons to whom you owe your present position?"

Tressinger made a gesture of despair.

"I have no suspicions," he cried, bitterly. "I do not know what it all means. I am completely in the dark."

"So are we all," I observed, slowly; "still, both Tancred and myself have certain ideas."

"Pardon," said Tancred, lifting his hand, "do not say anything at present Major Granby. I wish to ask Sir Gilbert some questions if he will answer them." He accompanied this speech with such a significant glance, that Gilbert was taken by surprise.

"Of course I will answer them," he said, in an astonished tone; "I have no reason to keep back anything."

"Humph!" said Tancred, apparently only half convinced. "Well, we shall see. Now, tell me, Sir Gilbert, what is your opinion of Mademoiselle Celinski's evidence?"

"My opinion is that it is a pack of lies," retorted Tressinger, with an angry frown. "I don't understand the reason of such falsehoods."

"Then her evidence is not true?"

"Not one word of it."

"Good. I thought as much, and would now like to hear your version of the story."

"That is simple enough. Mazzucata certainly met Dallas in Italy, and he wished to marry her, but she point-blank refused to have anything to do with him. There was no question of the matter remaining in abeyance until he returned from the East. As to my having quarrelled with her, that is distinctly false—we never had a single disagreement."

"And yet you were forbidden the house, or rather the hotel."

"That also is false, and I can explain it all. I as you know, came to England with Mazzucata, and two days after we arrived she received the token of the black carnation; it came from Paris."

"From Paris!" we both exclaimed, in astonishment.

"Yes, it had apparently been pressed between the leaves of a book and was afterwards sent to England in an envelope. That envelope had a French stamp and the Paris postmark."

"Worse and worse," muttered Tancred, thoughtfully, "the foreign element is coming in now. We may chance to find the murderer in England, but if we have to search the Continent, I'm afraid it will be difficult."

"But supposing the person who sent the black carnation is in England," I suggested, pointedly.

"You are thinking of Dallas?"

"Yes, he was in Paris for some time before he came to England, and only returned on the night of the tragedy."

"What has Dallas got to do with this?" asked Gilbert, curiously.

"I will tell you later on," replied Tancred, quickly, before I could speak: "meanwhile, please continue your story."

"There is not much to tell. When Mazzucata received the flower, she was in a terrible state of mind, and asked me to go to Paris in order to find out, if possible, who posted the letter."

"An impossibility."

"So I found. However, I did my best and failed. I only got back to town in time for Mazzucata's debut, so that is the reason I was not at the Hotel Europa for a few days. Ilma says I was forbidden to call—I say, I was in Paris, and can prove it by the evidence of my valet."

"Good," said Tancred, in a satisfied tone, "that disposes of a certain portion of the evidence. And as to your putting the black carnation in the bouquet?"

"That also is false. I went up to Mazzucata's rooms and found Ilma there, but when she told me her mistress had gone to the theatre I left at once. While I was there I never saw the black carnation."

"Did you lay down the bouquet while you were there?"

"For a few moments, yes. There was some coffee in the room, and I drank a cup."

"Was Ilma in the room when you laid down the bouquet and drank the coffee?"

"Yes, why do you ask?"

"Because she might have changed the bouquet when your back was turned. You brought to the hotel an innocent bunch of flowers with a black rose—you left it with an infernal machine concealed in a bouquet, with a black carnation."

"Impossible!"

"I think so too," I said, gravely. "Gilbert would have noticed the substitution of a black carnation for a black rose."

"By no means. He was preoccupied, and would pay but little attention to the flower."

"That is true," said Gilbert, quickly, "I never even glanced at the flowers—at least not closely."

"Well, then—black rose—black carnation. It was easy to make a mistake. Yes, believe me, Sir Gilbert, my supposition is correct—those flowers were changed by Ilma Celinski, when your back was turned."

"But why should Ilma have done such a thing? Why should she want to kill a kind mistress and ruin me?"

"That's what we have to find out," said Tancred, cheerfully, "my own impression is, that she was the tool of another person."

"Dallas?"

"Perhaps, we are not certain of that."

"I don't follow you at all," cried Gilbert, in perplexity, "why should Dallas wish to kill Mazzucata?"

"Because she loved you and he loved her."

"I myself heard him say he would kill her if she married anyone but him," I explained at this moment.

"Then that supplies the motive. Dallas came back from the East more in love than ever, and while in Paris, heard that Tressinger was to be married to Mazzucata. Knowing her superstition, he sent the Black Carnation in order to work on her fears. As that did no good he determined to kill her, and, therefore, determined to do so by means of that devilish bouquet, which Ilma substituted for your own."

"My dear Tancred," said Gilbert, in a tone of raillery, "you have built up an excellent case all out of nothing. Let us grant, for the sake of argument, that Dallas intended to kill my poor Marietta—that he sent the Black Carnation from Paris, but then he did not arrive from Paris till the night of her debut. so how could he have known that I intended to throw a bouquet of flowers—how could he know that such a bouquet would consist of white flowers with a black rose in the centre—how could he know I would call on Mazzucata before the performance with such a bouquet, and lastly, how could he have induced Ilma to change the flowers, and for what reason?"

"Your objections are very just—on the face of them," replied Tancred, good-humoredly; "but I think I can answer them. In the first place, I do not believe the story of Dallas as to his only arriving in London on the night of the debut. He was in London for many days."

"In that case, how could he have sent the Black Carnation from Paris?"

"Well, if you had time to go to Paris before Mazzucata's debut in search of the sender, he certainly had time to come to London and find out all about your movements."

"Well, granted that he did come to London as you suggest; what about the rest of my objections?"

"Oh the flowers? Well, you doubtless sent Mazzucata every day?"

"Yes. Women are fond of such attentions."

"Exactly, and Dallas knew that women are fond of such attentions. You, doubtless, always ordered these flowers at the same florists?"

"Phillis & Co., Jermyn street. Yes."

"Dallas would not have much difficulty in finding that out, either. Well, on the day of the debut he discovered that a bouquet of white flowers with a dark centre was being prepared by your order for Mazzucata. He, therefore, ordered a duplicate."

"But for what reason?"

"Because he wanted to kill two birds with one stone—in plain English, he wished to murder Mazzucata and then hang you for the murder."

"Well, go on."

"When he got his bouquet, he took it home and inserted the dynamite cartridge, and also removing the black rose, placed therein a Black Carnation."

"So far so good; but all supposition."

"Never mind; it's all feasible, at all events. Now, the next thing he had to do was to deliver this bouquet to Mazzucata, and for that purpose went to her hotel. He did not mean to kill her at the theatre, but at her rooms. When he arrived there, he found Mazzucata had left for the theatre, and only Ilma was present. While talking to her they heard your voice, and Dallas concealed himself."

"Do you mean to say Dallas was in the room at the same time as myself?" cried Gilbert, disbelievingly.

"I say that he was in the next room. He saw you lay down the bouquet and turn your back to it, in order to drink the coffee. Then the idea occurred to him of changing the bouquets, a little task which Ilma performed at his bidding, so at the theatre you threw the bouquet of Dallas and he threw yours."

"But why should Ilma do this?"

"Why do women do many things?" asked Tancred, ironically; "because she loved him."

"Loved Dallas! oh, nonsense."

"I don't see why you should say that. Dallas is not a bad looking fellow, and doubtless promised to marry Ilma if she did as he wished."

"All this is supposition; but supposing it to be true, why should Ilma come and warn me to fly?"

"Because she felt compunction at the idea of condemning an innocent man to the gallows. As you refused to take her hint, however, she let you go on blindly to your fate. All those lies in the witness-box were not hers, but invented by Dallas."

"I cannot—I will not believe it," cried Gilbert, walking excitedly up and down.

"Well, we will try to prove it to you," said Tancred, rising to his feet. "Major, can you find out anything about the movements of your friend, Mr. Dallas?"

"Don't call him my friend," said I, angrily, "as to finding out about Dallas, yes. My man Pointer knows his valet, so I have no doubt, if I tell Pointer what I wish to know, he will find out all about it."

"Good; do that and I am sure you will find that I am right."

"There is one thing you overlooked," said Gilbert, after a pause, "where did Dallas obtain the black carnation?"

"Ah! that is the question. However, I have no doubt we will find that out also."

"In what way?"

"By means of the flower itself. If it had been a red carnation or a yellow one, I would have been in despair, but a black carnation—to use an Irishism—is a rara avis. The gardener who has been lucky enough to have discovered how to grow a black flower is a celebrated person in horticultural circles, so all I have to do is to make inquiries—say at the shop of Phillis & Co., in order to find out where this man lives. Then I will go to him and ask to see his famous plant; find out if he has sold any bulbs, or slips for setting—if so, discover to whom he sold them, and, then, once the purchaser is discovered, the murderer won't be far off."

MARCH WEATHER RHEUMATIC WEATHER

VICTIMS CAN CURE THEMSELVES WITH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

With the coming of March people who are afflicted with rheumatism begin to have unpleasant reminders of their trouble. The weather is changeable — balmy and springlike one day, raw, cold and piercing the next. It is such sudden changes of weather that sets the pangs and tortures of rheumatism, lumbago and sciatica going. But it must be borne in mind that although weather conditions start the pains, the trouble is deeply rooted in the blood, and can only be cured through the blood. All the lotions and liniments in the world can't cure rheumatism. Rubbing may seem to ease the pain while you are rubbing, but there its value ends. Only through the blood can you cure rheumatism. That's why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have so many thousands of cures of this trouble to their credit. The new, rich blood which they actually make drives out the poisonous acid and rheumatism is vanquished. Among many sufferers from rheumatism who have been cured by this medicine is Mr. C. H. McGee, freight shed foreman for the G. T. R. at Peterboro, who says: "In the course of my work I am naturally exposed to all kinds of weather, with the result that about two years ago I contracted rheumatism which settled in my legs. At times I could scarcely walk, and often had to quit my day's work owing to the stiffness and the pain. I tried different remedies without getting any help until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used six boxes of these and can say that I am about as well as ever I was. I still take the pills occasionally, and I hope that my experience may be of benefit to some other rheumatic sufferer."

If you suffer from rheumatism, or any other disease of the blood, begin to cure yourself to-day with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Some One to Care.

Coming home on the train last night I saw a pleasing scene from the car window. A little girl stood at the railroad station with an umbrella. It was raining hard. When the train stopped she looked eagerly up and down and then ran to meet a young woman. The child lifted the umbrella protectingly over the woman and smiled lovingly in her face.

It set me to thinking. After all, the main thing that we need in life is some one to care. As long as there is some one awaiting our homecoming, eager to welcome us and make us comfortable, we can keep up courage.

It is our duty to ourselves to surround ourselves as a family of friends. Those who care are [illegible] to draw us away from trouble, balsam to heal our wounds and [illegible] to keep us from sinking. We need all the friends we can make and hold.—[illegible]

This truly might be called, the fine age. We have of late, the whiskey-bottle fine, the tooth-paste-war stamp fine, the military dress censor, disloyalty and other fines. Shortly we will have the telephone and half a dozen other similar fines. Sneak detectives seem to be lurking in every corner. Offences and penalties multiply so quickly that the man who all along thought himself pretty straight following in the old paths doesn't know the moment a spring trap clinch on his peaway foot and he is mucked in for damages for exceeding the offence. We will soon be able to swallow kaiserism in its entirety. The hitherto respectable man will have lost his respectability and be called a criminal. His birthright a freedom destroyed, honor and honesty will no longer be his heritage. Public libraries have their fines, and this may spread to Sunday School libraries.

The teacher training class is coming along splendidly, and giving Pastor Watt much encouragement.

Who Has These Photos?

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir.—I am very desirous of getting a picture of "The High School Cadets" of the Port Elgin High School, of which I was a member. This photo was taken about 1891 or 1892. It occurred to me that probably a plate could be taken from a photo which undoubtedly some member of that class or some family in Port Elgin or Southampton might have.

Also would like a picture of the high school girls class taken about the same time. As one gets older the little things of younger days prove to be big things after all, and I have often wished I had procured and kept these photos. If you can assist me I would greatly appreciate it. If you can give me the name of a photographer who can make a copy of the above photos I would be glad to remit the cost of same.

I have not been in Port Elgin for nearly 20 years with the exception of a few days and things have changed considerably since those days, but one always remembers his own town and "his ain folk."

SAFE IN THE TRENCHES

Pte. Dan. McIntyre in a letter home gives his experiences of being in the trenches. His mother lives here and her four sons are in Khaki; John, James, Angus and Daniel. The letter from Dan follows;

France, March 3/17.

Just a few lines to let you know I am still alive and going on pretty good. It is a long while since I had a letter from you. I sent you a card some time ago, but I didn't send you my address. I have been in the hospital three times since the 18th of December and I have not got back to the battalion yet. I am in the Convalescent camp now. It is a place they send the soldiers to get strong after after being sick. I haven't been in the trenches for over two months so I am having a pretty good rest. The climate in France doesn't agree with me very well, I don't like this country. The towns are dirty and old, of course, and the war being on makes it worse. It was cold and wet here in January and February, but is getting warmer now.

PTE. DAN McINTYRE

I never saw any Port boys in France only Harry Moulton's boy. I saw him at the Base last summer. I suppose there is some change in Port since I left it, a lot of people dead that were alive when I was there. We don't seem to mind a man dying nowadays. We see so much of it in this country and we expect it.

Being in the trenches isn't as bad as a man would think It's bad enough but not so bad as I thought. I can't say I ever was afraid in the trenches. You are there and shells bursting all around you, but you don't seem to mind it. I remember my first trip in the trenches, I didn't know how far we had to go and we went on for about a mile from our billets when old Fritz caught sight of us and started to throw some shells at us. I didn't know how far away from those shells I was safe but I soon got onto my job. When I was in the trench for a day I knew when a shell was coming too close or not, you know I used to stand up and watch the shells burst on every side of us and think they were trying to kill us. I tell you that is when I found out how much God can help. I used to think when I would hear a big shell come my way that God was mightier than all the shells and guns they could bring up and when it came, to jumping out of the trench and going over to Fritz I felt quite safe, because God was with me and was able to keep me in a safe place. The first time I went over it was at 12 o'clock at night and I was not at all frightened. I am sure I wouldn't give up my religion for anything now. When no man on earth can do anything for you He is able and willing, and has done it for me. So a man is just as safe in the trenches as any other place if it is God's will to have him there.

Well, I don't know of very much to say to night but I will be looking for letters from any of my friends who care to write. My address is No. 180487 58th Batt. Canadians No. 4 Convalescent Camp, France. We are supposed to write the address in with the letters. I don't no just why, but we must do as we are told.

The young people of the Evangelical church, and the Sunday school class of Mrs. Arthur Kolb, assembled at her home on Friday week, and gave Mrs. Melvin Reinhart a miscellaneous shower. A very enjoyable social time was spent.

Mr. H. H. Stevens, who has been suffering from a sprained ankle the past two weeks, recovered sufficiently to leave on business trip to New York. From there he will go to Washington, meeting Mrs Stevens and Dorothy and Frances, who are on their way home from spending the winter in Florida.

A ball was held in the town hall on Friday night. There was a large number of people, both young and old present, and a very enjoyable time spent. Cards were on the program from 9 to 11, after which lunch was served and the floors cleared for the dance. Mr. Raynor and Miss Raynor of Southampton, provided excellent music. A number of young men and women were present from Paisley, Southampton, and Dunblane. The proceeds of the evening were given to the Red Cross.

Friday is a holiday, and all the business places will be closed.

Sentenced to 12 Years

At the Walkerton assizes before Justice Mulock, William Henry Day, charged with raping an Amabel farmer's wife was given 12 years in penitentiary. Day was sentenced in 1913 to fourteen years in penitentiary for bigamy. In April 1916, he escaped from the prison farm at Guelph, and went as far as Port Elgin by train. In tramping across country, he came to a farm house at night and sought a night's lodging. The farmer befriended him and as a reward Day attacked the wife while the farmer was absent doing the chores. He made his escape at the time but was arrested the next day on a vagrancy charge and when his 30 days sentence in the County Gaol was completed, he was rearrested on the rape charge. In the meanwhile he has been back in penitentiary. When the trial opened Day said, of course he was guilty but claimed he was insane and protested that an insane man should not be tried. He declined to challenge any of the jury or even to look at them and turned his back on the court. It took the jury only twenty minutes to find Day guilty both of rape and of escaping from the Prison Farm. The Chief Justice sentenced him to twelve years in the penitentiary, the sentence to run concurrently with his fourteen year term for bigamy, on which he has about ten years to serve.

Planning For Half-Holidays

The merchants and business men in general are planning for the summer half holidays on Thursday afternoons.

As usual it will be observed in Port Elgin, beginning in May. In past years our town has moved along without consulting nearby towns. It would be a good move if the local men communicated with the Paisley, Tara, Tiverton, Underwood and Southampton merchants, and an endeavor made to make the afternoon general. The surrounding country would then be familiar with the move, and it would be much more satisfactory than one town using Tuesday, another Wednesday and another Thursday.

Another thing, most of the merchants will have gardens, and bigger ones than in the previous year. If a concerted move were made for a Thursday afternoon holiday general through this section it would help materially in the patriotic work of greater production.

There should be a merchants' organization in every town, with a big general picnic held yearly. The Merchants' picnics in some sections is a big event looked forward to by everybody.

CHINA'S MODEL CITY.

Latest Undertaking Would Put It in Suburbs of Hong Kong.

For a good many years schemes have been entertained from time to time for the erection somewhere in South China of a model city for the use of the well-to-do Chinese. Chinese people of wealth and Chinese returning from the United States, Australia and other sections of the globe with a knowledge of modern cities have felt this need, and in recent years several attempts have been made to launch such a project.

One scheme went so far as the organization of a city at Heungshan, not far from Kingmoon and within a short distance of Hong Kong. This city was established upon Chinese soil and by special arrangement with the Chinese government. It was to have certain custom privileges; it was established upon modern sanitary lines; and its close proximity to Hong Kong, on the one hand, and its location in the part of China from which come most of the Chinese in America on the other, were expected to make it attractive. The city has made little progress however.

The latest undertaking of this sort is for the construction of a model suburb of Hong Kong along the most modern lines for the housing of wealthy Chinese. This plan involves the reclamation of a tract of land about a mile and a half long and a third of a mile broad, the construction of wide avenues and fairly wide side streets, the erection of 47 blocks of high grade apartment, tenement and similar buildings, and the establishment of a modern sewerage system and other public utilities. In spite of war and the uncertainties of finance the company undertaking this enterprise has been formed and its plans completed, and work is to commence at once.

Increasing numbers of wealthy Chinese from various parts of south China are coming to Hong Kong to make this city their permanent residence. The result has been a constantly increasing need for houses for such people and a growing demand on their part for homes so situated that they can be among their countrymen. Most of these newcomers have plenty of money for their needs, and some of them have considerable sums for which they seek profitable investment. Purchases of residence property in the lower levels of Hong Kong by such people have changed the entire course of real estate matters in the colony of Hong Kong. The organization of this new suburb offers a way out of many difficulties, for it will not only afford this class of people the proper housing they demand, but will also offer a ready and safe investment.

The new suburb is to be located on the south side of the Kowloon peninsula, the mainland portion of the colony of Hong Kong two miles from the landing of the ferry from the city of Victoria (commonly known as Hong Kong) and along the shore of Kowloon Bay, near the native city of Kowloon. The site is to cover a tract about 2,000 feet long and 1,500 feet broad, embracing the foreshore only but backed by hills from which several small streams emerge, the ravines affording considerable fall for drainage purposes. The reclamation is wholly a dredging undertaking. The company is at present drawing specifications for the work to be done and expects to let the contract within the next six or eight weeks. There is some doubt as to whether dredging machinery of sufficient capacity will be available at the present time for the company's purposes, but apparently this is the only obstacle in the way of rapid progress being made upon the entire undertaking.

The reclamation of the land for this suburb is being undertaken by the original syndicate, the plan being that the construction of tenements, private residences, piers and warehouses shall be undertakings of separate syndicates to be arranged later. Being on the mainland portion of the colony the site has the advantage of railway connections for pier and warehouses and to assist in its development generally. It is probable that connections with Kowloon and Hong Kong will be maintained by motor busses rather than by a tramway system, but this question is yet to be settled.

The plan includes the erection of four piers with space for warehouses if need for them arises on the water front of the reclaimed land. The depth of the water now over the side averages about one and a half fathoms. With the extension of the piers and the dredging to be done in reclamation work sufficient depth for ordinary oceangoing vessels will be had at all tides.

Unless delayed by a lack of machinery it is expected that the reclamation will be completed in about two years. —Commerce Report.

The Eternal English Sparrow.

The same little sparrow was a pest in ancient Egypt in the time of Rameses. It has outlived nations, tribes and dynasties. Laws have been passed against it in Germany, Austria and France declared war on it, the British Parliament made it the subject of an investigation. It was imported into Australia and has become such a nuisance there that laws have been enacted against it; but, through it all, the little gray-coated sparrow has twittered gayly on, busily hatching and rearing its five or six broods a year.—Kansas City Star.

The Wood Powee.

(By Charles Bartrop)

With ashy breast and olive wing,
In leafy maze and lonely tree,
Upon a dry branch balancing,
Sat little wailing wood pewee.

To wind lament in stately pose,
Like those in selfish sorrow blind,
And din the woods with minor woes—
Such seemed the bent of pewee mind.

But when this percher made a dart,
He snapped his beak with lightning vim,
And every moth he caught apart,
He made a sacrifice of him.

A habit of complaint had he;
But for my life I could not tell,
How, day by day, this wood pewee
Could all so much and eat so well.

Pewee, pewee his trebles flow;
If sadness he were called to bear,
What living thing would wish to know
The grief that waked his trivial air?

He soothes me, does this wood pewee,
I scarcely know the reason why;
But life would be less dear to me
Without his little wailing cry.

A. McKim Limited Advertising Agency New Executive

The new Executive of A. McKim, Limited, Advertising Agency of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and London, Eng., has been announced.

During the last few years the late Mr. Anson McKim had gathered around him an executive staff capable of relieving him of all but a general oversight of the rapidly growing business of the advertising agency which he founded nearly thirty years ago, and which now comprises four offices in different cities and over 140 employees.

Since his death, these experienced men have been carrying on the work in the same efficient way that has characterized "McKim's" for so many years. The personnel of the executive as now organized is J. N. McKim, President and Treasurer; Mrs. Anson McKim, Vice President; W. B. Somerset, General Manager; H. E. Stephenson, Secretary; C. T. Pearce, Manager at Toronto; Thos. Bell, Manager at Winnipeg; W. Keeble, Manager at London, Eng.

The appreciation of the value of advertising space in local and home papers of modest circulation, always a strong feature of this Agency's policy, will be as marked as ever under the present management.

SPEED HIGH IN AIR.

Aeronautical Theory Borne Out by Bird Migration.

The statement that a flying machine with a normal speed of 40 miles an hour would travel at a height of 5 miles at 150 miles an hour—made by Dr. Graham Bell, is supported by an ornithologist. Doctor Bell's view, which depended on a prolonged course of scientific inquiries, was that the speed of an aeroplane increased in more or less definite ratio as the height from the earth increased. The thinner the air the faster the aircraft.

That birds use this quality of the air now seems probable. Some of the migrants arriving in England have been observed to dive down from an incalculable height, as has often been observed in Heligoland. That the weak flyers should cross the North Sea in one dash has seemed an insoluble mystery, because it has necessitated the theory that they are endowed at that moment with a sudden access of power. May it not be that then only they find themselves in the thinner higher air? Swifts, which are the most rapid flyers of all, for the most part fly higher than other birds.

Cranes have been seen to cross the sun's disk at an estimated height of 3-4 miles, and others have passed over clear the highest mountain ranges. The verdict of one of the best students of migration is that "without ascending to a considerable altitude the migration of many birds would be simply impossible." That very poor flyer, the corn-crake, has traveled the seemingly impossible distance of 5,000 miles.

It is true that many birds have been observed to fly low during migration. Swallows especially have been seen migrating at a low elevation and even to cover 100 miles an hour.—London Mail.

Clever Hindu Jugglers.

It is admitted that the Hindu jugglers and acrobats are the most skillful in the world. One of the latest reports is about a performer who went through many wonderful feats perched on the top of a single bamboo stick about fifteen feet in height. The top of the stick was tied to a girdle around the waist, and a leg rest was provided by a cushion a few feet down the pole. Perched on this slender stick he hopped and danced round in the liveliest way, accompanied by the tapping of a drum. He did other things even more wonderful. For example, he balanced a light stick on his nose and a heavy one on his chin and then threw the heavy one into the air with his head and caught it on the end of the light one. While balancing the two sticks thus end on end he made one revolve in one direction and the other in another direction.

Deepest Sea Near Shore.

The deepest parts of the sea are not in the middle of the oceans, as may be commonly supposed, but near the shore. Thus the Swire deep, 32,089 feet, more than 3,000 feet deeper than Mount Everest is high, is off Mindanao in the Philippines; the Aldrich deep, 30,930 feet, close to the Tongan and Kermandeck islands, and the Tuscarora deep, 27,930 feet, along the coast of Asia, north of Japan.

THE ONLY MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Mrs. Timothy Bowes, Blissfield, N. B., writes: "I have always used Baby's Own Tablets for my three children and I can speak very highly of them as I could not get along without them. Baby's Own Tablets are the only medicine I would use for my children." The Tablets cure all the minor ills of little ones and the mother who always keeps a box of them in the house may feel reasonably safe against the consequences of sudden attacks of illness. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Over Africa by Rail.

It is now possible to cross Africa by rail and water in practical comfort. Kings in Africa could always travel in comparative comfort; but one not a king had difficulties to contend with, which are being slowly removed by the steady extension of the means and methods of civilization. Following approximately the trails traversed by Livingstone and Stanley in penetrating the heart of that vast continent infested by wild animals and hostile natives, the traveller to-day may go from Banana at the mouth of the Congo River on the west coast, to Dar-es-Salaam on the Indian Ocean, a distance of 3,046 miles. All but the last section, Kigomo to Dar-es-Salaam, is in Belgian Congo, and the transcontinental trip may be made, with good connection, in forty days. The gauge of the railroads in Congo is two feet, five and one-half inches. Lake Tanganyika is 2,642 feet above the sea level. The final gap in this route, Kabalo to Albertville, was finished and opened to traffic in 1915, and the map of the route of the Congo is a fair outline of a tropical helmet.—The Christian Herald.

Teacher Has Not Lost One Day in a Year

MRS. ROGER GIVES CREDIT TO DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Before that She Suffered from Sciatica, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Other Troubles Coming from Sick Kidneys, Which Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured.

Elm Tree, Gloucester Co., N. B., April 5.—(Special)—Mrs. Jos. Roger, the popular teacher here, is fully recovered from a long siege of sciatica, neuralgia, and other troubles resulting from diseased kidneys and has made a statement in which she gives Dodd's Kidney Pills all the credit for her cure.

"My trouble came from a strain," Mrs. Roger states, "and I suffered for thirteen months. Backache, heart flutterings, sciatica, neuralgia, dizziness and failing memory were among my symptoms. When the doctor I consulted failed to do me any lasting good I decided that my kidneys were the root of my troubles and decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took twelve boxes in all and you may judge of the results when I tell you that I have not lost a day's work as teacher in the last year.

"I can sy that Dodd's Kidney Pills have done all for me that was claimed for them."

Others of Mrs. Rogers' symptoms were nervousness, that tired feeling, irritability and a dry harsh skin that itched and burned at night. They all come from diseased kidneys and all vanished when she used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

The Whiners.

I don't mind a man with a red-blooded kick,
At a real or a fanciful wrong;
I can stand for the chap with a grouch, if he's quick
To drop it when joy comes along.
I have praise for the fellow who says what he thinks,
Though his thought may not fit in with mine,
But spare me from having to mix with the ginks
Who go through this world with a whine.

I am willing to listen to sinner or saint
Who is willing to fight for his rights,
And there's something sometimes in an honest complaint
That the soul of me really delights.
For kickers are useful and grouches are wise,
For their purpose is frequently fine,
But spare me from having to mix with the guys
Who go through this world with a whine.

The Hangman's Stone.

There is a large boulder lying in a field near Foremark, England, which is known throughout Derbyshire as the "hangman's stone." The exposed portion of the boulder rises about six feet above the surface of the surrounding field and has a narrow ditch or indentation running across the top. The mark, so tradition says, was made in this way: A sheep thief in the dead of night, while leaning against the boulder to rest, placed his booty above on the flat surface of the stone. The man had the sheep tied with a rope, and in its efforts to escape the creature slipped on the opposite side, and the rope, catching under the thief's chin, choked him to death. The indentation in the rock was made by the friction of the rope while the dying man was engaged in an effort to extricate himself.

Time is money, except that it isn't quite so scarce.

RIBBONS FOR SUMMER HATS.

Warm-weather hats show a liberal use of ribbons, particularly those hats of the sports variety. So far the ribbons employed are mostly narrow, but milliners prophesy the wider ribbons for hats, once the narrow ribbons have gained an assured entre.

Very narrow velvet ribbons are sometimes braided into bands, wide bands, for sport hats, the ends being left loose to form a fringe, and huge tassels, sometimes the sole trimming of a sports sailor, are fashioned of these narrow ribbons.

Very narrow ribbons, especially those of velvet, are used for embroidering designs upon straw hats and sometimes upon wider ribbons that in turn will adorn millinery. Very effective are the cat-o'-nine tails, grapes and birds thus made.

The narrow grosgrain ribbons, however, continue to be of first importance in sports millinery, both in simple bands and in most unusual bows. Those hats made entirely of grosgrain ribbon will continue to be fashionable during the summer, especially for country club and week-end wear.

One of the most extreme novelties for the summer season is that of the ribbon beach pillow, which must match the hat, at least in color if not in material. The pillow is oval in shape and finished with ribbon loops, that it may be hung upon the arm.

"Narrow ribbons," says one ribbon manufacturer, "are now in demand for millinery, but one never knows when the wide ribbons will have the field. Consequently we manufacturers are making a most tempting assortment ahead of time. Ah, you should see them—ribbons of Oriental character, including cashmere effects, East Indian, Persian and Arabian patterns, all of the richest colorings! Nor are we neglecting the plain satin ribbons, for we're hoping and expecting that sashes will be the rage toward the end if not at the beginning of the summer, and we want to have ribbons of the very newest tints and shades ready."

Three Classes in Chile.

Although Chile is a republic, and all men are theoretically equal in the eyes of the law, yet in reality this is not so. Government of the people, by the people and for the people does not exist. There is a privileged class, composed mostly of the descendants of the old wealthy Spanish families, who exercise great power in all branches of the state, and in many things have the controlling voice. Between them and the middle class there is a fixed gulf; but even a wider gulf divides these two classes from the mass of working people, who are looked down upon with contempt.

Extreme poverty hardly exists in Chile, as it is found in the large cities of Europe, and it would not exist at all if reasonable economy and foresight were practised by the working classes. Intemperance, while not the sole cause of poverty, contributes very largely toward it. The government and the congress have signally failed in the regulation of the liquor traffic and in grappling with conditions and forces that make for poverty, and which the working classes in their dense ignorance are hopelessly unable to overcome. Let it be granted that the working classes of Chile can earn a fair wage, either as skilled or unskilled workmen. It is almost impossible for the worker to find a decent dwelling to make a home in which the very minimum of cleanliness and comfort can be found.—"Christian Herald."

The Age of a Horse.

To tell the age of any horse,
Inspect the lower jaw, of course,
The sixth front tooth the tale will tell,
And every doubt and fear dispel.
To middle "nippers" you behold
Before the colt is two weeks old,
Before eight weeks two more will come;
Eight months, the "corners" cut the gum.
Two outside grooves will disappear
From middle two in just one year.
In two years, form the second pair;
In three, the corners, too are bare.
At two, the middle "nippers" drop;
At three, the second pair can't stop,
When four years old, the third pair goes;
At five, a full new set he shows.
The deep, black spots will pass from view
At six years from the middle two.
The second pair, at seven years;
At eight, the spot each "corner" clears.
At nine, the black spots will withdraw
From middle "nippers" upper jaw,
The second pair at ten are white;
Eleven finds the "corners" light.
As time goes on the horsemen know,
The oval teeth, three-sided grow;
They longer get, project before,
Till twenty, when we know no more.

Irrigation makes things grow, especially a thirst.

Haiti's Food Trains.

Nearly all the produce for the feeding of the population of Port-au-Prince, Haiti, a city of some 60,000 people, is brought in on the backs of donkeys. The public square are converted into open-air market places, and here the buying and selling goes on from early morning until 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when the caravans begin their toilsome journey homeward. Situated in a region famous for its fine fish, among them the delectable and plentiful "red snapper," the Haitians eat quantities of salt cod imported from Massachusetts waters. And the quality of this imported staple is such as would not find favor in American markets.—National Geographic Magazine.

A WHOLE REGIMENT

(Guelph Mercury).

The Toronto Star at considerable length goes into the make-up of the various departments of a newspaper as follows:

"It is a mistake to suppose that the editorial department of a newspaper is the department that "turns out editorials." That is only part of its field. The department prepares all the reading matter, except advertisements, that appears in the printed pages, and it is divided into a variety of branches. The news staff gathers and writes the news; the editorial staff, composed of the editorial writers, interprets the news, draws conclusions from facts, or comments on the facts. In most newspaper offices of North America the head of the news staff is called the managing editor. Under him is one group of men called the local staff, another designated the telegraph room, and others known as department editors. There may also be an art department and a library. The local room (or city room) is in charge of the city editor, to whom the staff of reporters is immediately responsible for the gathering and writing of all news of the city. There are also a few desk men who correct the work of the reporters, write headlines for it and prepare it for the printers. The telegraph editor handles all news that arrives by telegraph or long distance telephone. The two Canadian telegraph companies and one or more press associations have operators' desks in nearly every daily paper in the large cities of Canada. The department editors are mainly specialists in charge of some small department of the paper, and they are called editors because their copy goes to the printer direct, without passing through the hands of another editor. The department editors include the sporting, the financial, the commercial, the dramatic, questions and answers, etc."

OLD HUN LINE A LONG, OPEN, RAGGED GRAVE

Hideous Trenches Tell What British Shells Were Doing One the Somme.

THE FOE'S MISERY

Living Germans Were Plagued Always by Their Own Dead.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Headquarters in France, cable says: Now that the desperate episodes in the war, known in history as the battle of the Somme, have been definitely ended by the German retreat from Arras to the Aisne, it has been possible more leisurely to investigate the conditions which existed along the German front just prior to the backward swing to the so-called Hindenburg line.

When the retreat first began more than a month ago, the British swept over some old Somme positions held by the Germans, and even the most hurried glimpse of the evacuated trenches indicated how untenable they had become, and why it was decided to run no risks of another allied offensive in this sector. Five miles of slogging along the old German lines in the vicinity of Bapaume to-day revealed a picture of ghastliness which may never be seen again in this or any other war. The front line was a long, open, dilapidated, crumbling grave, which disappeared in the mud at times, but could be picked up further on by means of the bodies that marked the way.

One realized with a shudder how the men doomed to live in these trenches had been plagued by their own dead. Such a ceremony as decent burial had been wholly out of the question, and there was no means of conveying the bodies to the rear. It had been like passing through a fiery rain from hades to bring up food and water to the living. So, the dead had simply been tossed out of the trenches, only to be blown back again by an exploding shell. Sometimes they came back in fragments, for there were arms and legs, feet and hands everywhere.

Occasionally, graves had been dug in the sides of the trench itself, but the dead could not even rest there. At frequent intervals the inevitable skeleton hands and feet protruded from the trench walls.

Grim sights this war has had for the men who passed up and down these trenches during the long and bitter nights of winter.

THE ANSWER.

It has been an enthralling thing to stand by the British guns in the last three of four months and wonder what was the meaning of all their continuous roar. There was no set battle in progress and the gunners said it was merely the "daily hate" going in to keep Fritz unhappy. The hideous revelations of the German trenches, however, give the gruesome answer to what the guns are doing. In some places there were veritable mangled masses of what were once human beings. Neither by day nor by night had the Germans rest. Their trusted barbed wire, in which they always place great reliance, had been swept completely away over thousands of yards, and they dare not venture out to repair it.

All trace of communication trenches leading to the front lines were wiped out, and it had been necessary to bring up supplies and relief at night over a country blown into endless shell holes, many of which were filled to such a depth with water that men were drowned in them. White bits of broad tape could be seen here and there attached to the iron posts. There were for the purpose of guiding men up to the front line.

STREWN WITH BODIES.

These pathways over the fields of death also were strewn with fragments of human bodies. Some of the dead had the looks of mummies. One of the fallen soldiers had his right arm thrown over his rifle, as if his last impulse was to protect this weapon of defence. But there was no defence against the constant shelling. Some pieces of metal thrown about by the high explosive shells must have weighed at least ten pounds. The result of hitting a man with a ten pound bullet can easily be imagined.

At one point in the trenches was just the lower half of a German officer, identified by the boots and leggings he wore. His legs were crossed tailor fashion. Trench helmets of heavy steel had great holes torn in them.

The front line, of course, was seamed with the inevitable deep German dugouts, but even these had not been immune. There were hundreds of direct hits on top of them, which must have made life intensely miserable and hazardous within. Around the famous Butte de Warlencourt the German trenches have entirely disappeared. The entire fury of the Somme fighting once swirled about this somewhat insignificant mound of powdery chalk just off the Bapaume road, which is generally believed to have been an historic tomb. The battle now marks the death place not only of one supposedly distinguished prehistoric man, but thousands of young warriors.

The geographical paltriness of the butte de Warlencourt really emphasises the wonderful importance of any high bit of ground in stationary warfare.

The Somme battlefields to-day appear like some great refuse dump. Litter is strewn everywhere. The evacuated German back areas remind one strikingly of the scenes around a deserted mining camp in which the gold veins have given out.

HUN TREACHERY CAUSED WHOLESALE DEATHS IN OCCUPIED BELGIUM

American Relief Flour Stolen, and Sawdust Put in Its Place Killed Scores.

London Cable.——The Times is printing the narrative of an Englishman, J. F. Wiltaker, who has just escaped from Roubaix, where, he says, he lived for thirty months during the German occupation, without the Germans discovering his nationality.

Mr. Wiltaker describes to-day the time when the food supply ran out and the town was almost wholly dependent on the American Relief Commission. He says that, but for the commission, all the people would have starved, rich and poor alike.

"Unfortunately," says Mr. Whitaker, "there is evidence that the German army contrived to intercept for itself part of the food sent by the commission. One who had good reason to know told me that more than once trainloads of supplies which had left Brussels for Roubaix failed to arrive. Analysis of bread in some cases showed German rye flour, including 50 per cent. of sawdust, which had been substituted for white American flour, producing an indigestible and putty-like substance, which brought illness and death to many. The mortality from this cause was so great at one period that the grave diggers could not keep pace with it."

TORPEDOING OF THE ASTURIAS

Victims Did Not Believe Huns Would Do It.

Had No Warning—Ship Ablaze With Light.

London Cable says:—The survivors of the British hospital ship Asturias were landed at a village on the shore of an unnamed estuary. The villagers were aroused early in the morning by the noise of motor boats and other craft speeding to and fro, and hastened to the assistance of the refugees. As many as possible of the survivors were supplied with clothes and wraps, but the village wardrobes were soon exhausted, and quilts and blankets were called into service.

The refugees said that the torpedo which sank the hospital ship struck near the stern and almost missed. One of the women nurses on board, who was attached to the British field hospital in Serbia, said:

"We had no warning of any kind, and we thought that an hospital ship would be sacred even to the Germans. Of course we had heard threats to the contrary, but the thing seemed so utterly barbarous that I dismissed it from my mind. We sailed through the Bay of Biscay without fear, and without trying to avoid detection. When the Asturias was attacked she was blazing with light and easy to identify."

ASKS AMERICAN FARMERS' AID

British Food Production Head Wants 5,000

To Combat Hun Subs'. Starvation Plan.

London Cable says:—"Five thousand skilled American farmers on English soil would go a long way toward combating Germany's plan to starve us into submission through her submarines," Sir Arthur Lee, head of the newly-formed food production department, told the Associated Press correspondent.

"I told you recently," Sir Arthur continued, "that we intended to bring from America some two thousand tractor plows for night plowing. We need skilled American farmers to supplement them."

Sir Arthur Lee was British military attache with the United States army during the Spanish-American war, and later military attache at the British Embassy in Washington. He has seen service in the present war. His present post is an outgrowth of the intensified submarine warfare begun on Feb. 1. Sir Arthur is charged with the gigantic task of making every available foot of soil produce its maximum amount of food.

"I hope that we may be able to attract to these shores at least five thousand skilled farmers from the United States," said Sir Arthur. "We will, of course, get some skilled agricultural help from Canada—from the great Northwest—and we are already benefiting to some extent by the labor of Canadian farmers who have come over to fight for us. But we cannot have too many. Skilled farm labor is our crying need at this moment."

Sir Arthur said the introduction of the American tractors on the large scale contemplated would also witness the more universal employment of women on the land. "I hope to see," he said, "as many of our women cultivating the soil as I saw Frenchwomen on the land of glorious France during one of my recent visits. There I saw nothing but women. They were everywhere. The picture spoke volumes for France's effort. Our women are just as patriotic, and will fill the gaps on the land if only they are shown the way."

DENOUNCES CENSORSHIP

John Dillon Also Raps Policy re Saloniki.

Claims Government is Sup pressing News.

London Cable.——In the House of Commons this evening John Dillon, Nationalist, complained of the greatly increased stringency of the censorship during the past six months. The newspapers, Mr. Dillon charged, were being directed how to influence the opinions of their readers, and had received orders to suppress certain news.

The Government had extracted a page from Bismarck's book in its dealings with the press, Mr. Dillon continued. Instead of greater publicity concerning submarine losses, as had been promised by Sir Edward Carson, First Lord of the Admiralty, the country was getting far less information. The policy of the Government was to suppress the truth and circulate falsehoods. It had suppressed the truth about Russia, and with regard to the Saloniki expedition its policy was stark madness.

"In God's name," exclaimed Mr. Dillon, "solve this great Greek question one way or another."

Sir George Cave, Secretary of State for the Home Department, in defending the censorship from Mr. Dillon's charges, said he declined to believe that the British press would submit to being coerced in such a manner. He could say, without fear of contradiction Sir George added, that suppressed statements were those that either were wholly untrue or the publication of which would be prejudicial to the conduct of the war or Great Britain's relations with her Allies.

The question of losses inflicted by submarines, said Sir George, was not the concern of the censorship but of the Admiralty alone and he was satisfied that Sir Edward Carson was giving out all the information that he could with safety without injuring the allied cause by disclosing information to the Teutonic allies.

FOR COMPULSION.

Question May Be be Re Sub mitte din Australia.

Melbourne, Australia, Cable.—(via Reuter's Ottawa Agency)—Premier Hughes addressed a meeting of three thousand people at Bendigo to-day. The audience was most enthusiastic, singing the National Anthem, waving flags, and cheering for the Allies.

Mr. Hughes' announcement that the question of compulsion might again be submitted to the electorate was continuously cheered. He eloquently appealed for whole-hearted co-operation of the people of Australia to assist in the conduct of the war with means, men, money and production. He urged organized efforts to increase the supply of foods and general products to help the empire.

The Premier denounced the methods of the Labor party caucus, declaring that every loyal Australian felt humiliated because the authorities in the Senate had prevented Australian representation at the Imperial conference in London. In order to refute false statements, Mr. Hughes announced that the soldiers' vote on the conscription referendum was 72,000 for and 58,000 against. The announcement was loudly cheered.

WHITE POWDER CASE.

Former Backers of Blanche Withdraw.

London Cable.——When the Government inquiry into the Maltalite, or white powder, syndicate was resumed to-day, Sir Theodore Cook and other former backers of Joseph C. Blanche, withdrew from the case. This step left Blanche alone in his effort to prove the charges that the British military authorities had failed to make use of his explosive, and had prevented him from introducing it to France. In view of the statements on behalf of the Government on Monday that the white powder invented by Blanche was dangerous and useless, Sir Theodore, who was chairman of the syndicate, and his associates, apologized to the Government and others concerned stating that owing to lack of information they had been induced to take a position, which the facts revealed by the Government showed was entirely wrong. They said they would be glad to give the Government every assistance in their power in the further procedure.

WILL GIVE UP.

Hun Plotters at 'Frisco to Seek Internment.

San Francisco, Report.— Federal authorities said to-day it was probable that Lieut. Wilhelm von Brincken, German consular attache, who was convicted several weeks ago, together with Franz Bopp, former German Consul-General here, and others, of violation of American neutrality, would seek voluntary internment.

"It is said that Von Brincken had been notified that his bonds of $25,000 were to be recalled by the bonding company.

Bopp and all the others convicted also are out on bond pending appeal.

BELGIAN SLAVES DIE BY SCORES IN THEIR PRISONS IN GERMANY

Trustworthy Secret Letters Tell Awful Tales of Their Sufferings.

Havre, France, Cable.——The Belgian Government has received by trustworthy means letters from responsible Belgians who have been deported to Germany. The letters, dated at the end of February or early in March, were written from the camps in which the men are being confined. Some passages follow:

"Since Feb. 1 we have had only two meals a day. The one in the evening has been discontinued. That was the best one, because we had corn."

From another letter: "It is frightful here. We are dying of famine. We have a ration of bread, water, and beets. That is all. We are skeletons covered with skin. Thirteen were counted in the morgue yesterday, and fourteen to-day. That is from among the 3,000 or 4,000 here. Conditions are more frightful in the —— and —— camps. If anyone gives us a little soup or something else to eat, he is punished with five days in prison."

From another letter: "The situation becomes more and more unendurable from day to day. Every morning two or three dead are found in the huts. The doctors decline all responsibility. To-day 120 are dead at Camp ——. We hope for our deliverance by the great offensive."

AN ARMY LIKE "IRONSIDES"

Russ Forces to Be Governed as Were Cromwell's,

By Committee of Officers and Men.

Petrograd Cable says—Gen. Alexieff, who is temporarily in chief command, is doing his utmost to bring the armies of new Russia up to the highest standard of efficiency. It has been arranged that each regiment shall have a committee composed of elected officers and men to act as a conciliation board respecting matters at the various fronts and headquarters. These committees will be subject to an elected chief committee of officers and men attached to the staffs of the various front and headquarters. At present a patriotic feeling is passing over the whole of Russia. All officials, even the Ministry, are working night and day to establish order out of chaos. This tremendous work is already bearing fruit in all directions, and the general situation is undoubtedly improving.

The arrest is announced of three prominent Russian military officers, General Schlewan, who suppressed the revolution of 1905; Gen. Stegel, who was military commander of Kharkov fortress, and Gen. Mrosovsky.

The executive committee at Kiev has ordered the domiciliary arrest at a hotel there of Gen. N. Ivanoff, former commander of the Russian armies in Volhynia and Galicia. The committee has telegraphed the Government for instructions.

Returns from the State Bank and other statistics show that the revolution produced no serious disturbance of the Russian market. Private deposits have shown an increase instead, as might have been expected, a decrease, and discount operations have proceeded almost without change.

ARTHUR FREE IS A SUICIDE

Man Awaiting Trial for Seeley's Bay Murder

Hangs Himself in Jail at Brockville.

Brockville, Ont., Report.——Arthur Free, who was on Monday committed to stand trial for the murder of Mrs. Hattie Hill at Seeley's Bay on March 2, committed suicide by hanging himself to the bars of his cell with a bed sheet during the night in the county jail here. No extra guard was placed on the prisoner, and last night he retired about 7 o'clock, apparently in good health and his customary spirits. This morning about 7 o'clock he was found by the turnkey hanging from the bars and was beyond the aid of Coroner Harding and Dr. Horton, who were called in. An inquest was ordered to be held at noon to-day.

Free disappeared from his home at Seeley's Bay three days after the crime, on the day the inquest was held, and as he did not appear at the inquest Coroner Young issued a warrant for his apprehension. After a twelve-day chase through the district and in northern New York, Free was captured in a barber shop at Cape Vincent, N. Y., on March 17, and on the following Monday was brought to Brockville by Provincial Detective Boyd, of Toronto, and Constable Brady of Seeley's Bay. During the preliminary hearing Free did not appear to realize the gravity of the situation. He made no statement. He was about 25 years old, and his wife and parents reside near Seeley's Bay.

BOMB PLOTERS.

Made Fire Bombs On a German Boat.

New York Report.—After a statement had been admitted in evidence that 200 shells for fire bombs had been manufactured in twelve days on board a German merchant ship, tied up at Hoboken, N. J., the Government to-day closed its case against Captain Charles von Kleist and five other Germans on trial for conspiracy to destroy vessels carrying munitions from American ports to the Entente Allies.

Captain von Kleist, when called to the stand, told of having been approached in March, 1915, by Dr. Walter T. Scheele, who informed him he "wanted a good man to go into the fertilizer business in Hoboken."

Dr. Scheele, who was indicted with von Kleist and the others, fled from Hoboken when the alleged bomb plot was disclosed, and is now believed to be in Mexico.

PRUSSIAN PARTY SPLIT.

Amsterdam, Cable.—A crisis has broken out in the Conservative party ranks in the Upper Chamber of the Prussian Diet, "over the speech of Count Yorck von Wartenburg, and the attitude of the party leader, Herr von Buch, who are both opposed to the Chancellor's idea of reform," says a Berlin despatch to the Cologne Gazette.

Both the members named have resigned their leadership, the despatch adds.

KNOW NOTHING OF PEACE MOVE

U. S. Government Sees No Change in Situation.

Resolution Declaring State of War Expected.

Washington despatch says: It was learned accurately to-day that the American Government has no knowledge of any development likely to come before Congress convenes which would change the present situation between the United States and Germany.

If Germany contemplates any sort of peace move or has considered abandoning submarine ruthlessness, or if any other nation has a step in mind designed to alter the present international status, the Government is without information on the subject.

Except for information concerning German plots against American interests, it was learned, the public in a general way knows as much as the Government about everything directly affecting the present crisis. Concerning German intrigues in this and other countries, the Government has much information, which up to the present it has not thought it wise to make public.

President Wilson to-day continued conferences with his advisers preparatory to writing the address he will deliver to Congress next week.

The Administration is said to be chiefly concerned at present with the form of action to be taken by Congress recognizing that Germany is making war on the United States and with preparedness measures. Aggressive steps, while being carefully considered, are understood to be looked upon as questions for determination after Congress has defined the status of the nation.

Whether suggestions that a huge loan of gift of money to one or more of the Entente Allies should be adopted, whether an army should be sent abroad, and whether increased supplies of munitions should be forwarded, are generally regarded as questions which would only confuse the issue if pressed to decision now.

The President has told no one just what his message to Congress will include. It is expected to review the history of the negotiations with Germany, leading up to the present situation, and submit what he believes Congress should do. The preponderance of opinion still is that Congress will adopt a resolution declaring that a state of war exists.

On leaving the White House Senator Husting said he could not give the President's views, but that his personal opinion was that Germany is making war on the United States and that the United States should recognize the fact. He added that he believed the people of the west are ready to support the President fully.

THAW HALTS A DRIVE ON RUSS

A London cable: An early spring thaw on the Russian front, from the Baltic Sea to the Carpathian Mountains, has rendered impossible for the present any attack in force by the Germans against the Russians. This seemingly puts at naught for the time being at least the reported intentions of the Germans to attempt to force their way from the Riga region toward Petrograd. Minor operations are in progress, however.

In Roumania fighting continues in the Fant valley region. Here the Germans have captured from the Russians a strongly entrenched ridge, and held it despite numerous counter attacks, according to Berlin. One hundred prisoners and machine guns and mine-throwers fell into the hands of the Germans.

The skin of a boiled egg, moistened and applied to a boil, will cause suppuration and relieve soreness in a few hours. It is also an excellent application for nasty or inflamed eyelids.

$500,000,000 FROM INDIA FOR EMPIRE

Magnificent Offer for the Financing of the War Wins Praise.

THE TIGRIS FIGHT

Legislative Council Overjoyed at the Retrieving of Army's Fame.

London Cable.——A special despatch from Delhi reports the final meeting of the session of the Legislative Council of India, at which stirring speeches were delivered by the Viceroy and members of the Council in reference to the new taxation measure and the participation of India in the war. The despatch says:

"At the Legislative Council's closing meeting to-day several members declared that the manner in which the new taxation proposals had been received was proof of the enthusiasm and patriotism of the people. Great satisfaction was expressed that no further burdens were placed on the poorer classes of the community, although some members deplored the raising of railway rates and urged development of the general industries of the country.

ACTION ON COTTON DUTIES.

"Many of the speakers expressed the grateful thanks of the country to Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Secretary of State for India, for his "firm and just action" in the matter of the cotton duties. They said that the attitude of the Lancashire cotton manufacturers in opposing the Indian tax on imported cottons showed a want of knowledge of Indian affairs.

"All the speeches contained expressions of patriotism and loyalty, and voiced the willingness of the people to share the burdens of the Empire.

"Lord Chelmsford in closing the session said he was glad to find that the offer of £100,000,000 to the Imperial Government had met with practically the unanimous accord of the Council. There would be sacrifices in the necessities of ordered Government, namely, in education, sanitation, public works, etc., but these sacrifices were trifling compared with those of other countries. Thrown back upon herself, he said, India had already increased the output of her industries a hundred fold. In fact, he believed the war would prove the date of India's industrial birth. He urged that it was the duty of everyone to subscribe to the war loan.

"Alluding to the cotton duty, the Viceroy said that a grievance had been removed which had been a long-standing source of irritation, but the whole question of duties would be considered after the war. He added that the Imperial Government could not, in existing circumstances, do more. But the history of this incident is highly encouraging to India, proving that she had true and staunch friends, and that her interests would be stoutly defended when the fiscal system came to be renewed.

NADIR OF INDIA'S FORTUNES.

"Alluding to the gallantry and endurance of the troops in Mesopotamia, he said that the fall of Kut marked the nadir of India's fortunes. The Indian army had been bled white in providing troops and equipment for the four fronts; the breakdown of medical arrangements had brought a storm of obloquy on the Indian Administration; the hardships of the summer had sapped the strength of the troops, and the sick had poured into India. All this, he said, had been remedied. Lord Chelmsford paid a high tribute to the labors of the past and present Commanders-in-Chief, Gen. Sir Beauchamp Duff and Gen. Sir Charles Monro, who had enabled Gen. Maude's heroic troops to achieve success and victory.

"The Viceroy concluded by reading a message from Premier Lloyd George, expressing on behalf of the British Government the most sincere gratitude for the magnificent contribution which India had just made towards financing the war.

"'Coming in addition to the enthusiasm and loyalty manifested through India on the outbreak of the war, and the invaluable military services rendered by the Indian army, the Viceroy said the Premier's message, is moving proof that India shares whole-heartedly with other subjects of the Crown the ideals for which we are fighting. That India should come forward of her own accord, in this crisis, and render such real and opportune assistance, is not only a source of sincere gratification to his Majesty's Government, but must produce a better understanding among all races and people under the British Crown.'"

RUBBER FOR HUNS.

Four Men Arrested at New York for Their Plots.

New York Report says—Four men were taken to police headquarters here to-day charged with conspiracy to ship rubber secretly to Germany. In two trunks and a phonograph seized on board a steamship plying between this port and Norway the police say they found sheets of rubber and many letters and memoranda written in German. The trunks had secret compartments. Those arrested were Joseph Newman, an exporter of this city; Oscar M. Newman, his brother; Ragnvald R. Henszen, chief steward of the ship, and William Hebb.

The defendants were arraigned before a United States commissioner late to-day and each held in $3,000 bail for examination on April 3rd.

The bad roads advocates should be happy now.

Peter McArthur, in his article in The Globe believes the people of Canada could throw off the Rake-offs here as Russia did the Romanoffs, if we only tried. Trouble is, quite a large number of Canadians are barking at the Rake-offs, hoping that they might get a place in the throng. The Rake offs we'll have always with us. They are found in all classes of our people, only more so in politicians and their followers.

It might be timely for The Times to draw the attention of some of our men in the district that it is unwise to take too many chances with the booze. The fines are heavy, and they will come sooner or later. It should be considered a privilege by all to assist in cleaning up an evil which has existed for generations. The government deserves the support of every one Don't take chances on supposedly secret violations.

Regarding the Patriotic campaigns The London Advertiser says that two of their prominent townsmen while in Toronto found out that the Provincial Government was paying the whole cost of advertising campaigns put on by the large cities, and that London was entitled to it. We would suppose that this would account for the big advertising done in the Toronto press for the Patriotic and Red Cross campaign a short time ago. Most places in Ontario will be grateful to The London Advertiser for making the fact public. But just why the Provincial government should pay for the fanciful notions in advertising which some of the large city advertising men may have, would be interesting.

In December last the Bruce Preparedness League, by resolution, asked the Department of Militia to enquire into the report that many young men were leaving Canada for the United States. It has taken quite awhile to get action, but better late than never After May 1st all Canadians who pass into the United States must present identification cards. These of course will be tabulated and the government will know exactly how many Canadians, and who they are, have gone to the United States The Bruce Preparedness will prove a benefit, not only to Bruce County, but nationally. During the past winter it kept the county free from a lot of unnecessary organizations which city enthusiasts want to form every now and then, and which as a general thing only muddle the people. The League is being generally recognized, and its consent is sought before any object desiring county support is undertaken. It is unfortunate and regretted that its president, Judge Klein, has been laid aside for the past few months through illness.

If 22 out of the 33 members of Bruce County Council vote for a Good Roads scheme at the June session in Chesley, this county will be among the first to take advantage of the new Highways Act which changes the Govt. grant for a trunk road from 40 to 60 for construction and 20 to 60 p.c. for maintenance. The probability is Bruce will not much longer remain outside. Public opinion is working hard with members of the County Council who are against the scheme, to drop their opposition. Bad roads advocates are finding the going very hard.

Some persons are fearful that if the main roads are assumed by the good roads scheme that the side and back roads might be neglected. On the contrary, the assumption of the main roads by the Provincial scheme will simply leave the side and back roads all the townships have to look after, and should make them much better than they are now. At present most councils are busy looking after the main roads, in fact most all the money and labor is spent on the front roads. The good roads scheme provides better back roads.

Civilizing Us

The Ontario government is to inaugurate a series of rural reforms. Just what it is that we suffering from in the country we do not know, but, of course, the genteel city chap knows all about it. One splendid trait in the character of the farmer and those dwelling in the rural places, is the forbearing way in which these people overlook the bombacity of the city folk who see so many evils in the rural districts and who know just the remedy. About crop time the city press sends along a young chap who is just bubbling over with farm knowledge. He drives along the main road, imagines an interview with a farmer, and lo and behold, next morning we know by reading the heading and date line that he has been here, and if we are foolish enough to read the spasm we find we have lost the time and gained a laugh. But a new idea has come along, and this is serious. Government officials are going to reform our people, and rural life is to be made more pleasant Pleasant, mind you! The farmer must have hot and cold water in his house through a waterworks plant, and they tell us under the new plan it is easy. They tell us that the Women's Institutes are to be entrusted with the task of seeing that the farmers install these plants. We are to have social centres in villages and country cross-roads, and it is proposed to use schools, churches and the grounds about them for this purpose.

Dr. Creelman says: "Moving picture shows, lectures, debating and recreation clubs all form part of the scheme. Farmers' sons and daughters who have been to high school, the Ontario Agricultural College or other institutions of learning, will no longer feel the want of mental stimulus on the land. There will be play for social and intellectual inclination. Something of the outside world will be brought to them. The fundamental industry of the Province will be linked up with the thought and progress of the day."

Bringing the outside world to us! Linking us up with the thought and progress of the day! Ye gods and little fishes, no wonder we are restless. And yet if these men who are going to do all these things to us, should come to see us we would summon all the boys, both Grit and Tory, from Bruce, Saugeen and Arran, to join in giving these saviors of the country people a real nice evening and send them on their way rejoicing. But then, who expects these benefactors would want to visit the country? As long as paper is plentiful, plans can be made on it.

Col. Hugh Clark Secy. for external affairs, was in town on Friday afternoon, meeting his friends. He attended a "smoker" given by Southampton Conservatives, on the evening. Mr. Clark is looking extremely well.

What Would You Do?

IF you caught your dog sucking eggs what would you do? If you caught the cat stealing cream would you do anything to stop her? You would—even though your actual loss were small.

Well, just sit down with paper and pencil and figure up what it means to you to lose 15 to 35 per cent of your cream, as you now do, by going without a cream separator.

We know you are busy and have many things to watch, but this cream loss is really serious enough and big enough to have your entire attention until it is stopped.

We know that a DeLaval in use is the best proof that can be given that this machine offers the most value in skimming efficiency, quality of cream produced, length of time it will last, and ease with which it may be operated and taken care of. You will surely agree that it is only sound business sense to see and try a De Laval.

Comrades!
If you cannot carry a rifle, you can serve your country on the farm.

"The plow is our hope," declared Right Hon. David Lloyd George, the Prime Minister of Great-Britain. The tremendous significance of these words in the face of a world shortage of food must be a matter of concern to all. It points out the path of duty to men and boys unable to enlist in the army but capable of helping to increase production.

Help the farmer increase production

At this supreme hour when ample food production is one of the indispensable means of victory, the country faces a serious shortage of men and boys on the farms. The Department of Agriculture emphasizes the urgency of every man and boy taking to heart this splendid opportunity for patriotic service.

Boys Decide now to help in the war. If you are between the ages of 14 and 18, and have good term record, you can secure promotion at school by enlisting for farm service any time between April 20th and May 20th.

Parents are urged to encourage their boys to enlist for farm service. The physical and moral welfare of your boy will be advanced by a summer spent close to Nature; an interest will be awakened in an important industry of the country that will be a help to him in his whole future.

Men The Department appeals to retired farmers, to men following no occupation (retired), to business men who can spare at least a portion of their time, to all men who can arrange their affairs so as to help some farmer. Every man is invited to enlist for farm service.

Confer with your District Representative of the Department of Agriculture, or write or visit Ontario Government Employment Bureau, 15 Queen's Park, Toronto.

The returned soldiers were entitled to these jobs hereafter, and he asked the wirepullers to please take notice and disperse. He also hit at heads not a hundred miles from Walkerton when he said that any officeholders receiving $2000 and over shouldn't be allowed to run a side-show in opposition to other taxpayers who were helping to pay his salary, but that if he wasn't satisfied with Govt. pay he should give the job to a returned soldiers.

Last week the council very properly notified the public that anyone found tapping the maple trees on the streets would be prosecuted. This was the proper step to take, but a great deal of damage has been done, because the threat was made sooner, and it may be necessary to even yet prosecute some. If the trees have been tapped thoughtlessly, would it be too much to ask that the tap holes be filled. The damage is done by leaving the holes open.

Cincinnati man tells how to shrivel up corns or calluses so they lift off with fingers.

Ouch ! ! ! ! ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender, aching corn or hardened callus stops soreness at once, and soon the corn or callus dries up and lifts right off without pain.

He says freezone dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any drug store, but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels. If your druggist doesn't have freezone tell him to order a small bottle for you.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON II. April 8, 1917

Jesus raises Lazarus from the dead—Easter Lesson.—John 11, 17-44.

COMMENTARY.—I. Mourning over the death of Lazarus (vs. 17-19). 17. When Jesus came—Jesus had been at Bethabara in Perea, the place where John the Baptist had preached and baptized. He went there from Jerusalem where the Jews had tried to arrest him (John 10:39, 40). He did not enter into Bethany, but came into the vicinity. Four days—It was told Jesus that Lazarus had lain in the grave four days, though he knew it without being told. Lazarus must have died on the day that messengers told Jesus he was sick. Jesus tarried two days and occupied one day in journeying to Bethany, making four in all. It is the custom in that country to bury the dead on the day that death takes place, for decomposition speedily follows. 18. Bethany—The name means "house of dates," probably from the abundance of date palms formerly growing there. It is on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives. It is now a wretched Moslem village. The Arabic name is El-Azariyeh, or The Lazarus. Fifteen furlongs—One and seven-eighths miles. 19. Came to Martha and Mary—The family must have been prominent in the community and well thought of by the Jews, even though they were in close close friendship with Jesus. To comfort them concerning their brother—It was part of the Jewish cermonial of mourning that many, ten at least, should come and console (Gen. 37: 35; 2 Sam. 12: 17; Job 2, 11). It is said that the usual period of mourning was thirty days; three of weeping, seven of lamentation, twenty of sorrow. But the instances in scripture vary.—Cam. Bib.

II. Resurrection Power in Jesus (vs. 20-32). 20. Martha—went and met him—Jesus halted outside the village, and as soon as Martha heard of his coming she went to meet him. "Her position here, it may be said, is obviously that of the elder sister, the head and manager of the household."—Smith. It is natural that she should be the first to go forth to meet the Master. Mary still sat in the house (R. V.)—The same characteristics of Martha and Mary, respectively, are seen here in the incident described in Luke 10: 38-42. The sitting posture was usually assumed by those who were mourning. 21. Lord—Master. If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died—Martha does not reproach Jesus for not having come, but regrets that he was not present to heal him while he was sick. There was not time for Jesus to reach him after word was sent to him that Lazarus was ill. She expressed her confidence in his healing power, but supposed that he must be present in person to do the work. 22. Whatsoever thou wilt ask of God—Her words indicate that she believed Jesus could ask the Father to raise the brother from the dead and his prayer would be answered. She had probably heard of the raising to life of the son of the widow of Nain and of the daughter of Jairus. She must have known of the Old Testament miracles of resurrection from the dead. Her declaration of faith must have been pleasing to him. 23. Thy brother shall rise again—Although Martha understood these words to refer to the final resurrection of the dead, she must have been comforted; yet it is evident that Jesus was giving her the promise of raising Lazarus to life. 24. I know that he shall rise again—Martha did not belong to the Sadducean sect of the Jews, for she believed in the resurrection of the dead. She was assured that Lazarus would be raised "in the resurrection at the last day." That did not satisfy her present desire. She longed for his restoration to life at once.

25. Jesus said unto her—He recognized the deep agitation of her soul and spoke the word that must have moved her deepest moral and spiritual nature, as it has moved hearts all down the ages. I am the resurrection, and the life—Note the use of the definite article in connection with the words resurrection and life. Jesus is the only source of life. He is the giver of life and the restorer of it. Jesus employs the present tense, saying, "I am," not, "I will be." He gave Martha to know that He had, at that very instant, power to restore Lazarus to life. He that believeth in Me—To believe in Jesus then was to accept Him as the Messiah, to acknowledge His divine power and to receive Him as Saviour and Lord. To believe in Jesus now means the same. The believer submits fully to the divine will and becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus. Though he were dead—"Though he die."—R. V. Jesus did not assure men that they would not die physically. Yet shall he live—Believers in Jesus did not assure men that they would not die physically. Yet shall he live—Believers in Jesus are not immune from physical death, but they are not subject to eternal death. They are spiritually alive and He who is the source of all life dwells in them. 26. Whosoever liveth—Physically. Shall never die—Believers in Christ shall never die eternally. Believest thou this—Jesus had given utterance to most profound truths, applicable to individuals, and He asked Martha, to whom he was speaking, if she believed what He had said. The importance and efficacy of faith can not be overestimated. 27. Yea, Lord—The question Jesus put to Martha was direct and pointed, and the reply she gave was no less so. The blessing that comes to the soul that thus implicitly believes in Jesus is inexpressibly great. It is only when one becomes thoroughly submissive and trustful that this heart cry, "Yea, Lord," is uttered. Thou art the Christ—Whether or not Martha had fully grasped the sublime truths which her Lord had spoken, she grasped the thought of His Messiahship and declared her faith in Him. 28-32. Martha's interview with Jesus was deeply comforting to her. From it she returned to her sister and told her that the Master was calling for her. She went quickly to meet Him and when she saw Him, she made the same statement that Martha had made before her, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Jesus was soon to disclose to her and Martha and to all the world His power over death. Such a manifestation of His power would confirm the faith of His disciples in His Messiahship, and would declare His divinity to all the ages.

III. Lazarus raised to life (vs. 33-44). 33-42. Jesus saw Mary weeping, and the Jews who came with her were also weeping in sympathy for her. He was deeply moved, and we have an exhibition of his sympathy for the sorrowing. "Jesus wept," and the Jews were convinced of his love for Lazarus. They asked among themselves if he who had given sight to the blind could not have kept Lazarus from dying. Upon his arrival at the cave which formed the tomb of Lazarus, he ordered that the stone which covered the entrance should be taken away. Martha's objection that the body had already become decomposed was met by the words of Jesus. "Said I not unto thee that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" When the stone was removed, Jesus offered a prayer of thanksgiving to the Father for hearing him. 43. When he had thus spoken—With the Father. He cried with a loud voice—It was unusual for Jesus to speak in loud tones, but he spoke thus on this occasion that all the people assembled might hear. Lazarus, come forth—The voice of Jesus reached the ears of the living about the tomb and it reached also into the abode of the dead. It was a commanding, authoritative voice. The call was for Lazarus to come forth from the state of death into life—from the tomb to the realm of the living. 44. He .... came forth—He who utter the command, "come forth," imparted the life that enabled the dead to obey. Bound ....with graveclothes—His hands and feet were probably wound separately with strips of cloth, holding the spices in place. Face was bound about with a napkin—The cloth was placed under the chin and fastened over the head. Loose him—Jesus gave directions to have the grave clothes removed from the living Lazarus, for they were no longer needed.

Questions.—Where was the home of Lazarus? Where was Jesus when word came to him that Lazarus was sick? Why did not Jesus go at once to him? Relate the conversation between Jesus and Martha. What did Mary say to Jesus? Why did the Jews conclude that Jesus loved Lazarus? Describe the raising of Lazarus to life. What effect did it have upon the opposers of Jesus?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—A sympathizing Saviour.

I. Sounded the depths of human woe.

II. Established faith in himself.

I. Sounded the depths of human woe. As soon as Martha and Mary apprehended danger, they sent for Jesus. Two sharply contrasted types of natural character are exhibited in these two sisters. Martha's creed was sound, but not complete. She thought clearly, professed her faith with boldness, with no hesitation or qualification. Jesus did not minister to Mary by discourse as he did to Martha. He dealt with her according to her nature and temperament. Martha had fully grasped what Jesus was in relation to God, but not what he was in himself, the Source and Giver of life. Her faith had not risen to the divinity of his Person and mission. Her love was stronger than her faith. She did not see the connection between Christ's delay and the good of all concerned. Jesus did not try to annihilate Martha's grief, but to infuse it with another spirit. The death of Lazarus had spread a dark shadow over the hearts of many. Jesus beheld death in all its dread significance as the wages which sin had wrought. Humanity in all its sin and misery was portrayed in that gathering at the grave of Lazarus. Jesus knew how much the darkness and sorrows of death were intensified and aggravated by the state of ignorance and unbelief in which the world lay. His grief was connected with man's misery. While in his divine thought and sorrow Jesus penetrated to the root and source of all evil, the mighty attendant suffering awoke in him the truest and deepest compassion and tenderness toward all men. His tears were human, but his compassion and sympathy were divine. By his example he gave sanction and limit to sorrow, the limits in which sorrow is sacred and hallowing, and beyond which it is harmful and weakening. The heart which found expression for its woe in tears found expression for its sympathy and pity in the reaching out a hand to help.

II. Established faith in Himself. As it regarded the manifestation of the glory of God, the arrival of Jesus was neither too early nor too late. By His delay Jesus tried the character of all who knew the case. The restoration of Lazarus from death was more beneficial to faith than His preservation from it would have been. The growth and confirmation of their faith involved their greatest good. This alone could bring them into closer union with Christ and with the Father and open to them the door of the spiritual kingdom and fully present to their view the grand and real visions of Jesus as their King in all his beauty. Martha set a practical bound to Jesus' words. She set his promise in the remote future and made it impersonal, placing Lazarus with all the other dead. That which lifted her beyond the atmosphere of doubt was Jesus' exposition of the things concerning Himself. His first purpose was to get their minds away from death. His next purpose was to get them to identify Himself with the resurrection. Jesus set before Martha a specific fact and challenged her faith on definite teaching about Himself. He called upon her to believe in His personal, present power and the union of His people with Himself. Jesus connected the seeing of God's glory with the exercise of faith. The words of Jesus at the grave expressed His recognition of God as His Father, his consciousness of the Father's regard and His consideration of the people, in His devotion. By a natural, filial instinct his heart rose out of its depression into confident communion with His Father. His solemn thanksgiving expressed gratitude for the assurance of power to accomplish the miracle, confidence that as the Son He always stood within the Father's favor, care for the multitude that they might be prepared to believe when they beheld the stupendous miracle. The Sun of Righteousness shone in full splendor when He exerted His power over the grave and burst asunder the bands of death. Following the manifestation of Jesus' humanity was the manifestation of His divinity. On His humanity weeping. At the grave, in His divinity, He called the dead to life, a royal command befitting the majesty of God. It was just for that reason the Jews were hostile and charged Him with blasphemy.—T.R.A.

BEEF CATTLE SITUATION=DURING WAR AND AFTER

Holdings Are Badly Depleted, European Herds are Decimated, and Demand Will Soon be Satisfied—Breed Well, Feed Well and Weed Well is One Expert's Advice.

(By John Gardhouse.)

During the last five years there has been a marked decrease in beef cattle holdings in Canada—some 600,000 fewer cattle being held now than in 1912. In all provinces except Saskatchewan and Alberta this decrease has been general, but was far more marked in Ontario than in any other. We find, moreover, that there exists a great shortage of best beef the world over. When the war is ended this shortage will be felt very keenly, not only in this country, but all over the continent of Europe as well. Therefore we are safe in saying that there never was a time in the history of the country when it was of as great importance as it is at present for the people of Canada to think, and think most seriously, of the position this country is likely to be in with reference to the future supply of beef producing animals.

HOW CANADIANS MAY BENEFIT

We are now in the third year of the greatest war the world has ever known, and which has in several ways had its effect on the beef supply of the world. In consequence, we find that breeding operations are completely disorganized, especially in the countries where the war is raging. It will be impossible in those countries, even under the most favorable conditions, to get back to the breeding of anything like a reasonable supply of good beef cattle for some time after the cessation of hostilities; and that points out the road to opportunity to Canadians. Most of the European countries will have to get part of their breeding stock at least from this North American continent in order to build up their herds again, and may be compelled to buy large stores of the beef which will be required in these countries as well. There is no reason why Canadians should not secure an important part of this trade, providing we breed and feed the proper type of animal.

I know I am safe in saying that it is most important from the standpoint of the individual farmer and of the nation as well, that a solid foundation should be laid by the conservation of all good breeding females possible. As a war measure the British Government has already imposed restrictions against the slaughter of calves and females. I am afraid that a measure of this kind, even in war times, would not be advisable in this country. Yet we have only to visit some of the live stock markets to find that even at this [illegible] a great many calves of the beef breeds, and large numbers of useful heifers and cows, which should be spared, are finding their way to the block. We continually face the danger involved in the loss of such large numbers of good beef bred calves, and in the slaughter of very many breedy and serviceable cows and heifers, many of which are in calf when slaughtered. This is certainly short-sighted practice—to say the least—on the part of those who sell them, and is a most serious loss to the country at large.

EXPORTATION OF FEEDING CATTLE.

In the matter of exportation of our stockers and feeders we find as a result of this business, that large numbers of young, unfinished stuff have been dumped on the market at a time when prices are ordinarily the lowest. In 1915 there were exported from Western Canada to the United States 96,499 head, and of this number probably 70 per cent. were stockers and feeders. And, as you will no doubt remember, there was an abundant supply of all kinds of feed for live stock at that time. Fortunately we find that the recent campaign carried on by the Live Stock Branch, Ottawa, to conserve as far as possible the breeding stock, has had a very beneficial effect.

In spite of the fact that the census of June 10th last shows a heavy decrease in the total number of beef cattle within the Dominion, the marketings at the different stock yards in Canada during the past year have been exceptionally heavy especially so during the last few months—partially on account of the scarcity and high prices obtainable for meat producing animals. Due to these high prices it has been an exceptionally good year for beef raisers, even though large numbers of unfinished animals have been conspicuous at practically all the markets. Many farmers, we believe, might have made even more money had they not been in such a hurry to send their stock to market, but had spent a little more time and money in properly finishing them.

A noticeable feature of the year has been the splendid trade in pure bred cattle at fairly high prices. I have been informed by the accountant, that registrations in the beef breeds in 1916 have increased 4,431 over those in 1915. There is every reason to believe that the trade for commercial stock will be maintained, at very profitable rates.

With so many men taken from the land by the war, including experts in breeding and feeding, it is perhaps more than ever necessary, that careful attention should be given to the breeding and feeding of the right type of animal, as it is only by maintaining animals in a thoroughly healthy condition, that the best and most profitable results can be secured. I trust that those who remain at home will render no less valuable aid by helping to maintain and increase, in every way possible, not only the live stock of the country, but the yield from the land as well. The importance of renewed exertion on the part of every Canadian farmer and live stock man cannot be overestimated.

Considering the high price of feed, and the scarcity of labor, it is more than ever essential to this country that nothing but the right type of pure bred sires should be used, and it is just as important that liberal yet economical feeding be practised, in order to obtain the best results, with the least possible waste.

For profitable feeding we must have animals that are "good doers." Breeding the cows to the right kind of bull, therefore, is more than half the battle.

MUST CONSERVE GOOD FEMALES

Considering that there are not enough beef producing animals to supply the normal demand, the following facts stand forth clearly: 1st. Prices will continue high; as long as the supply is not equal to the demand we cannot expect anything but high prices. 2nd. The high market prices are bound to continue to have the effect of drawing from the breeder many good cows and heifers which should be retained for breeding purposes. 3rd. The fact that so many good females find their way to the block will have a tendency to keep the supply down for perhaps a number of years. 4th. It is well to keep in mind the length of time it requires to produce a good beef-bullock. 5th. Looking to the future, with the evidence we have before us, we may safely predict that for some years to come, beef cattle will be scarce and high, and it will be good business, both from the standpoint of the breeder and farmer, as well as of the nation, to breed all good cattle possible, retain the females, and feed and care for them well.

A DARING FEAT.

Marvelous Swordsmanship of an Indian Sergeant.

Indian swordsmen are acknowledged to be unrivalled. An extraordinary performer, who was a sergeant in one of the native regiments, is thus spoken of in Colonel Barras' book, "India and Tiger Hunting": "He was a fine-looking fellow, in the prime of life and, notwithstanding the frightfully critical nature of what he was going to do, he moved about with perfect ease and calmness. In one hand he held a very long double-edged sword, sharp at the point and with edges like razors. With the other hand he led his little son, a child aged about six years, who was also clearly accustomed to what was about to follow.

"From the little fellow's evident enjoyment of the scene it was plain that failure on the part of his father was quite beyond the limits of his imagination. As soon as the usual preliminaries had been gone through, such as walking around and salaaming to the commanding officer and principal officers, the father placed his little boy in the centre of a circle, with a small lime (a kind of lemon), about twice the size of a walnut, under his heel.

"Then, taking up his stand at a few feet from the child, he grasped firmly the hilt of the sword and began brandishing it rapidly in the air. The blade was thin and finely tempered, so that it could be seen to quiver and undulate throughout its entire length as it flashed in the rays of the setting sun. Suddenly the muscles of the athlete might be seen to stiffen themselves; an instant's pause, then a sudden and lightning like swoop, and the lime under the boy's heel was cleanly severed.

"Then, the boy having taken up his position as before, a small open box, about the size of those we use for tooth powder, was placed on the ground at his feet. It was filled with a black powder called soorma, used by the natives for darkening eyelashes. Round this little box and about the boy's head the sword was now made to play with redoubled velocity. In the midst of the most dazzling passes the weapon would dart towards the little box, and then reappear, steadily poised, as the full stretch of the professor's eyes, in front of the eyes of the child; then a sudden turn of the wrist, and a very dark line of powder was lying on one of the boy's lower eyelashes, placed there by the sharp point of the long sword. The same was then done to the other eye. This feat was performed weekly, always with undeviating success, and was the most wonderful instance of nerve and steadiness ever witnessed."

Camels and Dromedaries.

No matter to what extent the railway may be constructed in certain parts of the world, the camel will probably never cease to be the principal means of transportation in the Desert, over the greater portion of Egypt and the Soudan.

The desert would, of course, be absolutely impossible without this animal. He was created for it and thrives in it better than anywhere else. His broad, soft foot enables him to traverse deep sands where the horse would sink to its knees and [illegible].

The camel lives on almost nothing, the scanty herbage of the desert and the twigs of the thorny mimosa being his favorite food; but, as everyone knows, his most valuable quality in this relation is his ability to travel many days during the hottest days of summer without drinking.

The African camel is a native of Arabia and has only one hump.

The camel and the dromedary differ only in breed, just as the draught horse differs from the racer. The burden camel, called gamal by the Arabs, never changes its regular walk of two and a half miles an hour under a load which never exceeds 500 pounds for a long journey, for his strength must be estimated by what he can carry with exhaustion, hardship and privation.

The dromedary, or riding camel, is much swifter. With no other load than his rider, a bag of bread, dates and a skin of water, he can accomplish 100 miles a day in an emergency.

A PUZZLING CASE

"There is another thing you must find out," said Gilbert, as Tancred was about to go, "what connection Mazzucata has with the black carnation."

"Oh, now you open up another romance," replied Tancred, in a perplexed tone; "the complications are bad enough now, so let us solve the problems we have in hand before we look for new ones. Good-bye, Sir Gilbert, when I see you again I shall know all about the black carnation."

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

Number Three.

I do not at all agree with Tancred's idea regarding Dallas, for I feel sure he is innocent, and, besides, has not enough brains to conceive and execute such a difficult task. My belief is, that Ilma Celinski killed her mistress out of jealousy, and for the following reasons:

She is in love with Dallas, who adored her mistress; and to destroy her rival invented that devilish bouquet.

She managed to get Gilbert to innocently throw it, in order to avert suspicion from herself.

She gives false evidence in the box in order to hang Gilbert, so as to be safe.

From a feeling of compunction she warned Gilbert to fly, knowing such flight would be a confession of guilt, and thus, without committing a further crime she would ward off suspicion.

CHAPTER VII.

Having thus laid our plans, Tancred and myself proceeded to carry them out; and in order both to lighten the labor and economize time, we divided the business into two portions. Tancred was to make inquiries at the shop of Phillis & Co. regarding the existence of a black carnation; and I, through the agency of my man, Pointer, was to discover the movements of Dallas from the time he arrived in Paris. Having thus arranged matters we parted to execute our several tasks; and I returned to my rooms to interview Pointer, while Tancred went off to Phillis & Co., ostensibly to purchase a buttonhole, but in reality to find out about that confounded flower. We were to meet next day at the Old Friends' Club, to report on our movements, and decide upon what was to be done.

I think I have mentioned Pointer before, but you only know his name, not his admirable qualities which make him the prince of valets. You have doubtless read 'Les Trois Mousquetaires,' by M. Dumas, which contains the admirable character of the lackey Planchet. If so, there is no need for me to describe Pointer: he is a replica of Planchet, faithful, shrewd, and blindly devoted to my interest. Nowadays, such a servant is a jewel of price, for what with the revolutionary ideas of the lower orders, and the all-men-are-equal theory, it is almost impossible to find a decent valet. I, therefore, valued Pointer very much, and as he has been with me for many years, he is completely in my confidence, being, I may say, a humble friend and adviser, though he has too much good sense to venture on any familiarity; if he did, egad, we would soon part, for I am a staunch supporter of class divisions.

Such remarks, however, are scarcely to the point, save in showing the reason why I trusted Pointer so fully; but, being an old man, I am naturally somewhat garrulous, and therefore a trifle egotistical, for I have noticed garrulous men generally stick to discussing themselves. However, I will not digress further, but merely remark that Pointer was an excellent servant, and well fitted to perform the mission with which I now entrusted him.

"By the way, Pointer," I said, after having led delicately up to the subject, "do you know the valet of Mr. Dallas?"

"Very well, sir."

One admirable quality about Pointer is that he answers exactly what he has been asked, and makes no comments thereon.

"What is his name, Pointer?"

"Dabsworth, sir."

"He is in town, I believe?"

"Yes, sir."

"And his master?"

"Has left town, sir. No address given."

"Does Dabsworth expect him back shortly?"

"Can't say, sir."

"Can you keep a secret, Pointer?"

"I can, sir."

"Good. I will trust you. Mr. Dallas is mixed up in this opera house tragedy."

"Is he indeed, sir!"

Another excellent qualification possessed by Pointer is, that he is never surprised at anything, but accepts the most startling statements in a calm and unemotional manner. Such a trait cannot be too highly valued in a servant.

"You know Sir Gilbert Tressinger has been arrested, Pointer?"

"So the papers say, sir."

"I am, as you know, a friend of Sir Gilbert's, and I wish to assist him to prove his innocence, for of course he is perfectly innocent, Pointer."

"Of course, sir."

"I have reason to believe that Mr. Dallas knows more about this affair than he chooses to say. Not that he is guilty in any criminal sense, Pointer. I make no accusation against him—you understand?"

"I do, sir."

"But, as I said before, he is connected in some way with the death of Madame Mazzucata. Now, Mr. Dallas told me that he arrived from Paris on the sixteenth of May, which was the date of the tragedy. I have reason to believe he was in London before that date, and has some strong cause to conceal his movements. What I wish you to do is to find out from Dabsworth when his master returned to town."

"I will do so, major."

"And, Pointer, there was a letter posted to Madame Mazzucata from Paris, which, I fancy, came from Mr. Dallas. You might sound his man on that point also."

"Yes, sir."

"That is all, I think, Pointer."

"Very good, sir. I will make my report to-night. Have I your permission, sir, to go out this afternoon to make inquiries?"

"Yes, Pointer."

"Very good, sir. I will find out all you desire to know. Anything else, sir?"

"Not at present. Oh, by the way, give me that book."

Pointer obeyed, and handed me a French novel, in which I was just then much interested, after which he retired quietly and left me to my own reflections.

This confounded detective fever certainly disorganized my life very much. Formerly, my mind was completely at rest, I was the slave of habit, and with me, one day was exactly the same as another. I arose about ten o'clock, and after a light breakfast read the papers, then I dressed myself carefully and went for a ride in the park, afterwards I had luncheon at my club, called on my friends, walked in the park, and amused myself according to my fancy until dinner-time. When that occurred I dressed myself again and took my meal at the club, after which there was either the theatre, a visit, or a game of whist, and bed before midnight. It was a very pleasant life and regular, but this detective fever put an end to all that by exciting my mind. Morn, noon and night, I was thinking about the case, and the idea of the Black Carnation was continually with me. I rode in the park—Mazzucata, I paid a visit—Mazzucata, I ate my dinner, I played whist, I retired to bed, Mazzucata—heavens, this woman dominated my entire life, and until I discovered and punished her assassin, I saw no way of escaping from her influence. I was the slave of an idea, a fancy, and the more resolutely did it remain there, and the case, though interesting, was exhausting. Judging from my own sufferings, I should say that police officers die young, for such wear and tear on the imagination must inevitably end in wearing out the brain long before its due time in the course of Nature.

Detective fever had made me do many things which I considered unfit for a gentleman—it made me ask questions about my friends' private affairs—it made me suspect my social equals—it made me consult with my social inferiors, to wit, Pointer, yet so keen was I on the result, that I confess, without blushing, that I did not care two straws about the means, provided the end was attained.

How I got through that afternoon I did not know. I could not read; I could not walk. I went to the club, and tried to converse with my friends, but failed dismally; so, in despair, I took a quick turn in the park by myself, and returned to my rooms at five o'clock in order to dress for dinner—which was a mere farce, seeing I had lost my appetite—and hear what Pointer had to say.

He was waiting for me, as calm and composed as ever; so, though I was burning to know the result of his inquiries, I emulated his stoical behavior, and saw him perform his various duties in connection with my evening toilet, without evincing any undue impatience.

"Well, Pointer," I said at length, when I was nearly ready, "did you have any success?"

"Yes, sir."

"What, you found out all I desire to know?"

"I found out everything, sir."

"Capital! Tell me all about it."

Pointer, who has been in the army, held himself upright in a rigid fashion, and delivered his report in as few words as possible.

"According to your directions, sir, I called on Dabsworth, and asked him to come with me to a public house which is kept by an old friend of mine who was a butler. Dabsworth, sir, came at once, as, his master being out of town, he had plenty of time on his hands. So we went to my friend's house, and had a chat over a bottle of claret."

"The wine of gentlemen," I muttered grimly, "and valets drink it. The world is going to the devil."

"While thus engaged, sir, I led up to the question of travelling, and asked Dabsworth how he liked the East, which he didn't, sir. Then, sir, he told me a queer tale about himself and his master in Paris."

"Yes, yes; go on, Pointer."

"He promised not to tell a soul, sir; but, Lord bless you, sir, 'When the wine's in the wit's out,' and Dabsworth's got a poor head for the bottle. Even claret goes to the head, sir; and it did to-day."

I felt a certain disgust for myself at countenancing such conduct as getting a man's secrets out of him through drink; but when I thought of the serious position in which my poor friend was placed, and of the scoundrelly fashion in which Dallas was acting all my scruples vanished, and I commanded Pointer to proceed.

"Mr. Dallas, sir," said Pointer, promptly, "arrived in Paris about the seventh of May, and came on to London on the eighth."

"Oh!" I cried, startled at finding Tancred's suspicions confirmed, "then he was in London at least a week before the day on which he said he arrived."

"I suppose so, sir. But he didn't tell Dabsworth he was going to England. No, sir. Dabsworth only found that out by letter."

"What letter?"

"The letter, sir, posted from Paris to Madame Mazzucata."

"Did Dabsworth post it there?"

"Yes, sir, by the instructions of Mr. Dallas," who was then in London."

"The deuce!" I murmured, rather at a loss to understand this complicated recital. "He wrote [illegible]," Pointer."

"Sir, it is difficult to tell all plainly, but, as far as I could understand Dabsworth, who told me the story in scraps, it is this way. On the eighth Mr. Dallas told his valet that he was going to see some friends at Amiens."

"Good. Amiens is a station on the line running from Paris to Boulogne and Calais."

"Dabsworth, according to instructions, was to remain in Paris with the luggage of Mr. Dallas, till he was told to come on to Amiens."

"I understand."

"He remained in Paris, sir," resumed Pointer, [illegible] "for some days; and on the eleventh, or thereabouts, received a letter from Mr. Dallas, enclosing another letter endorsed to Madame Mazzucata, which he was told to post [illegible]."

"And the outside envelope addressed to Dabsworth bore an English stamp and postmark?"

"Yes, sir."

"While all the time Dabsworth thought his master was at Amiens."

"That is the strange part of it, sir. On the fifteenth Dabsworth received a letter from Mr. Dallas with a French stamp and the Amiens postmark, telling him Mr. Dallas would precede him to England and that he was to come on to London on the sixteenth with the luggage."

"Judging, then, by the first letter, Mr. Dallas was in England; and by the second, he remained at Amiens."

"Yes, sir! I cannot understand it." it."

"Queer," I muttered, rather perplexed: "I expect the solution is this, Pointer: Mr. Dallas went straight to England on the eighth and posted that letter, then he returned to Amiens and wrote the other. What time did Mr. Dallas arrive in London?"

"On the morning of the sixteenth. He travelled by the night mail, sir."

"And Dabsworth?"

"Arrived in the evening about seven o'clock on the sixteenth of May."

"Egad," I said to myself, in surprise, "Tancred is right after all, and Dallas was in London all the time. Our friend has a talent for intrigue."

"Anything else, sir?"

"No, thank you, Pointer. That is all I wish to know, and I congratulate you on your talent for finding out secrets. Keep this information to yourself."

"Yes, sir."

"And now I will go down to the club."

I was destined not to reach the club for at least some time, as, just as I was leaving my sitting-room, a man rapidly mounted the stairs.

"My dear Major, I am fortunate in thus catching you."

"Tancred."

"The same. Come to your sitting-room, Major. I have found out all I wish to know, and could not wait until to-morrow. And you—"

"Have discovered all the movements of Dallas."

"Excellent. We will now put two and two together."

"Will you have a sherry and bitters?"

"Thank you, yes. I can only spare a few minutes, as I have to catch a train for Surbiton, but I can learn and tell everything in that time. Come, major, you begin."

Pointer placed the wine on the table, poured it out, and on a sign from me, retired, after which I began and told Tancred the story of the letters, to which he listened quietly without evincing the slightest surprise.

"I was right, you see, major," he said, sipping his sherry.

"You were, sir, you were," I answered generally, for which I am in fault, I always admit myself to be so. "Dallas was in London a few days."

"At least a week."

"But he returned to Amiens to post that second letter."

"Not he," answered Tancred emphatically, "he wrote and addressed that letter before he left Paris, and left it at Amiens with instructions to be posted on the fifteenth."

"You think so?"

"I am sure of it. Dallas, as I surmised came to London to convince himself of the truth regarding Mazzucata. She left Paris on the sixth, and he arrived on the seventh, consequently he followed her to London on the eighth; but in order to establish an alibi, should it be necessary, he invented that Amiens business, what I admit is very clever."

"You were also right about that black carnation."

"Yes, he sent that to Paris to be posted, but like a fool, forgot that he was betraying himself to his valet by the English postmark."

"It is strange that such a clever man should make such an error."

"It is, indeed, but the cleverest people always overreach themselves. Dallas came to England, found out that Mazzucata was about to marry Gilbert, and set himself to work to frighten her with the black carnation."

"Which he obtained where?"

Tancred took a slip of paper from his pocket and read out an address—

Simon Maxwell,
Florist,
Lippinton.

"Where is Lippinton, Tancred?"

"It's a little village near Harrow, where this man keeps a nursery garden."

"And grows black carnations?"

"Yes, he is the inventor of the flower."

"Where did you find that out?"

"From Phillis & Co. I saw the head of the firm, who, by the way, is a great friend of mine."

"What's his name?"

"It isn't a 'he,' it's a 'she,'" replied Tancred, calmly; "the [illegible] Mrs. Lanster."

"My dear Tancred, you don't mean to say—"

"But I do mean to say. Most women take to the millinery business, so Mrs. Lanster, to be novel and make money, has started a florist's under the name of Phillis & Co."

"Does she do well?"

"Rather; makes no end of money. You have, doubtless, observed how regularly Lanster pays his gambling debts now."

"Yes, but I didn't know—"

"Of course, you didn't, but that's not the question. Mrs. Lanster told me that the black carnation is in existence, and is grown by this man at Lippinton."

"Did she think Mazzucata's case had anything to do with this Simon Maxwell?"

"She thought it queer, certainly, but as she is a woman who can hold her tongue, she kept her own counsel. Few people know about the existence of this flower, as Maxwell guards the plant jealously."

"Then how did Dallas get it [illegible] to send to Mazzucata?"

"That is the question. We must find out."

"By calling on Maxwell, I suppose."

"Precisely. Now then, Major Granby, here is a chance for you to do the Vidocq business. Will you go down to Lippinton and see this man?"

"Certainly. I will go down to-morrow; but what excuse can I make?"

"Oh, tell him you wish to look at his greenhouses and buy [illegible] but above all do not ask to see the black carnation."

"Why not?"

"My dear major, neither you nor I know anything about this man, and for all I know he also may be mixed up in the affair."

"What, a market gardener? Absurd."

Speedway Races

Cars and Drivers Coming From Old Country.

A cablegram from Turin, Italy, to the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, assures T. E. Myers, general manager, that two brand new 1917 Fiats will be on hand when the starting bomb of the May 30th 300-mile race sounds. Race-goers are going to see those cars and Fagnano and Scales, their drivers, give the others in the big international race a contest.

The cars, which are modified 1914 French Grand Prize racers, have been in the process of design and construction for two years; for the great Turin factory, the largest motor factory in all Europe, now employing 17,000 men. These cars have been tested for speed on the road; they have been electrically timed, and, according to W. F. Bradley, the European representative of the Speedway, "They are the classiest pair ever turned out of the Turin shops, and they certainly are fast."

Fagnano, one of the drivers, had his first chance in big racing at the last French Grand Prix, and finished 18th. Scales, the other driver, is an Englishman, who will make his debut at international racing at the coming meet. Both of these drivers are free of military obligation at present, and Bradley, in his last letter, wrote that a sailing schedule and route for the men and cars had already been worked out.

With these two Fiats and the two English Sunbeams, which are to come over to be driven by [illegible] and Rickenbacher, speed fans are already assured of a fine field. Besides these, DePalma's noted Mercedes, thoroughly remodeled, and his Peugeot that used to belong to [illegible] and the two Peugeots and three Premiers that were being prepared in the speedway race shop, are sure to be on hand at the start, together with several purely American cars and drivers who have signified their intention of competing.

Raised $134 for Preparedness League

Mr. John Rowland is Vice-president of the Walkerton Preparedness League, and he and his family are doing a great deal of work to properly welcome and look after returned soldiers. Mr. Rowland began at the first of the war to be liberal with his time and money and he has kept it up. With two sons at the front Mr. and Mrs. Rowland are leaders in the county town in all schemes to raise funds for patriotic purposes. On Friday last their beautiful residence was thrown open to help the Preparedness League. A big reception was given. Invitations read from 3 to 5, from 7 to 9 and from 9 to 11. This method made it possible to entertain hundreds of people.

Mrs. Rowland and her daughter received the guests in the large reception hall, and extended a cordial welcome, after which uniformed High School cadets ushered the guests to cloak rooms, then an invitation to the dining room, where light refreshments were served; then the drawing room where a short program was enjoyed. The house was ablaze with vari-colored lights, while the decorations were American beauty roses and sweet peas. Invitations were extended to Port Elgin and Southampton citizens. The reception was one of the biggest patriotic social events in this section. Over $134 was received for the Preparedness League.

Bruce Preparedness League Meeting

Warden Izzard, Reeve Christie and E. R. Sayles represented this section at the Preparedness League meeting held in Walkerton Friday. About forty representatives from all parts of the county were present.

The president, Judge Klein, being absent in the Southern States, on account of ill-health, Warden Izzard presided.

Secretary McNab read several communications, the main one being the letter from the Resources committee of the province asking for co-operation to solve the problem of help on the farms.

Mr. Norman C. MacKay, agricultural representative, explained that his department was willing, and were now, assisting the farmers in many ways. He believed good work could be done by the various league branches if they would send the names to him of men willing to work for longer periods, and that the local leagues undertake to direct men in the towns and villages to the nearby farmers. Anyone who would work one day, two days, or any time, would be of assistance, if the farmers knew where to call.

Those taking part in the discussion were John Clancy, Dan McDonald, Reeve Christie, Reeve McCallum, J. M. Cameron, Mr. McNally, Reeve Rennie, John Rowland, R. Cryderman, D. Robertson K. C., and others.

A resolution was passed, asking all branches of the league to assist in the work of providing help wherever possible.

Otto E. Klein presented the request of the officers of the 32nd Regiment for the League's assistance in securing men to back up the 160th battalion. The League put itself on record as willing to assist in the work.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

The old Saugeen river is free of ice again. There being little frost in the ground now fields will be in shape for cultivating as soon as the water runs off, unless winter returns again. Farmers may put in lots of good seed as well as they know how, but what about the weather? Blight, rust and all the other things over which they have little control that vitally affect the harvest returns. Nothing can equal hunger to make man or beast humble, and it is possible that starvation may be the Divine means used to bring fighting nations to their senses.

Owing to bad roads and wet weather few were out to hear Mr. Howell's address. He came from the congregations of St. Andrew's and Queen Hill where he had considerable success in raising funds for the Belgian Relief. His talk lasted for nearly two hours and consisted of numerous stories and the usual platform talk such as we may read in the newspapers every day and that we all know by heart, but made much more impressive by the speaker. Very little information was given about the relief work carried on in either England or Belgium, and possibly that is just what we would like to hear about. Cards were distributed to the few young people mostly, present and nearly $1.50 contributed.

Members of the session and managers were appointed to attend Presbytery meeting in Port Elgin Thursday, to take up the matter of Mr. Watt's resignation.

JUDGES' REPORT ON LIMERICKS

The Limerick contest just closed and winners announced last week, caused a great deal of interest to all those who read The Times. In the senior contest there were men and women of all ages and from all parts of the country, one coming from Moosejaw who took part in the work of writing a limerick on the Buyer's Guide. The subject was of great value to Times advertisers, and it proved conclusively that the Buyer's Guide is one of the columns read regularly by all our readers. In fact, the buyers are much more alive to their opportunities in reading than are the merchants. Perhaps this accounts in a measure for the continued increase of out of town buying.

The winners of the contest were spread round the district pretty well. The winner of the senior contest was Miss Ewald, the popular teacher at S. S. No. Saugeen. Her limerick was:

The Buyer's Guide column is dandy
So very instructive and handy
It shows where to hike
To get what you'll like
From shoestrings and bacon to candy.

The winner of the contest for those under 13 years of age was Ernest Beibel, of S. S. No. 12, Bruce. His limerick was:

The Buyer's Guide is here to show
What to buy and where to go
It always tells us what to take
So we won't make a big mistake
And if we read it we should know.

Ernest is but nine years of age.

The winner of the contest for those aged 13 to 15 was Miss Ruby McIvor, of Burgoyne, with the following:

The Buyer's Guide is the place to try.
And Port Elgin stores can soon defy
The city's big department store
With catalogs and ads. galore
Come! Help to boost the old town high.

As stated in the rules of the contest: A limerick consists of five lines. The first two lines must rhyme with each other and also with the last line. The third and fourth lines also must rhyme with one another. The third and fourth lines must also be several syllables shorter than the other three lines in order to provide the rolling variety of rhyme that has come to be known as a "limerick." This is best illustrated in the limerick submitted by Miss Emily Ewald and awarded first prize in the senior contest. The first two and last lines of Miss Ewald's limerick consist of 9 syllables each and the third and fourth lines are of 5 syllables each. An even better rhyme is secured by having one more syllable in the last line than in the first.

There is much uncertainty as to the origin or meaning of the word "Limerick" and as to the time it became applied to the form of the verse now so widely known by that name. The invention, or at least the earliest general use of this form, is attributed to Edward Lear, who, when a tutor in the family of the Earl of Derby at Knowsley, composed about 1834, a large number of nonsense-limericks to amuse the little grandchildren of the house. Many of these he published, with illustrations, in 1846, and they enjoyed an extreme popularity. Lear preferred to give a geographical colour to his absurdities, as in:—

There was an old person of Tartary
Who cut through his jugular artery,
When up came his wife
And exclaimed, "O my Life,
How your loss will be felt through all Tartary!"

The limerick style has been employed quite extensively for all kinds of mock-serious purposes and some specimens have achieved a considerable degree of popularity. One such appeared in the Globe a few years ago:

The poor benighted Hindu,
He does the best he kin do,
He sticks to his caste
From first to last,
And for clothes he makes his skin do.

Another reminding us of the recent winter days runs:

There was a small boy of Quebec
Go' into the snow to his neck,
When asked, "Are you friz,"
He replied, "Yes I is,
But we don't call this cold in Quebec."

The judges in The Times' Buyer's Guide Limerick Contest were:

Mr. W. J. Dunlop, B. A., of the Faculty of Education, and Editor of "The School," Toronto.

Mr. A. R. Alloway, Assistant Manager of the Canadian Press Association, Inc., Toronto.

These two gentlemen have consented to again serve as judges in the "Missing Line Limerick Contest," announced in this week's issue.

Don't fail to write your "missing line" entry and send it to "The Limerick Editor, Port Elgin Times", right away.

ANOTHER LIMERICK CONTEST SUPPLY THE MISSING LINE

Several interested readers have asked The Times editor to run one more limerick contest, and we have consented. Several people who are not subscribers, but who read The Times occasionally, wondered if they were eligible.

Now this "Missing Line Contest" is open to everybody, no charge, and no exceptions made. The rules are:

Address all letters to Limerick Editor, Times office Port Elgin.

Give your name and post office address. No limerick will be printed unless you sign it. We do not publish the names, but we must know who writes them.

We do not want "suggestive" or "smart" limericks, they will not be printed.

There will be three prizes—1st $1.50; 2nd $1; 3rd 50c.

We will leave the contest open until the noon mail of May 2nd. With that issue the contest will be closed.

Here are the first four lines of the limerick—supply the last one:

There was an old lady named Cleaver,
Who had rheumatics, measles and fever,
She selected the Port
For a health resort
. . . .

For instance the limerick might be concluded with this line:

"And now her relatives bereave her."

That would not be too hard on the Port either, as apparently the old lady was in a very bad way when she arrived. However, perhaps some readers would prefer that she recover. What is wanted is the best, all round last line. Try your hand at it. Do it now.

OBITUARY

One of Arran's oldest and most respected pioneers passed away on Thursday morning last in the person of Mr. John McFadden. He was born in the county of Formana, Ireland, August 10, 1852. When he was 3 months old his parents emigrated to Canada and settled in Holland Tp., where he resided until he was 19 years of age, when he moved to the township of Arran. At the age of 22 he settled on lot 1 con. B Arran and commenced to hew a home for himself out of the dense forest. Three years later he married Maria Wolfe, of Arran Township. They resided on said lot, clearing the land and enduring the hardships and privations associated with early pioneer life.

In the year 1979 Mr. and Mrs. McFadden gave up active work on the farm and retired to Walkerton where they lived until Mrs. McFadden's death which occurred on March 7th, 1895. After breaking up his home at Walkerton Mr. McFadden lived with his son William at Arkwright for six years. Since then he has resided with Howard in the old home where he passed his remaining days. He was an upright, honest citizen, a good neighbor and was highly respected in the community. He leaves behind him a family of five sons and two daughters. Dr. Andrew in Collingwood, William in Port Elgin, Howard in Arran, Warren in Port Arthur, Dyer in San Francisco. The daughters are Mrs. D. McLean of Port Arthur and Mrs. John Darrah in Collingwood. The remains were laid away to rest in Ebenezer cemetery beside his beloved wife and one son and daughter who predeceased him.

MEXICAN NATIVE LIFE.

Picture of Richest of the South-Central States.

A striking picture of native life in Guanajuato, the treasure chest of mercurial Mexico, is given in a communication to the National Geographic Society by Frank H. Probert. Mr. Probert reveals the Mexican peons as they are known only to the American who has lived among them.

"Leaving the walled inclosure of the railroad yards," says the writer, "one looks down on the apparently cramped and crowded city of Guanajuato, capital of the richest of the south-central states of Mexico. Hard by, to the right is the bull-ring, the scene on Sundays and fiestas of farcical combats between two-legged brutes and four-legged beasts.

"In the soft sunshine of summer days the first vista of the city is striking indeed. Churches of magnificent proportions; ancient and modern architectures, strangely blended in teh same edifice; stately buildings, imposing markets; stores of all descriptions and dwelling places, rudely bare, variously colored with neutral tints of calsomine. Their grated windows and open doors exhibiting to all the sparsely furnished interior, where bird, ~~beast and~~ human eat and live together. The sordid squalor of the many contrasts strikingly with the oppressive opulence of the few.

"The cobblestone streets are crooked and narrow; so narrow, in fact, that caballeros must take to the sidewalk to permit the passing of any kind of vehicle. The dingy tramcars are drawn by relays of mules, three abreast, beaten into subjection by the stinging lash or coaxed into action by the curses of youthful drivers, whose vernacular is wonderfully expressive and effective; indeed, I doubt, if anything but a musician really appreciate the depth of feeling and irresistible persuasiveness of the expressions.

"What strange sights one can see in these main arteries of that city! I have set my camera on the balcony of my room at the hotel and will snap what passes by. At first a herd of patient plodding burros loaded down with slabs of pale green sandstone, quarried nearby and used for building purposes; a legless cripple shuffles along on a board, propelling himself with his hands; a cargador trots along tirelessly with his awkward burden, in this case a sewing machine; more burros overloaded with charcoal; another pack struggles under the weight of sacked ore from the mines; still another bearing grain to the market, and the street car demanding loudly a clear track; a funeral procession where laughing children carry a baby's casket, swaying from side to side to the accompaniment of anything but appropriate music, and behind the mourners in solemn solemnity.

"Strangely superstitious are these people. Grossly ignorant, constant in their faith, pathetic in their simplicity, kindly and respectful, their life is epitomized in the verse:

"'Let the world slide, let the world go;
A fig for care and a fig for woe!
If I can't pay, why I can owe,
And death makes equal the high and low.'

"'Tis Sunday morning. I am awakened at early dawn by the tooting of tin horns, accompanied by the sonorous stretches of bass violas and fiddles as sounds are sawn from their strings; by the shuffling of sandaled feet over the sands of the street, and the babel of voices of passing peons. Church bells clang, sirens scream, whistles wildly mingle in the melody of merriment; for is not this the day when Judas Iscariot is to be hung in effigy?

"Night falls on an exhausted though happy people. What matters it if the prison is overcrowded that night, or that the supply of pulque or mescal is depleted almost to the degree of exhaustion?

"To the casual visitor from the States the habits and customs of these lowly people are strange, but fascinating. They do not need our commiseration or sympathy; they are content in their mode of living, and who shall say that they are the less happy or human in their habitat than many of us?

"The Mexican peon knows that he is born to serve, as did the old southern darky, and caste or class distinction is emphasized on all occasions. The mozo rides silently behind the lordly caballero; the peon woman steps into the street, and bows her head as the padre passes; in the plaz on Sunday evenings, when the melody of martial music fills the air, the upper classes parade in one direction, while the peons gyrate as an outer ring in the opposite direction. As a class they are industrious and skillful if the time element is eliminated.

"The peon miner is a competent workman when unhampered by modern machines and has a "nose" for ore that is truly remarkable. As tillers of the soil their methods are primitive but productive; they still use oxen and the wooden plowshare, and the fields are fenced with imperishable dry-dock walls. In the making of pottery and basketry they excel; in tanning hides, saddlery and the working of metals they are inimitable. The women, too, can grind corn on a metate, cook tortillas and frijoles, raise families, laundry clothes on a rock near the creek, and make the most exquisite laces and the finest of drawn work with equal skill."

If we count the wealth of North America and South America as it seems to-day, we find that the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus has been worth to the world $3,000,000 a day from the time he sailed from Palos in August, 1492, down to the present time, says the Popular Science Monthly. Likewise, the man who discovered the way of drawing tungsten wire gave $300,000,000 worth of light yearly.

In consequence of the almost complete famine in rubber for tires and other military requirements the German government has forbidden pleasure cycling, and has limited the use of bicycles to urgently necessary commercial work, and then only under strict police supervision. Meantime, all tires and inner tubes on wheels not used for industrial or business purposes are declared confiscated and must be handed over to special depots, where they are purchased by the War Office at assessed values. Persons desiring cycles for purposes of business must furnish convincing evidence of their needs and obtain special certificates. They will be punished if machines are used for "joy riding," or any purposes not specifically permitted.

No human being has ever been known positively to be killed by the fall of a meteorite. Probably the narrowest escape was that of three children in Braunau, at the time of the fall of an iron meteorite in 1847. This object, weighing 40 pounds, fell in a room where the children were sleeping, and covered them with debris, but they were not injured. In each of two celebrated meteoric showers—those of Pultusk and Mocs—more than 100,000 stones fell. All observed showers were of stones, but the finding of numerous individuals of iron in single localities, such as Toluca and Canon Diablo, indicates that showers of iron meteorites sometimes occur. The largest known meteorite is one brought from Cape York, Greenland, by Peary, weighing 36½ tons. It is in the American Museum of Natural History, New York. Twenty-nine chemical elements have been found in meteorites in quantities sufficient for accurate study.—Scientific American.

WORTH KNOWING.

To rid the house of insects pests dissolve common alum, one pound in two quarts of boiling water. When thoroughly dissolved, and while still hot, apply with a brush to pantry shelves, cupboard shelves, closets, or other infested places. In bedroom or kitchen, where bugs and roaches hide, apply to all cracks and loose joints, splintered places and holes with an oil can. It is effective, but must be used with care, as it will ruin paint, varnish or oiled surfaces.

One of the best beautifiers for the skin is oatmeal cream. Put a handful of fine oatmeal in a half-pint of hot water; let stand a few hours, then apply to the face with the hand, or a soft cloth, and allow it to dry. This will make the roughest skin smooth, and will help to whiten it. Oatmeal cream is just as effective for rough, chapped hands as the cream you buy at the druggist and costs you only a few cents.

One ounce of gum shellac, one ounce of beeswax and 15 ounces of resin make an excellent sealing wax. Melt over hot water and when well mixed it is ready for use. As it cools instantly it must be applied to the jar or can lids boiling hot. If bubbles arise on pressing the cover, drop a little more of the wax where the bubbles are, and it will be effectually sealed.

BISQUE OF OYSTERS.

A Very Good Recipe Which Leaves Nothing Unsaid.

To make bisque of oysters take one pint of oysters, one tablespoonful of butter, yolk of one egg, one pint of milk, one tablespoonful of flour, salt and pepper to taste.

Drain the oysters free from their liquor, adding sufficient cold water to make one cup of liquid. Chop half the oysters fine. Bring the oysters liquor to a boil, skim, add the chopped oysters and simmer 10 minutes.

Scald the milk; rub the butter and flour together until smooth, add to the milk and stir until it thickens. Add the whole oysters to the oyster liquor, and as soon as their edges curl remove all from the fire. Add the beaten yolk of the egg to the milk, take at once from the fire and mix with the oysters and their liquor. Season and serve at once.

Says She Suffered For Many Years

THEN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HER KIDNEY TROUBLES.

Mrs. Felix Aecah Found No Relief in Doctors or Hospital Treatment, but Dodd's Kidney Pills Brought a Speedy Cure.

Haldimand, Gaspe, Co., Quebec, April 12.—(Special.)—Mrs. Felix Aecah is telling her numerous friends here that her complete recovery from kidney disease, from which she suffered for years is due to the splendid work of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My trouble started from a strain," Mrs. Aecah says. "I suffered for years. I was attended by a doctor and was also treated at a hospital. I suffered from stiffness of the joints. I had a bitter taste, especially in the morning, and at times was subject to severe headaches. I had a pressure and often a sharp pain at the top of my head and my skin itched and burned at night.

"Neither from the doctor nor at the hospital did I get any permanent relief. Then I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, and two boxes did me so much good I feel like recommending them to everyone who has kidney trouble."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys. Cured kidneys strain all the impurities, all the seeds of disease out of the blood. That makes good health all over the body. That's why those cured are so enthusiastic in regard to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

TRACING LOST CARS.

Detectives of Railroads Have Work Following Runaways.

At times when the scarcity of freight cars causes the railroads to place an embargo upon certain classes of goods, the problem of keeping track of its cars to see that they do not run away and become wanderers upon the face of the earth is a stupendous one for each company.

When a freight car is built, it is given a number before it leaves the shop, and therefore it is always known by that number until it is worn out and scrapped. When a new car receives its number, and starts out upon its business career, it is entered in the record book, and a careful account of its wanderings and earning power are kept there. This record book is a history of the car, and by consulting it one can learn how many trips it has made, what cities it has visited, how many times it has been to the repair shop, and also where it is supposed to be at any given time.

But in spite of all this care in keeping a record of each car now and then, for some unexplained reason, one disappears from sight, literally running away. Some of the big companies employ car tracers, but as a rule a printed tracer is first sent after the car to bring it back home. This printed tracer in a blue envelope is sent to the person in whose jurisdiction the car was last supposed to be, and if it had passed out of his district the tracer is sent on to the next one to whom the car was consigned. This little printed tracer failing to bring the car home in a reasonable length of time, a man known as a tracer is sent after it. The tracer is really a railroad car detective.

And sometimes it is more difficult to trace a runaway freight car than a criminal. There are tens of thousands of miles of railways, and hundreds of thousands of freight cars, and to find the one carrying a certain number is often like hunting for a needle in a haystack. The tracer may arrive in a city where the runaway car is supposed to be at the very moment when the car is leaving it in the opposite direction. It may cross this track on a parallel line, or dodge around him on a short line. It may be headed north, or rolling merrily toward the Pacific while he is going toward the Atlantic.

A runaway car apparently is as depraved as any criminal. It hides on a lonely siding or gets lost in a short swamp line. One such runaway rested nearly a year on a siding in Southern Texas simply because it got lost, and no one seemed to know just what to do with it. The nearest freight agent had no record of it and no tracer had requested its return. Going on the principle that what is "everybody's business is nobody's business," this local agent made no effort to hunt up the owners. If the order had been received by him to return it he would have obeyed, but lacking such orders he left it in the siding. In the course of time, it was occupied by a family of squatters, who lived quite comfortably in it for six months, and were routed out only when quite by accident the car tracer discovered it.—Popular Mechanics.

SPRING IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

A TONIC MEDICINE IS A NECESSITY AT THIS SEASON.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, rich, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give strength. In the spring the appetite is often poor—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid weak digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils — Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood most seriously needs attention. Some people dose themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

Sir Walter Parratt had an extraordinary memory. Some eight or ten men were assembled one evening in one of the lodges attached to St. Michael's College, Tenbury. Sir Walter Parratt and Herr von Holst played in turn upon the piano such music as was asked for. This went on for some time until at last the chessboard was brought out. Without even a glance at the chessboard he won the game in an hour.—London Globe.

INSECT STRENGTH.

Tiny Creatures Far Outdo Man in Muscular Power.

Recent experiments with insects have demonstrated their remarkable muscular power. A wood beetle weighing 1½ grammes and less than two inches long can pull a little wagon loaded with fifty-six grammes, or thirty times its own weight. When a load of eighty-four grammes was piled on the wagon the beetle pulled it an inch; this was forty-five times its own weight. When its leg were attached to a small dynamometer the insect exerted a force of fifteen grammes, which is as if a man weighing 200 pounds were able to raise a ton.

A Hercules beetle proved his right to the appellation, for though he weighed only 85 grammes and was only three inches long, he pulled 125 grammes and walked off with a weight of five pounds on his back. If a proportionate weight were put on a man he would be crushed to death.

A housefly, held by the wings and brought close to a match, lifted it up by its feet. To perform a proportionate feat a man would have to lift a beam twenty-six feet long and thirteen inches thick.

It is an old story that a flea can jump 200 times its own heights in the air. A man would have to jump over the 984 foot high Eiffel Tower to equal the feat.

The muscles in insects are actually much large proportionately than in man. Prof. A. Schmidt estimates that if a ant can pull an object of ten times its own weight a man would equal the task if he lifted a weight one-twentieth that of his body. This is explicable on the basis of the far greater muscular equipment of the ant, as compared with man.

VERNACULAR OF "TOMMY" AND "POILU"

War's Terms Will Survive in France for Centuries to Come.

PATIENT PEOPLE

Anglo-French Intermarrying Will Benefit Both the Races.

(By Stewart Lyon to Canadian Press, Montreal.)

With the British Army in France, cable says: "Righto" Everywhere one hears this world of General Utility in that part of France in which British troops are quartered.

The French use it as they use the word "Sport" and many other adaptations from the English language. Long after the war ends, perhaps centuries hence when the great struggle is but a bit of difficult history for school children, the people of Northern France may still indicate cheerful acquiescence by singing out—"Righto."

New words make their way into a language easily and quickly in time of war because of the need for forms of expression, that will be easily understood by the sojourner. When they get in they stay, as Scotsmen understand who have given study to the derivation of the Lothian tongue. "Tassie," a cup for convivial drinking, is almost certainly a survival of the presence of a French garrison during the early years of the reign of Mary Stuart. Near Linlithgow Palace, long the centre of French influence, is a wide expanse of level ground known in the vernacular as "Chamfloory." That is unquestionably a corruption of Champs des Fleurs, the parade grounds of the troops who found it carpeted with dandelions when they first saw it.

Then there is the story that the Edinburgh man does not like to hear on a west country tongue. There were, and are, very high houses in old Edinburgh, chiefly in High street and Canongate. In the pre-sewer days it was a heavy task to carry household slops downstairs, so the Edinburgh housewife threw them over the window-sill to the cry of "Gardyloo," so that any Frenchman in the street would look out for the water. "Gardyloo" was the warning cry long after the last soldier of France had gone.

The strange French-English that during almost three years has been getting a grip in northern France may stick like the Scots-French in the Lothians three centuries ago. To-day, when in limping French I asked for "la menage des officers," the very old lady asked replied, "la mess c'est la." In France "la mess" is the phrase for mess and the old lady was letting me see not only that she knew the right name for the officers' quarters, but that she considered they might be given a more fitting name.

The patience with which the people bear the long-continued hardships and perils of military occupation is beyond praise. To-day from a Toronto artillery officer I heard this story. Up near Armentieres close by his battery was the tiny farm of a peasant who was well-to-do in that he owned two horses. When the battery located near him he was preparing his land for a crop of wheat. When the Germans replied to the Canadian fire most of the shells fell in the prospective wheatfield. They were what is known as "light stuff" and the holes they made were filled in without too great difficulty. The work of preparation was almost completed under daily shell fire, be it remembered—when a bursting shell killed both the old man's horses. It was a sore stroke but the offer to loan a pair of battery horses was thankfully accepted, all the shell holes were filled, seeding was completed, and the Canadians remained long enough to see the plucky old fellow reap a good crop in spite of the Bosche.

That represents one sort of patience. Another is displayed by tens of thousands of householders, from the owners of the fine old chateaux to the cellars of the mining villages, who have had men of alien race billeted in their houses ever since 1914. To give up one's best bedroom for a few days to a convention delegate with whom one can become well acquainted in an hour is a pleasure. To be deprived for years of every spare room so that strangers may use them is a great hardship. It is borne uncomplainingly "pour la Patrie." Often, alas, the room of the son of the household would be empty but for "les Anglais." The Frenchmen who have made the last great sacrifice are numbered by hundreds of thousands and the end is not yet.

The suggestion is heard occasionally that there will be many marriages between British soldiers and French girls after the war. Assuredly much laughter that is not all masculine is heard in billets and elsewhere. There are very many men in transport and similar services located all the way from the English Channel to the battle front. It would be strange if the little archer did not hit some of them. The resultant crop of marriages—lots or little—will be to the advantage of France, because it will bind the people on opposite side of the Channel still more closely together.

One of the great discoveries of the war has been France's finding of her soul. Another has been the discovery that the supposedly soft and degenerating, if not already degenerate, Englishman is as hardy and as tough and resourceful a fighter as his ancestors who followed the great Edward or the dauntless Henry to France centuries ago. A little racial intermixture might benefit both nations. Britain needs France's mental alertness and adaptability; France could find a place for English physique and resolution. LYON.

BAD FOR THE HUNS.

Veteran Predicts Greatest Catastrophy in History Soon

Cobourg despatch: An officer who has seen fifteen months active service says, in an interesting letter: "What about the tanks? The battles of 1917 will not only be a battle of aircraft and artillery, but thousands of tanks will be in action. The tank is a mobile fort, and therefore more of a weapon of attack than of defence. Its function is to complete the destruction wrought by high explosives, and it has proved wonderfully effective and reduces the casualties sustained by the attacking forces to the lowest possible figure. This will be a battle of big guns, of which the British and the French possess a vast superiority. The Germans will be out-gunned, out-munitioned, and outmanned. It will be an offensive not aimed at a short thirty-mile front, but along the whole German line, with the fixed determination of destroying the Germans en masse where they stand. Their last reserve will be sucked into the melting pot. The discipline of the great German military machine will be destroyed, and the greatest military catastrophe since history began will be witnessed by the world. Such is the horoscope I have cast for the summer of 1917. Be of good cheer, all is well with the Allies."

HORRORS OF U-BOAT WAR

Survivors of New York Tell Tales of Suffering

When Their Ships Were Sunk Unarmed.

New York report: The Associated Press says:

The British freight steamer Trevose, recently reported by Germany as having been sunk, was torpedoed without warning on March 18, and twenty four members of her crew are unaccounted for, according to officers of the Fabre Line steamship Venezia, which arrived here to-day with five of the Trevose's crew.

The Venezia brought also nineteen men from the British passenger steamship Alnwick Castle, already reported as having been sunk without warning on March 19. The five from the Trevose were rescued by the Alnwick Castle from an open boat.

The twenty four men brought in by the Venezia had floated for four days and four nights in open boats before being picked up. They said that five of their number died from exposure during this time. Many of those rescued are still suffering from frost bite and frozen limbs. The Alnwick Castle, they said, carried a crew of 100 men and 21 passengers. The British Admiralty has already announced that ten of the persons she carried died, and that others were missing.

In the boat met by the Venezia were six of the passengers, Capt. Chave, the ship's surgeon, the engineer and fifteen of the crew.

Seven boats were launched from the strong gale blowing, they were soon separated, and thus far 100 of the 124 souls aboard are unaccounted for. Alnwick Castle, but, owing to the

The survivors of the Trevose said that vessel was sunk early in the morning of the 18th, the U-boat not being sighted by anyone on board and giving no warning. The crew took to the boats, which soon drifted apart. The survivors picked up by the Alnwick Castle had been on that ship only a few hours when she was in turn torpedoed.

NEUTRALS TURN AGAINST HUNS

Sweden and Holland Adjusting Troubles With Allies.

Will Make Blockade More Effective.

London cable says: Sweden and Holland are adjusting their difficulties with the Entente that the blockade of Germany may be made more effective.

Sweden has long been rather anti-ally and correspondingly pro-German because she feared Russian aggression. The Russian revolution, and certain pledges that are understood to have been made have largely removed this fear, and the country is disposed to follow its natural democratic bent and give its sympathies to the allies. Holland's relations with Great Britain have been difficult of late, but are now getting better.

In both cases the American situation resulted to the advantage of the Allies, convincing Sweden and Holland that Germany had lost all hope of winning, and furthermore the new Swedish Premier, M. Swartz, is friendly toward the allies, and is a moderate.

Washington, Report—A long report from United States Ambassador Sharp at Paris detailing the terrible destruction wrought by the retreating Germans in Northern France, was received to-day at the State Department.

NEAR DISASTER FOR THE TURKS

Fog and Water Shortage Saved Them at Gaza.

British Commander is a Canadian.

CANADIAN IN COMMAND.

Lieut.-General Sir Charles Macpherson Dobell, who commanded the British troops in the battle near Gaza, Palestine, is a Canadian, General Dobell is a son of the late Hon. R. R. Dobell, of Beauvoir Manor, near Quebec City. General Dobell entered the army in 1890. He was in command in the Cameroons in 1915.

London cable says: Eight thousand Turks were killed and wounded in the British victory achieved over a force of 20,000 Ottomans near Gaza, Palestine, Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law declared at the House of Commons this afternoon. He read a telegram from Gen. Murray. Gen. Murray's telegram reads: "The primary object was to seize Wadi Guzzeh, to cover the advance of our railway. Wadi was occupied without a fight and advanced troops pushed forward in the direction of Gaza. It appeared to Lieut.-General Sir Charles Dobell, in command, that the enemy might retire without fighting and to force them to stand he decided to attempt to capture Gaza by a coup de main.

"On the morning of the 26th a dense fog delayed operations, and it was not possible to attack the Gaza position until late in the afternoon, when the enemy first line trenches were captured.

"More than 700 prisoners were taken. The German commander, Von Kress, meanwhile moved up three columns towards Gaza to support his troops. Those columns were admirably delayed by our mounted troops and armored cars, and heavy losses were inflicted upon the enemy at slight cost to ourselves. The commander and staff of the fifty-third division were captured during the fighting.

"The time during which the operation could be carried out was limited by the supply of water available for the troops, the infantry being dependent upon what they could carry with them. Owing to delay by the morning fog, the supply of water with the troops proved insufficient to allow the attack to be continued, and our troops took up a defensive position from a point just south of Gaza towards Wadi Ghuzzeh. This position was attacked on the 27th by the Turks who were repulsed everywhere with heavy losses, our camel corps completely defeating the Turkish cavalry divisions.

"On the next day our infantry were withdrawn to Wadi Ghuzzeh, our cavalry remaining in contact with the enemy's main position. The enemy showing no desire to resume the offensive, our troops remained in occupation of Wadi Ghuzzeh. The enemy's total casualties are estimated by the general officer commanding in chief to be 8,000. We captured 950 prisoners and two Austrian howitzers. Our total killed amounted to less than 400. Some small parties of our men, totalling less than 200, who are believed to have fought their way into Gaza and been cut off, are missing."

"Finally, Sir Archibald Murray, commander of the British troops in Egypt, reports: "The operation was most successful, and owing to the fog around Gaza, just fell short of complete disaster to the enemy. Our troops are exceedingly proud of themselves, and I am delighted with their enterprise, endurance, skill and leading. None of our troops were at any time harassed, or hard pressed. It will be seen from the above report that the enemy account of the operation is fantastic."

MILLIONS TO BRIBE LEADERS

German Plot to End Russ Revolt Investigated.

Kuropatkin Tricked Hun, Who Suicided.

Copenhagen cable: The Russian Provisional Government's investigation to ascertain who were in the plot to open the Russian lines to let German troops through to put down the revolt has developed (according to news coming by way of Finland and Sweden) these things:

The commander at Libau, it is alleged, received from Germany $[illegible]

The commander at Mitau, it is alleged, received $1,500,000.

The alleged price paid for the surrender of Kovno has not been determined.

Gen. Kuropatkin, the Governor of Riga, got $8,000,000, it is asserted, but sent the money to the Duma Government at Petrograd, and did not surrender his position. When the German commissioner who conveyed the bribe found that Riga was not to be evacuated, he committed suicide.

PEACE CANDIDATE SWAMPED.

London, April 2—Frederick Pethick Lawrence, joint editor of Votes for Women and well known as an ardent supporter of woman suffrage, standing for election to the House of Commons on a "peace by negotiation" platform, today polled only 333 votes, while his opponent, Sir John Fleming, the Coalition candidate, received 3,283. The balloting took place in a by-election for the seat for South Aberdeen.

Muggins—That fellow Blowhard always makes me so mad I always want to fight. Buggins—Well, why don't you? Muggins—He scares me so I don't dare to.

BOY BABIES ON INCREASE

British Statistics Bear Out War Tradition.

Excess Greatest in Over Fifty Years.

London cable says: In view of the tradition that more male babies are born after a war than usual, figures available are instructive. The annual report of the registrar-general has just been issued, it is remarkable for the number of previous records broken. Thus the marriage rate is the highest on record and the birth rate the lowest on record. The number of bachelors marrying spinsters and spinsters marrying bachelors were both the highest on record. The increase of boy babies over girl babies from July, 1915, to June, 1916, was the highest on record in fifty years. The infant mortality rate for 1916, was the lowest on record.

The average age of bachelors marrying spinsters was 27.33; spinsters marrying bachelors 25.47. The number of births recorded was 814,614, of whom 415,205 were males and 399,409 females, that ratio being 1,040 to 1,000. This ratio for the whole year does not represent the true situation as regards war babies. The March quarter was unaffected by the war, and showed a ratio of 1,022 males and 1,000 females. The December quarter showed a ratio of 1,044 males and 1,000 females. For 1916 the ratios are shown to be. March quarter, 1,050 males, 1,000 females; June quarter, 1,054; September, 1,045; December, 1,050. For the year from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916, the first complete year during which the births registered were affected by the war conditions the ratio is 1,047 males and 1,000 females. This figure is considerably so far as males are concerned above any recorded during the preceding fifty years, and approximates the European rate, which for many years has been in excess of our own. A rise in mortality among the aged of both sexes occurred. It is a feature which has appeared in statistics of other belligerent countries, and may be a reflex of the unusual stress and anxiety. Infant mortality during the year was 110 per 1,000 births. This is 5 per 1,000 above the rate in 1914, but below the average of the years 1906 to 1914. The provisional infant mortality rate for 1916 shows a fall of 91 per 1,000, the lowest on record.

PRESS OF U. S. SOLID BEHIND THE PRESIDENT

Newspapers Unitedly Back Him in Stand Against Germany.

RIGHT MUST RULE

Not Might; Terms Laid Down by the Foe Intolerable.

New York despatch: Following are brief excerpts from the leading newspapers of the United States on President Wilson's message to Congress:

New York Tribune—No praise can be too high for the words and the purposes of the President. Never in all the long period in which he has directed American policy has he seemed to come nearer the ideal of the American people, the ideal of a president who should lead.

New York Sun—At the eloquent call of the President we are at last face to face, through no misdeed or lack of patience on our part, with the Imperial German Government that has dared to make a wicked war on all mankind not subservient to its will. The day has come for us, like others, to do our part.

New York World—The address is more than an expression of a nation's patriotism. It is an appeal to every instinct, every impulse, every tradition of democracy. The case of the American people can rest upon no higher plane than that upon which President Wilson has placed it, and his statement of reasons is no less admirable than his statement of means and methods.

New York Journal of Commerce—America will fulfil its obligation and assume its full share in preserving the world's political freedom. Between autocracy and democracy there can be no choice whatever. It is the only way to a lasting peace. Right must rule, not might.

A GLORIOUS STAND.

The New York Staats Zeitung—We are to be one of the Allies in fact as well as in name. The tremendous resources of the nation are to be mobilized and thrown into the scale against the Imperial German Government. The President needs have no concern as to the loyalty of Americans of German ancestry.

The Providence Journal—Thank God that the land of Washington and Lincoln, the land whose honor is more sacred than life to every true American, has at last taken her stand with those sister nations who have declared that the civilization and liberty of the world shall not die. Millions of hearts this morning will greet with joy and pride the word that sets us free.

Boston Advertiser—The President at last has met the situation firmly and is leading in the direction of duty and honor. He will find the will of the nation ready.

The Louisville Courier Journal says: Not since their declaration of independence has there been a more significant, a more momentous deliverance on the part of the American people than yesterday was made for them by President Wilson. The liberty won for the new continent by the founders of our republic is the same liberty for whose conservation and perpetuation against the assaults of the most powerful and desperate foe to liberty in all the world the President calls the people to arms.

GERMAN TERMS INTOLERABLE.

Cleveland Plain Dealer:

President Wilson's words to Congress asking for a declaration recognizing that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany finds Americans ready for the test. We abandon peace, because the conditions of peace, as laid down by the German Imperial Government, have become intolerable.

Cleveland Leader:

President Wilson rendered his country a notable service by making a statement to Congress on the American case for war with Germany which is clear, strong and convincing from the point of view of international law and universal humanity and morality. The nation will strike with a clear conscience.

Albany Knickerbocker Press:

President Wilson has voiced the unanimous will of the American people. He has behind him the united will and resources of a mighty nation. From now to the end of the war we are all for one flag.

Albany Argus:

Never was there a more terrific arraignment of mastery message, more soul-stirring in the annals of public affairs. Its burden is that the Hohenzollerns and all they stand for must be exterminated.

THE GERMAN PRESS.

Louisville Anzeiger (German):

Our President contends in his message that we have to go to war to free the world of autocratic rule. The German people, says he, were not asked if they wanted to go to war not.

Even if so, let us not make the same mistake, and give our people by a referendum vote the opportunity to decide themselves about the momentous question: Peace or war.

Freie Presse and Abende Presse (German), Cincinnati:

Whatever may happen, our country shall have no better guardian of its internal peace than the American citizen of German parentage. The nation rightfully expects us to know our duty, and we must and will prove that we are determined, as all true, faithful and honest citizens should be, not to deviate one hair's breadth from the narrow path that our duty and our conscience point out to us to walk.

The Westliche Post, St. Louis:

There can exist no doubt over the standing of the American citizens of German extraction. The German-Americans do not have to give assurance of loyalty. They have steadily shown themselves to be true and dutiful citizens; with their blood they have helped to build and uphold the nation.

ALL IRELAND IS PLOWING

New Law Makes Country a Great Aid.

Every Farmer Must Till 10 P. C. More.

Dublin cable: (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—All Ireland appears to be engaged in one vast plowing match. Plows are being drawn by every available type of animal, while men and women who never put their hand to a plow before have learned to do the work in the submarine emergency. The Irish Department of Agriculture has thrown all its executive machinery into the effort to increase the tillage enormously, and has obtained a decree under the Defence of the Realm Act making a certain minimum percentage of extra tillage compulsory on every farmer in Ireland holding more than ten acres of land.

The novel law requires that every farmer must till at least ten per cent. of the arable part of his holdings in addition to whatever amount he tilled last year, unless he is already cultivating 50 per cent. of his land, in which case he is not obliged to do more. There are 50,000 holdings to which this regulation applies, with an arable area of 14,500,000 acres.

The department's county committees, which have for years been organized in every county in Ireland, have stopped all other work and put their experts and administrative staffs on the sole work of food production. They have organized special committees in every parish and are mobilizing all the available supplies of seeds, manure and implements. Machinery for saving labor is to be made to go as far as possible by a system of local exchange.

Few people realize what a tremendous asset Ireland has been to England during the war as a reservoir of foodstuffs.

In the year before the war England's imports of foodstuffs from her leading sources of supply were as follows: United States, £33,000,000 sterling; Ireland, £33,000,000 sterling; Argentine, £30,000,000; Denmark, £21,900,000; India, £18,000,000; Canada, £18,000,000.

The war has disturbed this balance somewhat, bringing in greater supplies from America, but Ireland has also increased her output, and the imports of food from that island in 1916, the latest figures available, show a total of £46,000,000.

All things have their compensations. The beauty about being a failure is that you have plenty of company.

"Turn about is fair play," quoted the Wise Guy. "Yes," agreed the Simple Mug, "that man who throws a banana skin on the sidewalk shouldn't be surprised if the banana skin throws him in the same place."

MILLION MEN OF DOMINIONS FOR GREAT WAR

Premier Borden Speaks of Colonies' Aid at War Conference Lunch.

MUST TEACH THE HUN

No Peace Till Germany Learns World Domination Hopeless.

London cable: Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues, Gen. Smuts and other delegates to the War Conference, were lunched to-day at the House of Commons by the Empire Parliamentary Association, the Colonial Secretary presiding. "Little more than twenty months have elapsed since I last addressed you," said Sir Robert. "We had some realization, but only a partly adequate conception, even then, of the tremendous task still before us. In these islands you have risen splendidly to the task. We of the Dominions have striven also to do our part. I then reminded you that 250,000 men had joined the colors from overseas nations. I can tell you to-day that not less than one million men in the Dominions have taken up arms for the Empire.

"The Canadian force in Europe then numbered 74,000. I am proud to tell you to-day that Canada has sent forth more than 325,000 men. Our total enlistments exceed four hundred thousand, and in the Canadian force alone more than 230,000 have left the shores of the Dominion. Their achievement under the sternest test has been splendid and worthy of the traditions which are their heritage.

"There is not time, nor is this the occasion, to dwell upon the phases of the war since my last visit. The most recent had its inception on Feb. 1 last, in an attempt to starve into submission the people of these islands by the ruthless sinking of all ships entering the wide ocean area around the United Kingdom. I am wholly confident this attempt will fail, but I am equally confident that to insure such failure the people of the Empire, especially of these islands, must realize that the peril is a substantial one. It must be met with a spirit which will not shrink from timely self sacrifice.

"I speak in no despondent mood, but as one disposed to face the realities. The enemy are staking everything upon this last throw of the dice. All their energies are being concentrated upon this year's campaign, whether on land or sea. Any flagging of our spirit or lack of effort, disastrous at any time, would be fatal now.

"Consider any sacrifice or self-denial, however stern, which may be imposed upon those at home. How do these compare with the privation, danger and suffering, too often the supreme sacrifice, of those who hold the lines in France and elsewhere? If any of us should chance to be despondent, let him go for confidence to the men in the trenches. If for a moment he lacks heart, let him go to the wounded in the hospital for courage. If we seek a standard for the nation's spirit, let us remember the discipline and heroism of the men who lined up on the deck of the Tyndareus when it was sinking.

"The German people are fighting with desperation under the belief engendered and fostered by the military autocracy that we seek to crush Germany and terminate her national existence. No such purpose was, or could be, in the minds of British people.

"The soul of the German people must be taught that military aggression is neither legitimate nor profitable, and world domination is impossible, that treaties are sacred, and that public conscience would not permit the rape of small or weak nations, and would not tolerate the horrible methods of barbarity characterized by the passage of the German armies and the occupancy of conquered territory. Finally, there must be world conscience which commands and can arouse a force sufficient to subdue a nation that runs amuck. This lesson must be thoroughly learned by the Germans. Let Germany so set her house in order that her change of ideal and purpose can be relied on, let her make reparation for the evil she had wrought; let her give adequate guarantees for the future. Thus, but not otherwise, can she have peace. For this, but not to crush her, the allied nations are fighting.

"For the first time in the Empire's history there are sitting in London two cabinets, both properly constituted, both exercising well-defined powers. Over each the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom presides. To its deliberations have been summoned representatives of the Empire's self-governing Dominions. We have gathered together here from the ends of the earth to take council with you of the Motherland upon the needs of the situation, so as to better coordinate our common efforts, and communicate our common purpose."

General Smuts, following Premier Borden at the Commons luncheon, paid a generous tribute to Canada's contribution. He did not conceal from himself that the position was grave, with the Germans now putting forth the maximum effort. The submarine campaign was really a raid on communications. No nation had ever been defeated by such means. Therefore we might hear of peace earlier than some of us thought possible.

"Do you know what time your sister's young man left last night?" "I think it was about 1, dad; because when he was going I heard him say: 'Just one! Only one!'"—Pearson's Weekly.

A motion to prohibit the use of the town hall for dances during war time was defeated by Walkerton council. The Telescope says the argument against the motion was "On with the dance! We need the money. We love our country, but—Oh, you one-fifty."

The town council of Paris, Ont. are being asked by the people there to put a very stiff tax on dogs, or prohibit them from being at large in the town, except in winter. But why winter time? If the dog is a nuisance in summer is he any the less a nuisance in winter.

Dunnville claims the honor of the first place in the province, where, at a Liberal Convention, women voted equally with men. This is surely a come down for the women. Imagine being only equal with a common, ordinary man!

Peter McArthur, who visited this section a short time ago, says he enjoyed cross-country driving, but he did not propose to make a habit of it. No wonder! Any man who, in the winter time, has a itinerary planned for him which takes in a drive from Tara to Allenford, to Port Elgin to Underwood, to Tiverton to Kincardine, and there arises in the dark hours to take a train, deserves it.

The Regina Province, a Conservative paper, has announced its party independence. It is in favor of free trade in wheat, free trade in machinery, aid to milling and packing houses, and federal prohibition in support of provincial prohibition. Certain Grit papers are anxious to interpret the independence of The Province as a desire to cater to the Liberal idea of politics. But wouldn't it be nearer the fact to say that The Province desires to serve the people. The politics-first newspapers, either Grit or Tory, are far from giving service to the people.

Wm. MacDonald, M. P. P. for North Bruce scored the government last week for cutting off a grant of $500 which it has given for several years to a country road in North Bruce. "Fourteen hundred dollars" he said, "for a Donegal rug for Government House and not a cent for the farmers of Amabel, seven hundred dollars for a commode for Government House and not a cent for the farmers of Amabel, $445 for curtains for the ball room of Government House and not a cent for the farmers of Amabel." And so he went on, contesting item after item of the treatment accorded to Government House and to the farmers of Bruce.

Sir William Peterson, principal of McGill University, says Mr. Rowell was the man who named 500,000 as the number of men Canada should raise. No one denies this. If we mistake not, Mr. Rowell went as far even as 750,000 men, but it was thought by most people at that time that 100,000 men would be a great number. But the finest stroke of political foresight pulled off about the time Mr. Rowell's suggestion was being heralded in large head-lines by his supporters, was Sir Robert Borden's consent to raise 500,000, and no conscription. The next move was apparently the Liberals' but it naturally led to conscription, and there the matter rests. Truth is, Canada has done, is doing and will continue to do, a wonderful work in winning the war. Tributes are being paid frequently by the United States journals to the stupendous part Canada has taken in the war. But let us give credit to the Canadian people rather than to politicians.

London doctors have found that the promiscuous issuing of prescriptions for whiskey is a violation of the Temperance Act, and $200 fines were given a few of them. One doctor issued 718 prescriptions for liquor since September. If he charged a dollar for each prescription, the doctor has made money, despite the heavy fine.

It would be very appropriate if Port Elgin could have nice Union Jacks flying from its town hall, high school and public school.

Enlistments in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces to the end of March totalled 407,302. Some of our politicians will be almost sorry to see that 500,000 mark reached by the voluntary method.

A few weeks ago five of the churches joined in union prayer meetings. These meetings culminated in a three weeks' evangelistic campaign. Perhaps the union prayer meeting has came to stay, and it would be a good thing if it has. The average prayer meeting here has an attendance of little more than a dozen. When merged as a union meeting there is some life and spirit in the thing.

Many citizens glory in their beautiful town. But just what it is that makes for beauty in Port Elgin they would have difficulty in describing, except that it be our beautiful maple shade trees. And yet how little some people value them. How many have taken thought to plant an extra tree? How many have concerned themselves about proper trimming? How many have pondered over the way the trees have been mutilated by trimming and tapping? If Port Elgin is to keep its reputation for beauty it will need to concern itself about the planting and care of trees.

Corp. Amer Howe Writes of Training in Camp

Corp. Amer, one of the Port Elgin platoon in the 160th, son of Mr. and Mrs William Howe, North Bruce, in a letter home from Mythett Camp, where he is training at a Sniper's School, under date of March 11th, says:

"Our course is very interesting. We start at 9 and work till 12 then from 2 to 4. So far it has been mostly lectures, and we must take a lot of notes. We have been to Farnboro picture show two days seeing pictures of scouts and snipers at work, also sketches of parts of trenches. It is all so interesting. I will tell you a little about it.

We are in two sections, 12 in each section. I am in A section. Here they have a section fixed up just as at the front, German trenches on one side and British at the other. B section went in to the German trenches and we went in to ours. We were supposed to be observing, and they were to make movements such as the enemy might make in their trenches. We had periscopes and were paired off to take notes of any movements seen, and report. Then we turned round and they made a few slight changes in front of the trench and we had to make report of this. They kept note of what they did, and these are compared.

Next Friday we go to London to see some of the latest snipers' holes, etc., then to the museum to see the most invisible colorings and paintings, and disguises. It only takes a couple of hours. Then we are free till Monday.

We have lots of company down here. A number of the 160th men were at the ranges here last week, including a number of Port Elgin boys. Bert Reibel has made the highest score of the battalion so far. He beat my score made a few weeks ago, by a few points. Of course they have their own rifles now.

A soldier was accidentally shot down here at the ranges last week, just through carelessness. He was not of the 160th battalion.

Well, I must close, I have been writing all day. We take rough notes, and then copy them so that makes a lot of writing. I am well, and feeling fine. Regards to all the people.

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export. It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

"A vegetable garden for every home"

Nothing should be overlooked in this vital year of the war. The Department earnestly invites everyone to help increase production by growing vegetables. Even the smallest plot of ground, when properly cultivated, produces a surprising amount of vegetables. Experience is not essential.

On request the Department of Agriculture will send valuable literature, free of charge, giving complete directions for preparing soil, planting, cultivation, etc. A plan of a vegetable garden, indicating suitable crop to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free to any address.

Friends Here

W. E. George, who lives at Virginia, Minn., and who formerly lived in Port Elgin, sends us the following from the Virginia paper:

"W. E. George, better known to his many Virginia friends as "Daddy," is 73 years old today.

He announced that fact to his friends this morning and nobody would believe him for there is nothing in his personal appearance to warrant a suspicion that he has attained this age. The oft-repeated phrase "seventy-three years young" applies with peculiar fitness to Mr. George's case for there is scarcely a man in Virginia who takes a more active interest in the affairs of the town.

Mr. George came to Virginia about ten years ago from Duluth, where he was an old resident. He is the father of Harry George, the local hardware man. His good health at what some men consider an advanced age may be attributed to a clean life."

WONDERFUL STUFF!
LIFT OUT YOUR CORNS

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether hard, soft or between the toes, will loosen right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is a compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus.

Put a few drops directly upon any tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it or afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson III.
April 15, 1917.

Jesus the Good Shepherd.—John 10: 1-18.

Commentary.—I. Christ the door of the fold (vs. 1-10). 1-6. "Verily," repeated for emphasis, shows that what was to follow was closely connected with what has just been written. Jesus declared that those who cast out the man born blind, when they ought to have protected him, were thieves and robbers. They were like those who would climb over the wall of a sheepfold to do injury to sheep and their owner. The Eastern sheepfold was a place enclosed by a stone wall, the greater part of which was open to the sky, while a part was covered by a roof. The entrance had a solid door which could be securely fastened. It was the shepherd's right to be admitted to the fold by the porter, who had charge of the door. The sheep recognized the voice of the shepherd, and were ready to follow him. This figure needed further explanation, and Jesus proceeded to make his teaching clear.

7. I am the door of the sheep—As the sheepfold stands for protection—under the care of a considerate keeper, so the entrance into that condition is Christ himself. There is no salvation outside of him. Through Christ the believer enters into a state of grace in which he is free from condemnation and is consciously saved. There is no other way by which one may enter the fold of God. Good works, good resolutions, or forms of religion will not afford an entrance into a state of salvation. 8. thieves and robbers—Jesus used the expression, "All that ever came before me," to include, not the prophets who foretold his coming and mission, but the Jewish leaders who had taught the leaders wrong doctrines, the traditions of men, and had bound heavy burdens upon them. They were not true shepherds, for they plundered the flock instead of caring for them. the sheep did not hear them—These false leaders did not speak with an authority that won the confidence of the people. The "thieves and robbers are contrasted to Christ "the door." 9. If any man enter in—There is admittance for all who will enter the fold through Christ the door. he shall be saved—He shall be free from condemnation, and shall have power over sin. shall go in and out, and find pasture—As the sheep are led out through the door into the rich pastures, and are led in at night for protection, so the followers of Jesus are afforded sustenance and security for their souls. 10. the thief cometh .. to destroy—In Palestine there are still those who attempt to steal sheep from the shepherd. The Pharisees were self-centered. They desired wealth and honor. They wished to be considered eminently pious, while at heart they were thieves and robbers. might have life—The motives of the Pharisees were in sharp contrast to those of Jesus. They would destroy the flock, but he would give life, spiritual life. abundantly—There is abounding spiritual life for those who enter the fold by Christ the door. It is not the will of God that any of his followers should be stinted and in want. He provides on an abundant scale for all who will trustingly yield themselves to him. If we are emaciated and destitute, it is because we are not willing to make a proper use of Christ the door. The abundant life includes victory over sin and deliverance from it. The Lord said to His people of old, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isa. 1: 19). He intended that this should apply to the temporal affairs of the people of Judah, but it had also its spiritual application. Those who were called by his name would have enjoyed great prosperity in material things, as also in spiritual, if they had cheerfully and fully obeyed the Lord. Jesus has made full provisions for his followers, and they will have abundant spiritual life if they are "willing and obedient."

II. Christ the Good Shepherd (vs. 11-18). 11. I am the good shepherd—The figure is changed. From being the door, the way into the state of salvation, Jesus becomes the shepherd of His followers with all that is included in that relation. "The word translated good can not be adequately translated; it means beautiful, noble, good, as opposed to foul, mean, wicked. It sums up the chief attributes of ideal perfection .... He is the good Shepherd, who gives His life for the sheep, as opposed to the wicked thief who takes their lives to preserve his own. Thus in Christ is realized the ideal Shepherd of the Old Testament."—Plummer. Giveth His life for the sheep—The literal shepherd has been known to give up his life in defending his sheep from robbers; Jesus, the good Shepherd, laid down His life that He might save the world from spiritual and eternal death. 12. Hireling—One who is hired. He has no interest in the flock further than to put in his time and receive his wages. It is nothing to him whether the sheep thrive and are safe or not. He does not own the sheep and cares much more for his own ease and safety than for the welfare of the flock. The hireling shepherd represents the Pharisees who had no interest in the people further than to secure emolument for themselves. The wolf—Whatever threatened the safety of the flock is represented by the wolf. The hireling's motto was "Safety for myself first." 13. Because he is an hireling—His love for the sheep and his responsibility to his master are not strong enough to keep him at his post of duty when danger threatens him and the flock. The hireling shepherd is of little value in caring for sheep, and the hireling shepherd in the church does not have any proper regard for the spiritual interests of his flock, but his concern is for his own interests.

14. Know my sheep—The Oriental shepherd knows his sheep and calls them each by name. A Lebanon shepherd once said, "If you were to put a cloth over my eyes, and bring me any sheep and only let me put my hands on its face, I could tell in a moment if it was mine or not." The good Shepherd knows every one of his sheep in all time and in all lands by name, and he never forgets. More than that, he knows the exact physical, mental and spiritual condition of each and he knows the circumstances of each. And am known of mine—"And mine own know me."—R. V. To know Jesus Christ is to have yielded fully to Him and to have by faith received Him as a personal Saviour. Sheep come to know their shepherd by his voice, and they obey his calls, but they flee from the voice of strangers. 15. Even as the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father (R. V.)—This is clearer than the Authorized Version. There should not be a full stop at the end of v. 14. An intimate acquaintance exists between Christ and His followers. It is life eternal to know Him and the Father.

16. Other sheep .... not of this fold—Without doubt Jesus here meant that he had followers among the Gentiles. Those were far from the Jewish to the good Shepherd. This statement would not be pleasing to the Pharisees, to whom Jesus was speaking. They could not conceive how any outside of the pale of Judaism could be of sufficient value to claim the notice of the Almighty. This would be a stunning blow to pharasaic pride. Them also I must bring—He had spoken of laying down his life for the sheep. This he would do for all races and conditions of men. They shall hear my voice—The Gentiles would know the voice of the good Shepherd as well as would the Jews. They shall become one flock, one shepherd (R. V.)—The wall of separation between Jews and Gentiles would be broken down. All Christians now are in one spirit, but they will be one in a richer and deeper sense when all misunderstandings shall have been swept away and we shall know as we are known. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me—The Father loved the Son, but he also loved the world enough to give his Son to save mankind. The ground for the Father's love for his Son is here stated to be the Son's dying for the world. 18. No man taketh it from me—Jesus here makes a clear declaration of his power over his own life. No one could take it from him without his consent. He could lay it down and he could take it up again at will. This commandment—To die and rise again. From my Father (R. V.)—The intimate relations of the Son to the Father is here shown, as also the Son's obedience to the Father's word.

Questions.—Who are represented by those who climb up some other way into the sheepfold? What is said of the mutual knowledge of the shepherd and the sheep? What is implied by Jesus' statement, "I am the door of the sheep"? Why does Jesus call himself the good Shepherd? Draw the contrast between the shepherd and the hireling. What is meant by "other sheep"? What power had Jesus over his life?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Christianity Portrayed.

I. Embracing full redemption for man.

II. Revealing atonement through Christ.

I. Embracing full redemption for man. We have here a precise statement of a definite historical situation. The time had come for Jesus to lead his flock out of the theocracy which was destined to pass away. He recognized the sequel of that inevitable passing away of Judaism in the recent expulsion from the temple of the man whom he had healed of blindness, and also in the hostility of the rulers, of which he found himself the object. The Pharisees claimed to be the shepherds of Israel. They decreed who should be admitted to, or cast out of, the fold. They professed to be interpreters of God's truth and with it to feed his flock. They had established an authority over the people which had no sanction in the divine law to enhance their own greatness at the cost of the spiritual welfare of the people, a course which involved their spiritual ruin. They had done this by evil methods by stratagem, by hypocrisy and greed. Selfishness had destroyed the very life of the nation. The officials had listened with sneers and in anger to Christ's assertions of union between himself and God, while they contemplated a step to put him out of their way and to shatter his claims. Jesus read their thoughts and answered them calmly with the consciousness that such an event would only point to his own voluntary self-sacrifice and render him the special object of his Father's love. Jewish unbelief could not defeat his purpose to establish a kingdom into which should be admitted Jews and Gentiles. Jesus represented himself in contrast with a type of character which he called "the thief." He contrasted the religious guidance of the Pharisees, as the shepherds of Israel, with that afforded by himself in respect to loyal devotion and obedience. In the allegories of this lesson he laid down the relation which should obtain between himself and his people unto the end of time. He presented himself before the whole race of man and declared himself able to deal with and meet the needs of every individual, securing unto all, who accept him as Shepherd, perfect safety and freedom with sufficiency in all things. His surpassing goodness is shown in the provision he has made of all things necessary for the salvation of his flock. As the good Shepherd he thoroughly identifies himself with the sheep. He rescues them from the great robber. He brings them to his fold.

II. Revealing atonement through Christ. The first word picture here describes the forming of the Messianic flock and its departure from the theocratic fold; the second describes the life of the flock, when formed and led by the Messiah, when the fold no longer represented the ancient covenant, but Messiah's salvation and that complete happiness which believers enjoy. At first God caused the porter to open the door to the shepherd. When Christ came, he became the door of a constant daily salvation. By him alone man has access to the Father, the enjoyment of salvation and a title to heaven. To all who accept the atonement of Christ the provisions of God's spiritual bounty are open. Christ's coming actually brought the blessings of the divine life in reach of all. It was by no flash of splendor or miracle of external power that he proved his divine leadership over the hearts of men, but by coming to walk with them, to toil, hunger and suffer with them and to give his life for them. The life which he yielded up for the ends of love was restored in the triumphs of love. The taking up of his life was as much in the divine plan as the laying it down. The concealed aid of heaven was at his bidding. But more than all this was the strength of his submission. The Jews were ignorant of the power that restrained itself. They regarded him as their victim. Jesus spoke of his power to show how complete was his obedience. He spoke not of power to avoid his sacrifice, but to make it. His majesty was apparent when he spoke of the complete mastery and control over his life. His life-service was to be crowned by his sacrificial death.—T. R. A.

Why patch up an old quarrel when it is so easy to make a new one?

Do Dairy Cows Pay On Dear Land?

They Do When They Are Given a Reasonable Chance—Our Expert Tells How to Do It.

(BY PROFESSOR R. H. DEAN).

While it is admitted that for the man with rough pasture land the dairy cow is one of the most economical animal producers of human food that a farmer can own, some have doubted her ability to make profit on high-priced land. These doubters argue that the returns from dairying on soil suitable for market gardening and located near a good market or convenient for shipping, are not to be compared with the returns from growing vegetables, small fruits, etc. This is doubtless true so far as gross returns are concerned, but the operating expenses for truck farming are so heavy and the cost of fertilizers is such that these two items eat a large hole in the money received for vegetables and fruits. On restricted areas of land, say from 5 to 25 acres, and where natural and marketing conditions are favorable, we may admit that truck farming is likely to be more profitable than dairy farming in Canada, largely for the reason that Canadian dairymen find it difficult to get away from the idea that a cow requires a considerable area of land to roam over in order to produce milk economically. In this respect our farmers have much to learn from European dairymen, who seem to have solved the problem of keeping cows on small farms. In many of these countries the standard is one cow per acre, and very little feed is purchased, except concentrates. The probabilities are that the chief factor in Canada which prevents intensive dairy farming is labor, but with improved machinery we ought to be able to solve this problem as satisfactorily as the European farmer has done.

ONE COW TO TEN ACRES.

In Ontario the average number of cows, in the best dairy counties, is about ten to one hundred acres of cleared land. This appears to be a large area land for the most economic results. However, we need to bear in mind that most Ontario dairy farmers are also "mixed" farmers—they keep a number of other kinds of live stock in addition to cows; they grow some grain or other crop for a cash crop, and have part of the farm in orchard, and vegetable crops, such as potatoes. In this way they endeavor to have something for sale that will be profitable in case one or more of the other crops fail. The returns from the dairy are the surest of any, because there is always a good demand for dairy products at paying prices, no matter what the conditions of trade. People must have milk, butter and cheese regardless of the price.

The only doubtful factor in the dairy business, assuming good cows are kept, is that of feed. In a dry season like that of 1916, many cows were not properly fed, and consequently the milk flow was lessened considerably below that of a normal year, although the high prices paid for milk and its products stimulated farmers to feed as much as possible, particularly of hay, which was a good crop. But hay is not a satisfactory supplement for dry pastures. A cow requires succulent feed to produce milk in paying quantities. It is, therefore, very important that dairy farmers on high-priced land shall be prepared for off-seasons in grass production. So long as we remain wedded to the pasturing idea for feeding cows in summer there are three things which need special attention.

MORE GRASS AND CLOVER PASTURE.

The Ontario farmer is too much given to the use of timothy and red clover only, when seeding his land. There are a great many mixtures of grasses and clovers much more suitable for Ontario farms than the old one of timothy and red clover. The Field Husbandry Department of the O. A. College recommends per acre the following, where land is to be pastured two or more years: Red clover, 6 lbs.; alsike, 3 lbs.; orchard grass, 3 lbs.; meadow fescue, 3 lbs.; timothy, 3 lbs.

Pasture is likely to be short in 1917 on account of the very dry season of last year, which burnt the new and old seeding and because the crops were eaten much closer than usual in the fall, which is not a favorable condition for satisfactory wintering. This means a slow start and late grass next spring, unless the weather conditions are extremely favorable.

In such cases it would be good policy to sow one of the annual pasture crops recommended, such as, one and a half bushels of oats, thirty pounds of Early Amber sugar cane and seven pounds of red clover seed per acre; or, the one-one-one mixture of oats, barley and wheat, with six to eight pounds of red clover seed added.

Peas and oats, or vetches and oats, or alfalfa may be cut for a soiling crop, but the labor of cutting and hauling green crops for cows makes these rather expensive cow-feed. It is a good plan to sow at least a small piece of land to some soiling crop for emergencies, and, if not needed, it may be cured as hay. A dairy farmer seldom has too much hay, as cows are able to consume enormous quantities, if not getting sufficient roughage in other forms of feed.

PROVIDE SUMMER SILAGE.

We have frequently referred to the fact that one of the best insurance policies a dairy farmer can carry is a summer silo filled with good corn silage. If it is not needed this year, it may be carried over for the next year, or for several years, and will be ready whenever needed to help out short feed, summer or winter.

Where corn can be grown successfully, as it can in practically all parts of old Ontario, farmers who keep cows should grow an extra two or three acres of corn for each five or six cows that will be milking. A cheap stave silo will preserve this crop in a satisfactory manner. In this way the capital outlay is small and the risks of short feed are thereby very much reduced. We need to bear in mind that cows without plenty of feed are a poor paying proposition. A few good cows well-fed, pay much better than a larger number improperly fed. While we believe that a man should carry all the cows possible on his farm—good cows preferably, but poorer cows rather than empty stalls—it does not pay to stint the feed to a good milker.

A very good motto in feeding cows is: Grow all you feed, and feed all you grow. Thus you save freight and commission charges on bulky material, such as is the nature of most feeds for cows. While it is advisable to purchase feed at times, it is much better to grow feed so far as possible on one's own dairy farm, especially the bulky feeds.

Can the cow hold her own on high-priced land? The writer thinks she can, if we have the right kind of cows and pay special attention to the growing of the right kind of feed. With milk selling for around two dollars a hundred pounds, butter at 40 to 45 cents a pound, and cheese at 24 to 25 cents a pound wholesale, there is no reason why the cow should not continue to be, as in the past, the most profitable animal kept on the farm.

Our Butter Must Be Graded

"I do not believe the butter market will hold at present prices," said Mr. John H. Scott, head of butter grading work for Ontario, at the Woodstock Dairymen's Convention. "Sooner or later conditions will change; when prices will fall to normal or perhaps go lower."

And this, Mr. Scott explained, would bring a mighty serious problem to the door of the Ontario dairyman. The western provinces were producing enough butter for their own uses and had become exporters. Due to the fact that their butter was graded and was superior to the general run of Ontario butter, it would beat ours in our own home markets. And, of course, it would lead in foreign markets also. Therefore, when the demand falls off after the war, and with Canadian markets being supplied by new competitors, the only solution of the Ontario butter trade will be the manufacture of butter of the finest quality, properly graded, and suitably guaranteed.

The first, Mr. Scott pointed out, began with the farmer himself. Unless cream of the proper quality was sent to the creamery, butter of the finest quality certainly could not be manufactured.

POOLING HURTS INDUSTRY.

At the same time, Mr. Scott was not inclined to blame the dairyman for present conditions. Rather he blamed the system of buying cream by pooling methods. When a man realized that his good cream was mixed with poorer grades and all paid for alike, he was rather inclined to believe a premium was being placed upon carelessness. "The system brings the best down to the average and raises the poorest to the average," said the speaker. "It is a kind of socialistic system which is not popular with our good farmers who do produce cream of a high quality."

In order to commence preparatory work leading to the grading and standardization of our butter, Mr. Scott was given a commission to study the conditions of butter being shipped from our creameries and to assist the creamery men in improving the quality. He found that 57 per cent. of butter inspected by him graded No. 1 and 41 per cent. No. 2. The June butter was excellent, but after that when the "hot weather goods" began to arrive, not half was No. 1. On the other hand, certain creameries shipped nothing but first class butter in every season.

IMPROVE MARKETING CONDITIONS

"The system of marketing butter might be greatly improved," said Mr. Scott. "An organized system of co-operative marketing might be introduced with great benefit to the trade—an official organization of buyers and sellers representing both ends of the trade, with the object in view of paying for butter on a basis of quality."

"The system of marketing butter at present is generally the following: The creamery sells to the dealer by telephone, or ships on consignment to regular commission merchants. The butter is bought as good marketable butter and supposed to be of first quality unless otherwise mentioned. It is usually shipped in government refrigerator cars during the hot months. On arriving at the storage it is inspected. The buyer governs his inspection a good deal by the market. If the market has advanced since he bought its defects will be lightly passed over. If the market, on the other hand, has declined, quality will take a large place from the buyer's standpoint."

These facts cannot be too strongly emphasized. We must practise better methods all along the line. Cream must be paid for upon a quality basis. It is the only practicable way of encouraging good practice and discouraging poor practice. Butter must be properly manufactured, skilfully graded and sold as directly as possible. In the days to come we must hold our home market and develop a large foreign trade. And we can do this only on a quality basis. Every dairyman must take these facts to heart and act—now.

WILLIAM TELL.

The Story Was Old in Denmark Before the Swiss Borrowed It.

Do you know who shot the apple on the head of the little boy? Why, William Tell, of course! Everybody knows how Tell delivered Switzerland from the tyranny of Austria. At least everybody used to know. Unfortunately, for pure romance, the historian and the investigator have been unduly active in the past quarter of a century, and the result has left us few heroes with enough clothing of romance to cover their skeletons.

We have read Schiller's beautiful and inspiring play, either in our college German course or in translation, and we cling to William Tell with all the ardor of youthful enthusiasm. And along comes the historian and tells us that it is all a myth, that the dates fixed by the Swiss chronicles on the subject do not coincide with the dates of the historic events that were supposed to be taking place in Austria at the same time and that earlier records of Switzerland make no mention of the archer's master shot.

The selfsame story is told in the Danish legends, two centuries before it crops out in the Swiss narrative, and further investigation shows that it was borrowed by the Danes, the original apple having been shot from the original child's head by a German bowman named Eigil when King Nidung sought to test the man's skill and nerve. In that remote story it is related that Eigil concealed another arrow in his bosom with which to kill the king if he injured his child. John Fiske, the American historian, was largely responsible for robbing us of William Tell.

A PUZZLING CASE

"Yes, it sounds ridiculous, I admit, but just look at the facts of the case. Here is a man who has invented a black carnation, and has not let even a bud out of his hands—at least so says Mrs. Lanster. Well, Dallas, as we have found out from his valet, sent a letter from Paris to Madame Mazzucata; that letter, as Gilbert proved, contained a black carnation. Now, in order to get that flower, Dallas must have gone to Maxwell, therefore Maxwell must know something about this case."

"But Dallas might have stolen the flower."

"True, but that is what you have to find out, and it is as well to be on our guard. Now, if Maxwell does chance to know anything about this case, which, going by the above reasoning is not improbable, if you ask straight out to see that black carnation plant, he will immediately become suspicious and say nothing. Whereas, by a little dexterous diplomacy, you can see the plant and find out all about it."

"It is a difficult thing to do."

"Yes, but I am sure you can do it. If I send a detective, Maxwell may find out my emissary's business and refuse to show him the plant but you—you are a gentleman wishing to buy plants, and, therefore, Maxwell will be off his guard."

"But why should Maxwell be on his guard?"

"Because I feel sure he is mixed up in this matter."

"And why?"

"Why," echoed Tancred, with a significant smile, "why, my dear major, just think over all the evidence we have collected in connection with this case. Mazzucata herself said she had seen a black carnation long before Dallas sent her one—in fact, he sent her that particular flower, so to speak, on her own suggestion."

"Well?"

"Well," reiterated Tancred, impatiently, "don't you see that Mazzucata must have known Maxwell in order to have seen a black carnation?"

"That's true enough."

"Of course it is. I tell you what, major, I should not be surprised to find out that Dallas had nothing to do with the death at all."

"What, did he not send that black carnation from Paris?"

"Yes."

"And did he not buy a bouquet similar to that of Gilbert's on the sixteenth?"

"He did. I found that out from Phillis & Co. On the morning of the sixteenth Dallas went to Phillis & Co. and asked if a bouquet was being made up for Mazzucata. They told him yes, and described the bouquet."

"Which they had no business to do."

"Of course they hadn't, but what can you expect from a parcel of chattering girls such as Mrs. Lanster employs. Well, Dallas had a bouquet made up all white flowers."

"With a black rose in the centre."

"No, all white. He put in the centre piece himself; not a black rose, but a Black Carnation."

"And changed the bouquets at the Hotel Europa."

"I think so; but at all events, he ordered the bouquet as I told you."

"And with all this you think Dallas is innocent," I asked, ironically.

"I can't say that for certain. We have an admirable case against him, still——"

"Still what?"

"I wish to find out why Mazzucata knew that her death would be preceded by the appearance of a Black Carnation."

"And you think Maxwell knows?"

"My dear major, as Maxwell is the only man in possession of such an unique flower, it stands to reason that he must know."

"Well, I will try and find out all about that tomorrow," I said, finishing my sherry.

"Be very careful, major," said Tancred, rising to his feet and putting on his hat—"by the way, major, I am a bit of a prophet, and I prophecy you will see someone down at Lippinton, or hear that someone has been down there whom you little expect either to see or hear of."

"And this someone?"

"Guess."

"Dallas?"

"No."

"Ilma Celinski?"

"No."

"Then I can't think who it can be."

"What do you say to Signor Ivan?"

"The tenor! But why?"

"He handed Mazzucata the fatal bouquet. It was rather curious that such a bouquet should have been picked up by Signor Ivan from among so many bunches of flowers."

"Then you think——"

"I don't think anything for certain. However, wait till I hear your report and I will give my opinion."

"Regarding Signor Ivan?"

"Yes, and others. Look at the people mixed up in this affair, major—a list which is growing longer every day. Tresslinger, Dallas, Ilma Celinski, Maxwell, and Ivan. Five of them."

"Which of the five do you think guilty?"

"I don't know. There may be a sixth for all I know."

"And that sixth?"

"Will doubtless be a woman."

CHAPTER VIII.

I was so much excited by my interview with Tancred that I had but little sleep that night. Truly, the mystery was assuming gigantic proportions, for as soon as one problem was solved, another more difficult than the last presented itself. At first it had been hard to find anyone who had a motive in removing Madame Mazzucata, but now it seemed as though there were five people mixed up in the affair. Tresslinger was innocent I knew, in spite of appearances being so much against him, and as to Dallas, notwithstanding that Tancred had constructed such a subtle case, it appeared as though, owing to the discovery of Maxwell, he also was guiltless. Ilma Celinski I suspected myself, and Tancred seemed to regard Signor Ivan as a probable accomplice in the tragedy. Five people, against whom suspicion could be directed, and, in the words of the barrister, a possible sixth.

Certainly, it was no easy task from among this number to find the guilty person, but the solution of the whole mystery was doubtless to be found at Lippinton; so for that village I left next morning by the mid-day train.

In this difficult matter I was somewhat puzzled how to proceed, as, according to Tancred, the slightest hint of my true errand might arouse the suspicions of Simon Maxwell and spoil everything. But then I did not agree with the lawyer in his surmise about Maxwell being involved in the affair, as it was absolutely ridiculous to suppose that an obscure market gardener could be connected in any way with a world-famous prima donna. True, Maxwell possessed the celebrated Black Carnation plant, but that did not argue that he himself sent a bud to Mazzucata, as he would have no reason for such a proceeding, and my theory was, that someone had stolen the flower for the purpose to which it was applied. Therefore, arguing in this way, Maxwell had nothing to do with the tragedy, and would not be in the least suspicious of my unexpected visit. Nevertheless, I determined to be careful and find out all I could about the unique plant, without mentioning either the black carnation or Mazzucata.

In due time, I arrived at Lippinton, which is a pretty rustic village, situate not far from Harrow, and had no difficulty in finding Maxwell, who seemed to be very well known in the neighborhood. Flower gardening is a graceful occupation, and should suggest graceful ideas, but apparently, this was not the case with Mr. Maxwell, as the exterior of his house had a most forbidding appearance. While of no great size, it was severely plain; and was built of white stone, with a black painted door, which seemed like the entrance to an undertaker's establishment. No garden in front, no flower boxes in the windows; it faced the dusty road in aggressive ugliness, flanked by two pretty little houses on either side, which accentuated the black appearance of their starved-looking neighbor.

"I suppose the garden is at the back," I murmured to myself, as I rang the bell. "It is to be hoped that it is more inviting than the front view. Judging by the house, Simon Maxwell, Florist, must be a singularly unpleasant person."

In answer to my summons, a neatly attired maid-servant appeared, who forthwith conducted me through a passage to a courtyard at the back of the house. Roofed with glass, it resembled a hot-house in temperature, and was filled with a profusion of tropical plants which bloomed radiantly in the moist air. The wall at the end of the courtyard was also glass half-way up, that is, from the centre to the roof, and through this transparent screen I could see the gardens stretching far into the distance. The walks, laid out at right angles to one another, gave this space a certain resemblance to a chess board; and here and there were long rows of greenhouses, their glass roofs glittering in the sun. At those, however, I cast but a casual glance, being fully occupied in admiring the wonderful beauty of the flowers growing under the glass dome of the courtyard. This latter was covered with a kind of green glaze, which produced a certain twilight effect, and on all sides, I saw masses of rainbow tints, while the odor of the flowers in the warm air was almost insupportable.

Unfortunately, I know nothing about flowers, my knowledge being confined to a few common specimens, such as a daisy, a marigold, a sunflower, therefore, I am unable to describe the plants in any correct fashion. However, remembering the object of my visit, I sought everywhere in vain for the black carnation, but that unique flower was conspicuous by its absence. It was the veiled odalisque of this botanical seraglio, and its jealous master doubtless, kept it under lock and key.

At this moment of my reflections, a man entered the greenhouse from the nursery garden, and it did not take me long to come to the conclusion that this was Simon Maxwell. I am no stickler for beauty in a man, provided his appearance is passable, but I must say, that Maxwell was the most perfect type of a Caliban, which it has ever been my fortune to see. Short in stature, crooked in figure, with a sullen heavy face and ungainly hands and feet, he was more like a gorilla than a man; nor did his voice, language or demeanor prepossess me at all in his favor.

"Major Granby," he said, in a harsh tone, looking at my card which he held in his hairy paw—I cannot call it a hand. "Well, sir, and what can I do for you?"

"Mr. Maxwell, I presume?" I remarked, affably, deeming it wise to get into the good graces of this monster.

"Yes, what is it?"

"I wish to look at some flowers."

"They are all around you, sir. Is there any particular flower you wished to see."

I wished to ask for the black carnation, but such a proceeding would have been abrupt, so I came to the subject in a roundabout fashion, which I judged to be eminently diplomatic.

"The fact is, Mr. Maxwell, I am tired of ordinary flowers and wish to procure some unique specimens."

"I can give you what you wish, sir," he replied, in a civil manner, though his voice was odiously harsh. "But the prices will be large."

"Oh, that will be no bar to our dealings, I assure you."

When I made this last remark he smiled in a gratified manner, and, taking me around the courtyard, began pointing out the beauties of the various flowers, and explaining the peculiar excellence of each. To these explanations I listened attentively enough—at least to all appearances, for in reality I was closely examining the face of this brusque individual. I flatter myself, and not without reason, that I am something of a physiognomist, but, to tell the truth, the contrary face of this man puzzled me greatly. He had a hard, set mouth, an obstinate chin, but his eyes were singularly beautiful, and at times gleamed with a soft expression, though at others they glittered like steel. His well-formed head was badly placed on his shoulders, and his stumpy fingers ended in club-shaped nails, always a bad sign. While thus inspecting him in a furtive fashion, I noticed that his eyes were blue and his hair dark, an association which is peculiarly Irish. The name Maxwell was distinctly Scotch, but the man himself I took to be Irish, a fact which I determined to make sure of. My reason for doing so was a mild one, nevertheless, strong enough for me to persist in finding out his nationality.

"You have certainly a wonderful show of flowers here, Mr. Maxwell," I said, artfully. "I have only seen one nursery garden as good as this."

"And where may that be, sir?" he demanded, curtly, not very pleased at the insinuation.

"In Ireland."

Maxwell shook his head.

"No, I know Ireland thoroughly and never yet saw a show of blossoms equal to mine."

"Perhaps you are right," I answered, carelessly, "no Irishman was ever a gardener."

"You think so, sir?"

"I'm convinced of it."

"Then you don't call me a gardener, sir?"

"Oh, yes, I do; but then you are a Scotchman."

"No, sir," he answered, promptly, "I am Irish."

I inwardly rejoiced at having my belief thus confirmed, but with a view to obtain more information, continued carelessly:

"But the name Maxwell is Scotch."

"Aye, but the man Maxwell is Irish. It's this way, sir. My ancestors crossed from Scotland to the north of Ireland some hundred and fifty years ago, so I am Scotch by descent, but Irish by nationality."

"Oh, then I am correct in assuming that you are a Londonderry man?"

"Yes, from Omagh."

"Ah, the wearing of the green."

"No, sir, no," he replied, violently; "I am an Orangeman. My forbears were Presbyterians, and I am so also, and please God shall continue so till I die."

"A fanatic," I thought, being now confirmed in my idea. "I wonder——"

"But this is not to the point, sir," he said, hastily cutting short my meditations; "come with me and I'll show you some very rare flowers."

Upon my word, I felt inclined to

He opened the door which led into the grounds, and we passed out into the sunshine.

"You send a great many flowers into town, I suppose, Mr. Maxwell," I observed, as we strolled along the sandy path.

"A great many. Phillis & Co. are my best customers."

"So I believe. It was Phillis & Co. that recommended you to me."

"They do a great business, sir, if not a pious one."

The strangeness of this observation struck me so forcibly that I stopped short in my walk and looked at him in amazement.

"A pious one," I reiterated, wondering what was his meaning.

"Aye, they make up flowers and wreaths for the opera."

"Well, why shouldn't they? It's not a sin."

"In my eyes it is a sin," he said, sternly. "I have a hatred of all such iniquitous doings, such as singing and dancing. Never would I send flowers to the opera from this place."

"Yet, you do so."

"I do business with Phillis & Co., so when I send flowers to them, my business ceases with delivery of the same. If they choose to make up flowers for singing women, it is none of my affair."

"You don't seem well disposed towards singers, Mr. Maxwell."

"I am not; and I have good reasons for it."

I made no comment on this last speech, though it did a great deal to confirm the suspicions I entertained when discovering his nationality.

"I am sorry to hear you have such a poor opinion of artistes, Mr. Maxwell. There are good and bad people in all professions."

"All those connected with the stage are bad."

"You speak rather wildly. Have you ever known any singers?"

Maxwell looked at me keenly for a few moments, then let his chin sink on his breast, with a heavy sigh.

"Aye. One or two."

"You shouldn't judge the whole profession by one or two samples."

"By the one, we know the many, Major Granby, sir," he answered, coldly. "I detest the whole pack of them, and will do no business with stage players of any kind."

"Well, I don't suppose they ever wish to do business with you."

"Don't they," retorted Maxwell, grimly. "Why, one was down here the other day—Signor Ivan."

"Signor Ivan!" I echoed, in amazement, as I thought of Tancred's suspicions. "The tenor now singing at Covent Garden?"

"I don't know where he is singing, sir. He came down here a week or so ago to select some flowers, but I refused to give him a single one."

"Did he steal any?"

"Steal any? I dare say he would have been quite capable of it, but, so far as I know, he did not."

"Not even a black carnation?"

It was imprudent, I know, to thus betray the purpose of my visit; but I was hardly prepared for the effect which my observation had on Maxwell. His face changed to a grayish pallor, his mouth closed like a vice, and his eyes glittered ominously.

"The Black Carnation," he repeated, slowly, with suppressed savagery. "May I ask, sir, what you know about the Black Carnation?"

"Nothing more than I have learned from the papers."

"What have the papers to say about it?"

"Have you not read the account of Mazzucata's murder."

"I never read the papers," said Maxwell, in a hard tone. "When I require reading, I open my Bible, and neither know nor care to know, what iniquity is being practised in London."

"Mazzucata," I explained, keeping my eyes intently fastened on his face, "was a prima-donna at the opera, who was killed on the night of the sixteenth of May, by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge hidden in a bouquet."

"Is that so?" replied Maxwell, indifferently. "The ways of iniquity are hard. But why do you tell me this?"

"Because in the fatal bouquet there was a Black Carnation."

"Impossible. I alone possess that plant; and I have never yet sold or given away a flower."

"Nevertheless, such is the case."

"I tell you such cannot be the case. I have invented and grown this flower. The bud in that bouquet must have been dyed."

"No, it was not dyed. It was a real flower, for I saw it myself."

"Are you sure?"

"Perfectly sure."

What Can a Little Chap Do?

What can a little chap do
For his country and for you?
What can a little chap do?

He can play a straight game all through—
That's one good thing he can do.

He can fight like a knight
For the truth and the right—
That's another good thing he can do.

He can shun what is mean,
He can keep himself clean,
Both without and within—
That's a very good thing he can do.

His soul he can brace
Against every thing base,
And the trace will be seen
All his life in his face—
That's an excellent thing he can do.

He can look to the light,
He can keep his thought white,
He can fight the great fight,
He can do with his might
What is good in God's sight—
Those are truly great things he can do.

Though his years be but few,
He can keep himself true,
He can follow the Christ,
He can follow the King,

Your House Reflects Your Character

You are judged by the house you occupy as much as by the clothes you wear. An unpainted, shabby place, showing evidence of neglect, advertises the character of the owner and his family most unfavorably. It implies carelessness and a lack of self-respect.

H. KATZ,

Dominion Day For Red Cross

The Red Cross ladies can begin to plan to assist the Dominion Committee, for at the annual meeting last Friday, the committee decided to hold its annual celebration, and to give all the money, after expenses are paid, to the Red Cross.

The committee decided to have the usual big program, with races for the afternoon and fireworks in the evening, and relay race as the leading features.

There was a fine attendance at the meeting, those present being, Messrs. H. H. Stevens, R. J. Ranney, E. R. Sayles, J. J. George, B. Hilker, Dunc. Falconer, G. McMurray, F. R. Barber, Jos. Collard, W. Bray, Dr. Power, G. McLaren, A. E. Eaton, H. Blindauer, R. C. Crawford, J. S. Cameron, H. Koebke.

Regrettable features of the meeting were the resignations of Treasurer Falconer and Secretary Crawford, who claimed that pressure of their business made it impossible for them to attend the meetings and look after the books. There were many expressions of regret, and a vote of thanks was placed on the minutes for their splendid services. The offices were combined, and E. R. Sayles made secretary-treasurer.

The new officers are: President—R. J. Ranney; Vice president, B. Hilker; Chairman, J. J. George; executive—Messrs. Stevens, Barber, G. McLaren, Falconer, Crawford, Dr. Power, C. E. Schwartz, H. Blindauer, McMurray, Pattison, Eaton, J. D. Falconer.

Railway committee, Messrs Stevens, Cameron and Sayles.

A special committee, composed of R. J. Ranney, J. W. Pattison, Dr. Power, Dr. Philps and H. Mulvency was appointed to have charge of the racing arrangements.

Despite the fact that no other celebration has such cheap admission charge, the Port Elgin Dominion Day committee still stays with the 25c and 15c. For 27 years they have given popular prices, and with the help of all the citizens and the people of the country in patronizing the affair, they can still give the old popular price.

Missing Line Contest in Full Swing

The Missing Line Contest is creating lots of interest among Times readers, and as a result the first mails after last week's issue had appeared brought in several contestants' lines.

This contest has no conditions. It is open to everyone both young and old. Through this Missing Line Contest, Port Elgin will be quite extensively advertised as a health resort. Times readers are at liberty to invite their friends to send in their lines, whether they are subscribers or not.

There are three prizes, as stated last week, and the judges are the same gentlemen as in the previous Limerick contest.

The verse for which the missing line is wanted is as follows:

There was an old lady named Cleaver
Who had rheumatics, measles and fever.
She selected The Port
For a health resort

. . . .

Here are some suggested lines. Can you do better? Think it over. Contest open till May 2nd. But better to send your missing line in early.

'Cause she knew her diseases would leave her.

And all her diseases did leave her.

Now she's cured, all diseases did leave her.

And made no mistake in it either.

And she soon was as spry as a beaver.

And quite soon they decided to leave her.

And now her husband can't believe her.

And her troubles she thought soon would leave her.

And soon found her troubles to leave her.

And now she's as healthy as ever.

But to leave her old home it did grieve her.

And soon got a man to squeeze her.

Because she admired the trees 'ere.

Knowing our climate would soon relieve her.

Knowing our doctors would never deceive her.

'Cause she knew that while there her diseases would leave her.

For she knew that old Port could relieve her.

And now all her troubles will leave her.

But her sickness, it seems, would not leave her.

And she was not deceived, either.

And the Port people sympathized her

For she was a jolly old skeezer.

And now she eats meat and taters

LITTLE LOCALS

Pte. M. H. Millen of Paisley, is in the list of wounded.

Pte. Earl Hendry in a letter to his mother says he is recovering nicely and that he will soon be to the trenches.

Miss Mina Grafton after spending the winter with her aunt, Mrs. McKenzie, left for Goderich to-day.

The Junior League of the Methodist church had a social time in the vestry of the church, in honor of Arthur and Mildred Kaake, who leave shortly for Toronto.

Mr. R. Caldwell, of Chinook, Alberta, in renewing for The Times, says: "We are greatly interested in the letters from the boys at the front, and the features of the soldiers. We are having a backward spring here, and have done nothing on the land yet." People in this district also note the backward spring, but apparently it is general.

The Soldiers Friend Club have sent parcels to the following boys in France: V. Lamont, H. Gear, J. McDuff, Fred Sees, A. Christian, R. Thomson, F. Geddes, D. Darling, E. Geddes, S. Harman, S. Morton, M. Moulton, and Mr. Starling. Each box contained: 1 pair socks, pair of towels, candy, peanuts, nut bars, soap, oxo, chocolates, candles and etc. The girls intend sending to each Port Elgin boy, those in France first.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Mr. Alex. McCannel, arrived home last week from a month's trip to Montana, where he was on business. The ex-Warden notes that things are backward in Montana. They have much cold wind there also. He rather expected to see our farmers into the seeding, but apparently the season is backward all over the country.

The young people had a great time last Thursday at one of their debating evenings. The subject was "Resolved that horses are of more use than autos." and it provided first-rate argument. Those on the affirmative were Georgina Burgess, J. D. Lyness, Ruby McIvor, and on the negative were Alice Burgess, Jean McLean, and Reua Gowanlock. The horses had the winning defenders. The young people are developing some excellent debaters, and the organization is creating much interest in the community.

The Red Cross shipped in the month of March, 28 pairs socks, 48 towels, 3 housewives, 12 dozen mouth wipes, 1 dozen face cloths, 1 pkg old cotton. 1 pair socks was donated by Mrs. Alex. Geddes.

Miss Felicia Wallace spent Easter holidays at her home at French Bay.

Getting Ready

Last week The Times published a list of Conservative officers for this district. This week there is considerable activity among the Liberals. They have yet to select a man, and if an election should come as soon as some men think, their candidate will hardly have time to turn around. The Kincardine Reporter, whose editor is Mr. J. J. Hunter, hinted last week that a big gun may be brought in. From observation the Liberals of this riding would hardly like that.

There are men in this riding well-known, capable, and honest, and whether win or lose, Liberals should select one of their own county men. The following are prominent, and often spoken of: J. J. Hunter, J. Malcolm, Kincardine; Alex Mewhinney, Arch McLean, Bruce township; Alex. McCannell, Saugeen; Warden Izzard, Inspector Bald, Port Elgin; J. E. Campbell, Hepworth; G. Kastner, Wiarton.

President Chambers will likely call for a convention first week in May, and it may be at Port Elgin. Most men attending the meeting now come in cars. Last convention brought out 200 Liberals.

Rev. Mr. Watt Given Send-Off

Rev. Mr. Watt was given a farewell by the congregations of Burgoyne and Dunblane, on Wednesday night. It was a great surprise to both the pastor and Mrs. Watt. They were invited to come over to the church about 8 o'clock, the whole affair being kept very quiet.

Mr. Alex. Geddes was made chairman, and a short program of speech and song was carried out, after which Mr. and Mrs. Watt were called to the front, and Mr. Walter Gowanlock read an address setting forth the appreciation of the people and their regret at the separation, while Mr. Will Pierson presented on behalf of the churches, a purse containing $75. Miss McTaggart, on behalf of the ladies presented Mrs. Watt with an address and a life membership in the Women's Mission Circle. Rev. Mr. Watt replied briefly, expressing his sorrow at separating from a people he loved so well. He greatly appreciated the many kindnesses which had been always given to himself and his family, and he would never forget the people.

Speeches were made by Reeve Christie, John Scott, Alex McLachlan, J. T. Wallace, John Pierson, songs by R. Pierson, and the Pierson family, music by the orchestra and gramophone music by J. Menzies, recitations by Olive Lyness and Master Sang.

Refreshments were served, and a very enjoyable time was spent.

REV. W. J. WATT

On Sunday Rev. Mr. Watt closed his pastorate at Burgoyne and Dunblane. At each service the church was filled. In the morning baptismal service was performed on two little ones.

Mr. Watt took occasion to say, during his discourse in the morning, which was preached especially for children, that he regretted deeply his separation, but he knew the friendships he had formed would last. Distance, time or place could make no difference to friendships that were real. He appreciated the many kind things done for him and his family. He had tried to do his part, and he felt that his work had been blest. Mr. Watt hoped that the new pastor would have the heartiest support of everyone. "You can show your love for me by your whole-hearted support of the new pastor," said Mr. Watt.

In Mr. Watt's removal the community generally loses a worthy man. His influence has been great among the young people, and he leaves a thriving and active church in all branches. Mr. Watt associated himself much with men, and his counsel was sought in many ways. He has proved a pastor of rare qualities, and the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Watt is a distinct loss.

Soon be time to swat the fly. Meantime be sure to wash the milk bottle.

Dr. Scanlan went to Toronto Saturday. Rev. Mr. Hallman took the services in the Methodist church, in the morning. No service in evening.

Special prayer was offered in the Baptist church Sunday by Rev. Buckberrough, for the soldiers and sailors, and for those who mourn the slain in battle.

Lieut. Mansell Scanlan Killed in Action

Dr. Scanlan received notification Friday that his son Mansell had been killed in action.

Lieut. Scanlan enlisted at Regina and was a city editor on The Leader paper. General regret is felt here.

Can't Prove a Homestead

Mr. James Parr of Crestwynd, Sask., says: "Here's my subscription. I am a little late, but always keep the old home paper coming. We can't prove up a "homestead" here without The Times. We had a very cold winter here, and nothing done at seeding yet. Men are scarce, and wages run from $45 to $70 per month. However, the farmers realize, as never before that a bumper crop is expected, and greatly needed this year, and they'll do all they can."

New Kingdom of Arabia

"The announcement of the formation of the 'new kingdom of Arabia' a few days ago failed to elicit in America the interest which the vast extent of territory involved would seem to warrant," according to a war geography bulletin issued by the United States National Geographic Society from its Washington headquarters. "The area of the Arabian peninsula, including that region known as Arabia Petraea and the Syrian desert, is about equal to the area of all the United States east of the Mississippi River plus Texas," continues the bulletin, "and it extends through more than 21 degrees of latitude, so that if transposed to this continent its northern boundary would coincide with the northern parts of Arkansas, while its southern tip would reach far beyond the northern border of Nicaragua in Central America.

"Having a maximum length equal to the distance between Montreal and the southern extremity of Florida, and a maximum breadth corresponding to the airline distance between New York city and Omaha, Neb., this great southwestern extremity of the continent of Asia is very sparsely settled, the estimates of its population varying more than 100 per cent. One authority places the number at 7,500,000, which is conceded to be excessive, while an ultra conservative figure is 3,500,000.

"Fully one-third of the Arabian peninsula is a waste of sand, the three most extensive of the barren regions being the great Nafud or Red Desert, the Syrian Desert and the Dahna Desert. And in addition to this wholly hopeless area there is a vast extent of territory where the supply of water is so sporadic that the land cannot support a settled population. The inhabitants are divided into two great classes—the nomadic Bedouins, who move from place to place as pasturage for their flocks of sheep and goats and their herds of horses and camels is exhausted, and the Fellahs, who follow agricultural pursuits in the small fertile areas and where wells and cisterns are relied upon to store up the rain water of the wet season.

"While the early despatches from Mecca, the capital of the newly formed kingdom, were silent on the subject, it is probable that the Grand Shereef, Hussein Ben Ali, is building his hope of empire chiefly on the three provinces of Hejaz, Asir and Yemen, which extend from the Sinai peninsula along the northeastern shore of the Red Sea to the British protectorate of Aden. In these provinces are the largest cities of the peninsula—Mecca, Jidda, Hodeida, Medina and Yambu. Both Hejaz and Yemen are vilayets of the Turkish empire and are governed by officials sent out from Constantinople. Asir is the home of a warlike, mountainous tribe, which has successfully opposed numerous attempts of the Turks to subjugate its members. Asir lies between Hejaz and Yemen and its valleys are among the most fertile in Arabia.

"Several important political divisions of Arabia doubtless will be unmolested by the Grand Shereef. Among these are the Sinaitic peninsula, a dependency of Egypt, which extends into the Red Sea, between the Gulf of Suez on the west and the Gulf of Akaba on the east; the British protectorate of Aden occupying the most southern extremity of Arabia and extending along the Gulf of Aden, its area being about 9,000 square miles, and the independent state of Oman, with a coast line of nearly 1,000 miles, along the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman, and embracing an area of 82,000 square miles.

"The provinces of Hejaz and Yemen have a combined area about equal to the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, but with a population scarcely exceeding a million, whereas the equivalent American area supports more than 24,000,000 inhabitants.

"In this restricted sections of Arabia, near the mountains, where the torrents bring down a sufficient supply of water, the soil yields abundant crops of wheat, barley, tobacco, sugar, indigo, cotton and coffee, while the date palm and the banana flourish luxuriantly. The flocks of sheep and goats, and the famous Arabian horses are the chief resources of the country, while from Oman comes the highly prized Oman dromedaries, noted for their speed and strength. The mineral wealth of the new kingdom is somewhat doubtful, although iron, copper, basalt, lead coal and asphaltum are known to exist, while the precious stones include emeralds, onyx, carnelian and agate. The pearl fisheries of the Persian Gulf are among the richest in the world, and these waters also yield quantities of sponges.

"Travellers ascribe to the Arabs many virtues. They are a proud and earnest people, sharp witted, courageous, temperate and hospitable, but when wronged are bloodthirsty and vengeful. One of their most striking characteristics is their great love for poetry. The children of the nomads, as well as the offspring of the fellahs, are early taught to read, write and calculate, as might be expected of the descendants of that race which gave us our Arabic numerals."

THIS FISH A BUTCHER

And He Carries His Saw in His Ugly Mouth at All Times.

Moral of this fish story is, the value of anything depends on how it is used. A safety match used to light a beacon lamp and another match used to set fire to a city have widely separated ranks in the realm of utility. On the same principle of values the sawfish belongs near the bottom rank in the ocean kingdom.

His saw, the presence of which you may have guessed already, consists of a long, beaklike mouth decorated with many sharp, firm spines. It varies in length with the size of the fish, some monsters twenty feet long carrying saws six feet long and a foot wide.

A saw, like a match, varies in value according to the way it is used. That's where the sawfish makes a fizzle of life. Think how much good he could accomplish by using his saw on harbors choked up with weeds, channels blocked with logs and lagoons crowded with trees and undergrowth.

Instead of a carpenter, a road builder, a farmer, the sawfish becomes a butcher. He swishes his saw this way and that quite recklessly and cuts up smaller fish into steaks and sausage; then he eats the pieces.

THE OLD AND NEW.

Constanza, Roumanian Seaport, of Old-new Character.

Constanza, the important Roumanian seaport and fortress on the Black Sea, which has figured so prominently in the news of late, is one of those new-old towns that are so characteristic of the Balkans. The Balkans are, of course, replete with towns once famous in ancient history that are, to-day, either little more than villages or have taken on a wonderful new development and are expanding, once more, into great and prosperous cities. The long [illegible] years of "Ottoman sleep," which fell upon most of these places in the thirteenth or fourteenth century, has now, for some time, been broken, and a general renaissance has, for the last forty or fifty years, everywhere characterized the liberated countries.

By the treaty of Berlin, which obliged Roumania to accept the "swamps of the Danube" and a recognition of her independence in exchange for that portion of Bessarabia ceded to her in 1856, she, of course, acquired possession of the ancient seaport of Constanza the Kustendji of the Turkish days. With a commendable energy she set about making the best of her new possessions. Constanza was taken in hand with a will. Very large sums of money were freely expended on the harbor and docks, whilst the town itself was laid out with broad streets and adorned with beautiful buildings. It is a city of mosques and churches, for, in a population of some 27,000, which is more than double what it was some sixteen years ago, all manner of religions are represented. It is, indeed, a curiously polyglot city, and Turk and Greek, Roumanian and Bulgar, the Jew and the Armenian, rub shoulders in the streets or on the quays; or, at any rate, so they did before the war.

In the matter of manufacture, Constanza devotes itself chiefly to the work of tanning and to the making of petroleum drums; but it is as a great port of transit that the town is particularly famous. Ever since the railway to Bucharest, which commences the passage of the Danube and its marshes at Tchernavoda, was completed, in 1895, Constanza has been growing in importance in this respect. Immense quantities of grain, in normal times, pass through the port, and it was until the outbreak of the war in 1914, the transfer point for the great overland journey to Constantinople and the Near East from London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Vienna and Budapest, and, indeed, from all over the continent. The service between Constanza and Constantinople was conducted by state-owned steamers, which included the fast mail and passenger boats in connection with the Ostend and Orient expresses.

Constanza occupies a site close to the ancient Tomi, at one time the chief city of the Euxine. It lies at the [illegible] ward end of the Great Wall of [illegible] and research goes to show that in ancient times a fortified town, [illegible] a place of no little importance. There are considerable remains of ancient masonry, walls, pillars and so on; whilst a number of inscriptions, found in the town itself and in the neighborhood, show that it was at Tomi that the poet Ovid spent those eight years of exile about which he complains so bitterly throughout the five books of the "Tristia."

In the fourth century Constantine the Great changed the name of the port to Constantiana in honor of his sister, and during the later Roman period, notably in the reign of Theodosius, the city passed through a period of great prosperity. It lay, however, too near the confines of the empire to be safe for very long, once the great decline set in, and it early passed under the control of the Bulgars, and later of the Turks. It was bombarded by the Russians in the war of 1812, and some seventeen years later was surrendered to the same power without any effort being made to defend it. Something over two years ago, only a few weeks before the outbreak of the war, Constanza was the scene of a famous meeting between King Carol of Roumania and the Czar of Russia.—Exchange.

A WOMAN WHO DARED.

Boston Will Honor Memory of Anne Hutchinson.

Rome, which in the sixteenth century burned Giordano Bruno at the stake in the Campo di Fiori for heresy, in the nineteenth century reared a statue in his honor on the very spot where it had put him to death, and the space at the base of this statue is a place of frequent assembly, a sort of popular forum, for the Romans of to-day.

Boston is about to show that it can also exactly reverse its estimation of a proscribed citizen. There is now on hand a growing subscription for a public statue here of Ann Hutchinson, a woman whom Boston banished in 1638 for heresy and for that strange form of sedition which consisted of an attempt to undermine the influence of the ministry.

There is every reason to believe that the subscription will be a success, and a spirited model of the proposed statue is already in existence. An interesting circumstance, surely, for there is not now in Boston a statue of a woman, although there are several which were made by women.

The city which banished Anne Hutchinson for her seditious preaching will not only honor her signally, but will honor her above all its other daughters—above her singers, such as Lydia Sigourney, Julia Ward Howe, or Lucy Larcom; her prose writers, such as Louisa M. Alcott, Sarah Orne Jewett, Lydia Maria Child and Mercy Warren; her thinkers and lecturers, such as Lucy Stone, Margaret Fuller, Mary A. Livermore, Ellen H. Richards; or her many just great women in every moral and intellectual way, such as Elizabeth Peabody and Mary Moody Emerson. Before all these, we say, will be honored the woman who long ago led the revolt against the rule that "your women shall keep silence in the churches."

Anne Hutchinson must surely have been a great woman in several respects. Without great intellectual the material error—although it may have been based upon the most accurate of spiritual classifications—of putting more of the clergy into the class of goats than into the class of sheep. In fact, she found but about two besides herself who possessed the covenant of grace. And as Boston of that date was a pure theocracy, Anne Hutchinson was doomed when at last challenged, and could be proved to have "traduced" the majority of the ministers.

Her banishment followed as a matter of course; but we may accept it as an evidence of her personal power that she was condemned to no more dreadful fate than to go and live in Rhode Island. It was there, on the island of Aquidneck, that Anne Hutchinson did the greatest thing that she ever did, in founding a community where it was decreed that no one should ever be "accounted a delinquent for doctrine."

For enunciating in practical form that sublime doctrine, which in time became the corner-stone of our nation, Anne Hutchinson deserves a statue in the city which is most closely associated with her name and fame. But, if the statue is erected somewhere in Boston, we may expect it to become, as the statue of Bruno has become in Rome, a peculiar shrine for those who commend it as a virtue to speak out one's opinions boldly, even if—let us say especially if—they are at variance with the general opinion of the community.—Boston Transcript.

Republican Advantages.

For three weeks he had borne all the horrors of the actual cleaning without a murmur. Then his patience gave way.

"And you," sobbed his wife, "you used to tell me I was your queen."

"Yes," he said, with a wild glare in his eyes; "but when a man finds his queen has used his best tobacco-jar for pale oak varnish and his meerschaum pipe for a tack-hammer he begins to grasp the advantages of a republic."—Tit-Bits.

Gallieni's Epigrams.

The late General Gallieni was a master of epigrammatic expressions. "Don't criticise until you can remedy," is one. "If you've got brains, use them; if not, plant cabbages," was another of the general's sayings. "Set things going, and keep them going," and "Say what you want done, but don't say more than a man can remember," were two other counsels.—Westminster Gazette.

An Optimist's Essay.

If the pessimists of the past had been right men would still be living in caves and trying to get their meals with clubs and flint arrows. And evidently they died without publicly confessing their mistakes, for their descendants' children continue to prophesy dismally that everything that is surely going to be cannot possibly come to pass. They seem to be born with the habit and cannot get over it.

WAR COUNCIL OF ALLIES IN WASHINGTON

British and French Commissions to Discuss War Policy With U. S.

BALFOUR AND VIVIANI

Questions of Loan, Naval Aid and Munitions to be Discussed.

Washington Report: — Assembly in Washington within a few weeks of a great international war council was foreshadowed by an announcement from the State Department to-day that a British commission, headed by Arthur J. Balfour, Minister of Foreign Affairs, is expected to arrive within ten days to discuss with the Government here questions connected with the conduct of the war. In addition to the Foreign Minister, the commission will include Admiral DeChair, of the British navy; General Bridges, of the army, and the Governor of the Bank of England, attended by a numerous staff.

This was as far as the announcement made by the State Department goes, but it was learned authoritatively that a French commission composed of officials and officers equally as distinguished as the British representatives, also will be in Washington about the same time. This commission will be headed by M. Viviani, at present Minister of Justice in the French Cabinet, and formerly Premier.

It is not known definitely whether any of the other allied powers will send commissioners to Washington, but it is assumed that owing to the difficulties of passage and the probable delay, the interests of these Governments will be confided to their resident Ambassadors.

Beyond the statement that the object of the commissions is to discuss generally questions of policy connected with the war, no information was given at the State Department.

The conference is stated to have been sought by the allied leaders themselves in order to discuss every phase of the war.

One of the first questions to be taken up will be the distribution of the $3,000,000,000 loan to the allies, for which President Wilson has asked Congress to provide.

The greatest problem before the conference is stated to be the maintenance of the flow of American munitions and food supplies to Europe. This will be sought first by naval co-operation to fight the German submarines; second, by construction of a huge fleet of wooden merchantmen to negative its destructiveness, and third, by ways and means to increase American manufacture and the allies' ability to pay for the products.

Naval co-operation is understood to contemplate the policing of all North and South American waters by the American navy, allowing the return of the British and French vessels engaged in that work, and the safeguarding by American ships of at least part of the sea lane to Europe.

The military participation of the United States also probably will be discussed in broad terms, though it is realized on all sides that this country will not attempt to send an army to Europe for the present.

GOOD ROADS MEN IN CONVENTION

Great Congress is Opened in Ottawa.

Advocate of Southern Highway Route is Busy.

Ottawa Report.—Good roads propagandists by the score are in the capital to-day from all parts of the Dominion and of the United States to attend the fourth Canadian and International Good Roads Congress.

His Excellency the Duke of Devonshire informally opened the Congress this afternoon. He took occasion to mildly criticize Canada's backwardness in linking up with the general movement in other countries for smooth, durable and well-kept roads. His five months experience of Canadian roads, he said, tended to give him a feeling of dissatisfaction with the condition of the roads. His Excellency warmly commended to the people of Canada the work of the Congress. It was, he said, a practical and needed patriotism for the present, and an essential preparation for the coming development of peace times.

Sir George Foster, Acting Premier, declared that the condition of a nation's roads was a reflex of the nation's character. He promised the hearty co-operation and support of the Government in the efforts of the Congress to awaken the people to the need of a more progressive and more scientific road-making policy.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier thought the people of Ontario could take a leaf out of Quebec's book in the matter of wisely spending money for good roads. He believed the old policy of cheap roads and dear maintenance should be reversed.

The Congress opened this afternoon in the Horticultural building at Lansdowne Park. To-day's proceedings were mainly concerned with the official opening proceedings, and the preliminary organization. To-morrow a series of addresses will be given by experts in road-making.

The roads exhibit in the Horticultural Hall is one of the most extensive ever shown here. Space has been allotted to nearly a hundred exhibitors, the leading one being the Ontario Government, with its highways exhibit. Methods of road improvement, the implements necessary to carry these out, and pamphlets illustrating progress achieved, are shown.

Mayor Bowlby, of Brantford, who is attending the Congress, is urging a resolution favoring putting Brantford on the route of the proposed new Provincial highway from Windsor to Montreal. He declares that the route chosen should be the south one, via Hamilton, Brantford and London, rather than the northern one, via Brampton, Guelph, Kitchener and St. Mary's. He bases his plea on the score of shorter distance, better topographical conditions, and a more convenient linking up with American motor tourist traffic.

CAVALRY'S WORK.

Squadron Took Heavy Howitzers, Just as of Old.

London Cable.—Describing the extraordinary volume of activity developed in the Arras battle, Reuter's correspondent at army headquarters in France says:

"The constant stream of troops advancing throughout the day all along the front betokens the weight the British are throwing into the offensive. In one village this afternoon I counted within half an hour seven battalions, each headed by a band, marching as though to review instead of to battle. The tanks have been in action in various points.

"An interesting incident was the capture of a pair of heavy howitzers mounted on the bank of the River Scarpe by a cavalry squadron. They charged the gunners in fine old style, cutting down those who resisted, and they put the guns effectively out of action until they could be brought in.

"On the whole, to-day has been devoted to consolidating the important gains of Monday, and clearing up the spots which were still resisting. Our casualties thus far have been extremely light. Our airmen are still baffled by the wintry weather."

SUBMARINE TOLL SHRINKS

British Record for Last Week Shows Decrease.

17 of 1,600 Tons Each, Two of Less.

London Cable.—During the week ending April 8, seventeen British merchant vessels of more than 1,600 tons, and two of less, were sunk.

The statement follows:

"Merchant vessels over 100 tons of all nationalities arriving and sailing from United Kingdom ports: Arrivals, 2,406; sailings, 2,367; British merchant ships sunk by mines or submarines over 1,600 tons, 17, including two sunk during the previous fortnight. British merchant vessels under 1,600 tons, 2, including one sunk last week. British merchant vessels unsuccessfully attacked numbered 14, including four during the previous fortnight. British fishing vessels sunk, six, including one sunk during the previous week."

The current report shows a slight decrease from that of last week in losses of large vessels, and a marked falling off in the number of smaller merchant craft destroyed. There were 15 of the former class sunk during the week ended April 1, and 13 of the latter. The highest figure in ships of more than 1,600 tons sunk was 19, during the fourth week covered by the reports in their present form, and the smallest 13, during the second week.

The reports show a total of 97 vessels of more than 1,600 tons sunk during the past six weeks, and 42 vessels of less than that tonnage.

FIVE ITALIAN SHIPS SUNK.

Rome, Cable.—For the week ending April 8, merchant vessels entering Italian ports numbered 194, of a gross tonnage of 470,560; sailing from Italian ports, 447 merchantmen, of a tonnage of 496,692, according to an official statement issued to-day.

Italian steamers under 3,000 tons sunk numbered five; sailing vessels under 700 tons sunk, ten. One steamer escaped from a submarine.

STOPPED SLAVERY.

Socialists Claim Credit for Ending Deportations.

Copenhagen Cable, via London—Herr Enedekum, a Socialist member of the Reichstag, claims that the Socialists brought about a cessation of Belgian deportations, in an open letter in the Vorwaerts, addressed to the Swedish Socialist, M. Branting. The letter is in answer to a series of attacks on German Socialists, including a charge that they condoned the Belgian deportations.

Herr Enedekum asserts that his colleagues protested so strongly against the treatment of the Belgians that they caused the Emperor to issue his recent order, directing that the deportations should cease, and that workmen already deported should be returned to Belgium. The Socialist Deputy writes:

"After our protest no more Belgians were brought to Germany, and most of those already there were sent back. Only those remained who desired themselves to do so."

CANADIANS TORTURED BY THE GERMANS

Former U. S. Envoy Tells of Brutal Work in the Fatherland.

WORK OF BARBARISM

Compassionate People Who Aided Them Were Punished.

New York Report—James W. Gerard, former American Ambassador to Germany, told 1,400 members and guests of the Canadian Club of New York at a dinner in the grand ballroom of the Biltmore of inhuman treatment of prisoners of war by the Kaiser's military authorities. The 1,400 diners received with groans and jeers and curses the former Ambassador's recitation of how the German authorities imprisoned townsfolk for giving food and drink to starving Canadian prisoners of war; how German sheep hounds were trained to bite British and then sent through prison camps; how small German boys were allowed to shoot arrows tipped with nails into the bodies of prisoners, and how when typhus fever broke out in a camp of Russian prisoners, they sent Frenchmen and Englishmen to live with them.

He began by referring to Germany as "that country where they were so fond of me that they kept me a week after I said I wanted to go home."

"I want to tell you Canadians tonight," he said, "some of the things I saw your fellow-countrymen endure in the prisoner of war camps in Germany. You sitting here in the Biltmore cannot imagine the horror of living two and a half years in a German prison camp. I know because I saw.

"One day I read in the North German Gazette a paragraph telling that a number of inhabitants of a northern German town had been guilty of improper and unpatriotic conduct towards prisoners of war and that they had been jailed for varying terms.

PUNISHED FOR OTHERS' CRIMES.

"I said to myself, 'Good. At last some of these Germans are to be punished for maltreating prisoners of war.' I directed the American Consul there to report on the matter. He sent back word that a train load of Canadian prisoners of war was being taken through the town when it was necessary to put the train on a siding. Some of the prisoners communicated to curious townsfolk gathered about the train that they were starving and had nothing to drink. The townspeople had given them food and drink, and that was the crime for which they were imprisoned and held up for shame.

"I had seen small boys, with German simplicity and kindness, march about the prison camps armed with bows and arrows, and shoot arrows tipped with nails at prisoners, but I had not before heard of such a thing as this."

Mr. Gerard said that in visiting some of the prison camps he found that many of the "Canadians" talked with an accent that sounded like New York. He said one day a Highlander approached him and said:

"Hello, Judge."

"What sort of a Highlander are you?" he said he asked.

"From the Orange Highlands of New Jersey," was the reply.

Major-General Leonard Wood was enthusiastically received. "We of the United States and Canada," he said, "are now together for great effort. It is an effort which we are going to carry through successfully. (Cheers.) It's going to mean sacrifice—sacrifice other than money. It's going to mean the sacrifice of life—in large numbers. It is a sacrifice we shall make cheerfully, because it is a sacrifice for a principle."

PREMIER HEARST CHIEF GUEST.

Sir William Hearst, Premier of Ontario, and the guest of honor, expressed his joy that the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes were to wave together in the fight for liberty.

"It is our life or the life of the enemy," he said, in telling of the task before the allies.

He said that the events of the past few weeks had done more to unite the Canadians and Americans than anything that could have happened.

"I have often prophesied," he said, "of the day when, if need be for the preservation of democracy, these two great nations would unite. Now this is an accomplished fact, and no more significant event has ever occurred than the union of these two nations in the cause of freedom. Now that you, too, have put your hand to the plow, there is no turning back. There can be no compromise or truce."

He told of what Canada had done in the war, and said that if the United States had done a like work it would have raised 5,000,000 soldiers, of which more than 1,000,000 would be overseas and 1,000,000 on the firing line. In proportion to the losses of Canada he said, the United States would have lost 900,000 men.

The Premier of Ontario declared that President Wilson's message to Congress had "thrilled the hearts of the free peoples of the earth, and will be remembered for all time among the great deliverances of the rulers of the world."

In paying tribute to the American and British flags, which were entwined in the banquet hall decorations Sir William asserted that it "were better that we should perish than that the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes should lose their meaning and significance."

This is an age of invention, but no one has ever perfected a tool that would successfully repair a broken promise.

DEATH LIST IS GROWING AT CHESTER

Many Fatally Injured and Thirty-Three Are Missing.

TWO ARRESTS

One Suspect Had Valuable Information in Papers He Held.

Chester, Pa., Report.—Revised lists of the fatalities resulting from the explosion yesterday at the shrapnel loading plant of the Eddystone Ammunition Corporation at North Eddystone, near here, place the number of dead at 122, the majority girls and young women. Between 125 and 150 more, women and girls were injured, at least ten being so burned and torn by shrapnel fragments that death was momentarily expected. Twenty-three others employed in the structure, which was blown to splinters, are missing.

Although police and company officials worked through the night attempting to establish identities of the dead, they were hampered by the condition of the bodies and the fact that the time book, recording all employed in the structure, was destroyed by the first blast of the explosion. Some of the victims, company officials believe, were blown into the Delaware River, so that an exact calculation of the death list may never be possible.

Official opinion of the cause, whether accidental or malicious, is divided. Alba B. Johnson, President of the Baldwin Locomotive works, which owns the Eddystone Works, asserted the disaster probably was due to an accident or carelessness on the part of the persons within the building. He held that the strong armed guard about the plant would effectively shut out persons intent on destroying the buildings, in which millions of dollars worth of munitions are being manufactured for the Entente Allies. Opposed to this belief of an accidental cause, was a signed statement of Samuel M. Vauclain, head of the munition company, in which he said:

"We are unable to account for the explosion in any other way than the act of some maliciously inclined person or persons."

Mr. Johnson's view was taken by United States Attorney Kane, of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, after preliminary investigation by Government agents. Mr. Kane asserted last night that nothing in the official reports definitely connected the explosion with a German plot or plotters.

The energies of investigators to-day concentrated on sifting the narratives of survivors. Four separate investigations were begun, federal, state and municipal, and an inquiry by company officials. The entire force of special agents of the Department of Justice's bureau of investigation in Philadelphia was assigned to running out a maze of leads, many of which were admitted to be based mostly on rumor, but from which information of importance might be developed.

While the police refused to discuss the case of two suspects arrested here late last night after an investigation, it was intimated that valuable information was secured from papers found on one of the prisoners. The men under arrest, father and son, the latter giving a Philadelphia address, are said to be aliens.

NEW ARREST IN ST. PIERRE CASE

Wife of Murdered Man Charged as Accessory.

Trial is Now Under Way at Cornwall.

Cornwall, Ont., Report.—A fresh arrest in the St. Pierre murder case was announced when the trial of Emerson St. Pierre, on a charge of shooting his father, Osnabruck township well-digger, on Feb. 8, opened before Mr. Justice Latchford this morning. Mrs. William St. Pierre, widow of the murdered man, will be charged with being an accessory after the fact, it was stated.

R. A. Pringle, K.C., Ottawa, who announced that the arrest would be made in the course of his address to the jury, outlining the case, said Mrs. St. Pierre was present when the body of her husband, who had been shot and killed the day before, was buried in the cellar.

Mr. Pringle hinted that the charge against Nettie Richmire, charged now with being an accessory after the fact, might be changed so as to include her as a principal. The Crown would produce a witness who would swear Nettie Richmire had said that [illegible] would plead guilty to the murder, as she would stand a better chance of getting off than her lover.

Emerson St. Pierre pleaded not guilty.

The two St. Pierre children, Flossie and Leila, told again how on Feb. 8 Nettie, Emerson and William St. Pierre were alone in the house; how they were told their father had gone to the village; how they joined their mother at Chesterville that night, and all returned the next day.

Flossie described a scene between Nettie and her father on Feb. 7, and told Mr. Pringle there was no row about it.

To Mr. Stiles the little girl said Miss Richmire protested, but was alone in the house.

The jury having been excluded, Mr. Stiles was permitted to explain that he wanted to show the old man's character, so as to lead up to the story of Nettie Richmire, who would swear, he was advised, that as a result of St. Pierre's assault on her and a threat to murder her, she shot him. The judge held to his ruling that counsel could not ask questions about the father's relations with his children.

Nettie Richmire was the next witness called.

Mr. Pringle dealt with the actual murder, and the witness grew hesitant in her replies.

"You were seated at the table after dinner with William St. Pierre and he fell dead across the table?" asked Mr. Pringle.

The girl dropped her head and began to cry.

"Look at me," said Judge Latchford, kindly to the girl. "Tell the truth now, my girl. It is the truth we want, not any story."

There was a long pause, and then the girl said "Yes."

"Who did it?" asked Mr. Pringle.

"Emerson," muttered the girl.

The reply caused a murmur in the court, because it destroyed the theory of Emerson's friends that the girl committed the murder.

The witness said she heard Emerson go upstairs. The shot came through the ceiling. She went upstairs and Emerson asked if his father was dead. They came down and found that he was. She tipped the body off the chair and they took his wallet out of his pocket. It contained $65. She knew, because Mrs. St. Pierre, Emerson and she counted it. Emerson told his mother he had shot his father.

The witness then related how they agreed to say that the old man had gone away. She swore the two little girls were in the cellar during the burial. Mrs. St. Pierre was in the kitchen, but knew what was going on.

To Mr. Stiles the witness said she and Emerson had tried to get married, but could not get a license owing to her mother's opposition. She bore a grudge against the old man for assaulting her, but she did not decide to kill him. She told Emerson about the trouble. The old man, when he learned this, said he would assault her before Emerson, and would kill her. She changed her confession to Detective Miller, who found the body, when she learned she was liable to be hanged. Yesterday she swore under oath before the grand jury that she had shot the old man. This was to shield her lover. Emerson killed his father because of his conduct, and threats to her and his two little daughters.

Detective Miller closed the case for the Crown by relating how Emerson had told him before he found the body that his father had gone on a trip. The court was adjourned at this point for lunch.

GERMAN RULERS FEAR OUTBREAK

Military Preparing to Control City Streets.

Great Fires at Aix—200 Killed or Wounded.

Amsterdam Cable.—Statements from various sources continue to come to hand reporting more or less serious troubles in Germany. I learn the authorities fear that what so far have been isolated disorders may take on a much more general nature.

A most reliable person, who arrived here from Hamburg, informs me that especially there popular outbreaks are regarded as possible. The authorities in that city have taken extraordinary measures to cope with disorders. One of these is to clear the inhabitants out of the corner houses commanding all the most important streets. These houses have been occupied by the police and soldiers, and machine guns have been mounted at the windows. Great want and discontent, says this informant, exist among the people of that city.

A railway official who joined the train from Germany at Maastricht stated on his arrival here that great fires had broken out in Aix-la-Chapelle in four different parts of the city. He could not ascertain the cause, but it is believed serious troubles have broken out there.

Two hundred persons have been killed and wounded in the rioting at Aix-la-Chapelle, according to advices received by The Nieuwe Amsterdamsche Courant to-day. The Town Hall in the city was said to have been set afire.

BORDEN'S DELIGHT.

Canadian Premier Recently Saw Vimy Ridge.

London Cable.—Premier Borden favored the Canadian Press to-night with the following message: "The great victory just won is a glorious beginning of the renewed offensive undertaken by the British forces. It is of special interest to me, as four weeks ago I looked out on Vimy Ridge and realized from what I saw, and more especially from what I was told, the strength of the position and the tremendous task which lay before the [illegible]. All Canada will be thrilled with pride by this glorious achievement of our expeditionary force. With equal pride we have heard the tidings of the splendid success which has attended the efforts of all the British forces. When I was in France Sir Douglas Haig asked me to visit the battlefields of the Somme in order that I might realize what had been accomplished. After my visit I came back convinced that the men who had captured the positions which I then saw in our occupancy could not be stayed in their next great advance."

LIFE TERM FOR MAN WHO SLEW BRUTAL FATHER

Emerson St. Pierre Sentenced—Richmire Girl Gets Five Years.

THE CHILDREN

Judge Would Have Them Taken From Home Surroundings.

Cornwall, Ont., Report.—Sentence was handed down this morning in the case of Emerson St. Pierre, yesterday found guilty of manslaughter in connection with the death of his father, William St. Pierre, the Osnabruck Township well-digger, shot on February 8, and buried in the cellar of his home, and Nettie Richmire, paramour of the male prisoner, who this morning pleaded guilty to being an accessory after the fact.

Emerson was given life imprisonment and the woman five years.

When the court had been opened the grand jury presented a true bill in the case of Nettie Richmire, who, upon being arraigned, pleaded guilty.

R. A. Pringle, K.C., Ottawa, Crown counsel, addressing the judge, said that he had intended indicting Mrs. St. Pierre, widow of William St. Pierre, but the grand jury felt that her three little children should have her protection. His Lordship would see that protection was afforded as far as possible. He would not press the indictment at the present time. The evidence against Mrs. St. Pierre as an accessory was not so strong as that against Nettie Richmire, but there was some evidence that she had knowledge of the burial of the body and concealment of her husband's clothes. He felt that the ends of justice had been secured by the conviction of Emerson and Nettie Richmire.

Mr. Pringle then warmly praised Detective Miller, the officer of the Ontario Attorney-General's department who had unravelled the case, who, he said, had taken every step that could be taken.

Mr. Justice Latchford, in passing sentence on the girl, who showed no evidences of emotion, said he was strongly of the opinion that to allow the girl to go back to the home she had left would be mistaken kindness. He only hoped that she might yet become a useful member of society, if removed as far as possible and for as long a time as possible from the condition she has occupied. She had no apprehension of what was right and what was wrong. Her conduct in the witness box showed that she was totally lacking in a proper regard for the truth. To save her lover, she was not justified in perjuring her soul. The home she had left was a festering spot in Ontario, and she was a part and parcel of it. If a travelling missionary had said such a spot existed in Mexico, Bolivia, Patagonia, Western Australia or Spain, people would have raised money to abolish it. That home would have discredited a community of savages.

His Lordship then announced that sentence on the girl would be five years in the penitentiary.

Emerson St. Pierre was brought in after the girl had been removed. To him the Judge remarked that he or somebody acting for him had induced Nettie Richmire to commit perjury yesterday. After her truthful evidence in the morning, she had announced that she was glad she had told the truth, even though it meant the end of Emerson's chances. In the afternoon she had changed her story. It would have been a great farce if, after Emerson had been acquitted when the girl accepted responsibility for the murder, Emerson had gone into the box and swore he killed his father, thus securing the acquittal of both.

The prisoner was unmoved when the Judge told him he must go to penitentiary for the term of his natural life.

Judge Latchford then called Mrs. St. Pierre and an officer of the Society for the Protection of Children before him. He said that Flossie and Leila St. Pierre, the nine and ten-year-old children of the dead man, should be removed from the custody of a mother so unnatural and immoral as to allow them to live in the home that has been described at the trial, if it was as [illegible] [illegible] might be that it was [illegible]. That would be for the Judge, before whom the society made application for the care of the children, to decide.

In the struggle of the crowd to gain entrance into the court room yesterday afternoon a woman was so badly crushed that she fainted, one man had his arm broken and another several fingers smashed in a door.

SWEDEN HIT

Her Cotton Mills May Be Forced to Close.

Stockholm Cable.—As the result of American [illegible] mills, who already had been considering such a step, have decided to restrict production enough in order to afford employment as long as possible to the operatives.

Even with the new restrictions it will probably be impossible to keep the mills going for more than four months without importation of raw material from America, of which it is feared there is the smallest probability. Ten thousand workers are affected.

Are we sincere in all our anxiety and much talk about our brave soldier boys? A good way to show that sincerity exists is to have every preparation made to render assistance to the boys when they come back. Remember this, many will come back maimed. Organization now to provide for them will make them feel that their sacrifice was not in vain.

A common sight these days is to see gatherings of people where the women knit and the men simply have nothing to do but sit and twirl their thumbs. It would be ever so much nicer if the men would learn to knit and carry with them a ball of yarn and a couple of knitting needles in the vest pocket.

Statistics from Ottawa show that the Canadian people have put into the savings banks and war loans $500,000 000 since the war began. The past February showed an increase of over $200,000 000 as compared with that month in the previous year. If Dominion wide prohibition is put into force that amount will be increased by next February.

The Provincial Government has announced its intention to build a permanent highway from Ottawa through Toronto to Windsor. Of course Bruce County is not on the route of this proposed highway, but as it is to be built by public funds Bruce County will help pay for it. Every day this county stays out of the good roads scheme, it not only loses money but also must use bad roads.

Citizens of Saugeen and Port Elgin at the call of Reeve Christie of Saugeen, held a union prayer meeting to pray for the success of the allied cause and secure a permanent peace. Active steps are being taken to prepare for next fall and winter transportation problems in order to prevent a repetition of the car congestion of last winter, at least so far as the public owned roads are concerned. An order for 50 new locomotives has been placed for completion this summer. This will help the situation some, no doubt, but if only the government railroad prepares and the other roads go on in the same old way, there will be a greater congestion than ever.

The Ontario government is adding some further restrictions to the Liquor traffic. There are some people getting too much booze in their own homes. The The new feature is the power to place any person on the Indian list. Any justice of the peace or the license inspector has this power, and the liquor sent to listed persons may be confiscated. By looking closely to enforcement the government officials can soon make it so difficult for violations that few persons will be found willing to take the risk of heavy fines.

How long will it be before the Germanic peoples will be trusted as they were previous to the war? This is a question often asked, but who can tell. When the kaiser's spying brother visited England four years ago he toured in a motor and when calling at a country mansion of an English duke he inscribed his autograph. In that same book to-day there appears written across the German's autograph by the Englishman the following: "I am ashamed before God that this man ever disgraced my house with his presence."

The editor of The Port Elgin Times said at the Bruce Preparedness meeting the other day that he marvelled at the forbearance of farmers who have to read the twaddle in the city papers about intellectual uplift for the farmers and linking up the rural sections with outside thought. Right you are, Brother Sayles. It would be a liberal education for some of those city penny-a-liners to come up here and learn something from farmers in this "Neck of the woods". It is our opinion that a great deal of the best thinking of the present day is being done on the back concessions.—Walkerton Telescope.

The "Twenty-five Years Ago" columns which furnish easy copy for a great many of the scissors editors, has created considerable difficulty for one weekly paste pot man. It seems he wasn't looking very closely what he got from an exchange, and sprinkled the twenty five years ago news liberally throughout his columns as happenings of the week. Mr. Dafoe, the noted editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, in an address before the publishers of Canada remarked that a great many of the small town papers were merely glorified barber shops, and that if these local editors would fill a useful place and render real service, they would spend a little more of their time in an endeavor to create a healthy public opinion in their own particular community, adding to this an intelligent study of national affairs. Then and only then would the strictly local paper be rendering real service.

The Citizens Committee of One Hundred which did such great work in convincing the government of the need of Prohibition, is turning to another very practical and helpful scheme. While pushing home to the Dominion Government the necessity for Dominion wide prohibition it proposes to assist the Ontario government in enforcing its Temperance law. This is well taken. The temperance people should put forth every effort to assist the government in making its laws effective. The committee asks all its local committees to see that municipalities appoint constables who will look right after the enforcement of the temperance act. The thing to do is to prevent rather than to punish offenders. If municipalities fail to appoint a proper official the Citizens Committee asks that local temperance workers communicate at once with the head office. Port Elgin and the surrounding townships should co-operate in this matter and the councils should seek to appoint a man who will give the enforcement of the Temperance Act proper attention.

A Good Suggestion

A Bruce township farmer, in a short note, says:

"I notice you ask, at the top of your paper, that farmers discuss their problems in The Times. I would like to say that my problem is not so much lack of help, but rather that I have too much land for one man to work. How would it be if some of that noise which is going in the cities about helping farmers, were to be taken seriously by us, and we ask that these city chaps make good by offering to take up some of our land, and work it. If the government can afford to advance money to take up land in newer sections, why not advance money to some of the men in our cities and ask them to make good in their demand for greater production, by working some of the land which is already in good shape, and right next to men who can give them advice and assistance."

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati authority tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone cost very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house. It is fine stuff and acts like a charm every time.

Comrades!
If you cannot carry a rifle, you can serve your country on the farm.

"The plow is our hope," declared Right Hon. David Lloyd George, the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The tremendous significance of these words in the face of a world shortage of food must be a matter of concern to all. It points out the path of duty to men and boys unable to enlist in the army but capable of helping to increase production.

Help the farmer increase production

At this supreme hour when ample food production is one of the indispensable means of victory, the country faces a serious shortage of men and boys on the farms. The Department of Agriculture emphasizes the urgency of every man and boy taking to heart this splendid opportunity for patriotic service.

Boys Decide now to help in the war. If you are between the ages of 14 and 18, and have good term record, you can secure promotion at school by enlisting for farm service any time between April 20th and May 20th.

Parents are urged to encourage their boys to enlist for farm service. The physical and moral welfare of your boy will be advanced by a summer spent close to Nature; an interest will be awakened in an important industry of the country that will be a help to him in his whole future.

Men The Department appeals to retired farmers, to men following no occupation (retired), to business men who can spare at least a portion of their time, to all men who can arrange their affairs so as to help some farmer. Every man is invited to enlist for farm service.

Confer with your District Representative of the Department of Agriculture, or write or visit Ontario Government Employment Bureau, 15 Queen's Park, Toronto.

Library Board Gets $100 Gift

After passing a resolution that all the surplus of 1917 celebration be given to Red Cross, a discussion was brought up that the Dominion Day committee, like a lot of other committees of various kinds, had used the library building, and had never thought of contributing to its upkeep. It was pointed out that the committee meetings, probably a dozen or more in a year, had used the library, for nine years, and that while donations had been made for various things, no cash had gone to the library.

It was also pointed out that since the war began the library board could hold no concerts or raise any money by other schemes, because the patriotic funds were first, the board had found it difficult to make things go. The town contributed $300 in the year, and this was more than used in supplying a librarian and getting coal for heat.

It was generally agreed that the library was the very best asset the town had, and that the committee should make a grant, and a motion was unanimously carried, giving $100 to the Library.

Mr. Stevens, as a member of the Library board, returned his thanks for the thoughtfulness of the Dominion Day committee. He pointed out that if the older citizens would use the library more they would see the value it was to the younger generation. Every night many young boys and girls had the privilege of good books, lots of magazines and periodicals. Besides that, it was the town's best building, and should be the pride of every one. The town's grant of $300 cost the average ratepayer but a few cents a year. He said the library board would appreciate any help from anyone, no matter how small the amount, and above all, they appreciate any good thing said of Port Elgin's splendid library.

Town Council

At the council meeting last week Councillors Eidt and Pattison were absent through illness. The new councillor Mr. McCallum took his seat at the board and was welcomed by Reeve Izzard and Councillor Cottrill.

There was little business. The reeve brought up the matter of enlarging the cemetery. He pointed out that a few acres would soon have to be added to the plot. In discussion Councillors McCallum and Cottrill inquired as the property across the road west, rather than going farther north. The matter was placed in the hands of the cemetery committee, who will make inquiries.

Last year some dyking was built on Mr. Mitchell's farm to hold the water from the reservoir. The work had proven satisfactory in this part. It was noted that the spring freshet had broken through at the south end but it was only trivial and a few loads of gravel would fix the matter. The water committee were asked to inspect the reservoir and pumping plant, and to keep things in good repair.

Gunner Angus McIntosh Writes from France

In a letter to Mrs. Wm. Nelson, at Elsinore, under date of February 26th., Gunner Angus McIntosh says:

I was very glad indeed to receive the splendid box a short time ago from the Red Cross Society of which you are Vice President. As I cannot write to the different parties who helped to prepare the box, I shall call upon you to extend my hearty thanks to them. I assure you that I appreciated very much indeed the maple sugar cake and candy. I am also making good use of articles of apparel. It is a real pleasure and comfort to be remembered by ones own people. I have had letters from many of my Elsinore friends, and so I am pretty well informed as to what is taking place in the vicinity.

At present a number of us from our battery 46th, and from other batteries, of the 11th Brigade are doing some extra work which has been assigned to us. We have our sleeping quarters in a little wine cellar built arch shaped out of stone, of course at present the wine is a minus quantity. For a week we were doing our work at night and sleeping in the daytime, but now we are on day-work. The trenches have been quite wet but in the last few days they have improved wonderfully.

We have a Y. M. C. A. canteen about a hundred yards from our sleeping quarters so we can buy any necessaries. Gr. Angus McIntosh, No. 301544, 46th Battery, C. F. A., C. E. F., Army P. O. France.

"Dear Editor—I am always interested in the obituaries published by you in The Times of many older people of Bruce and Saugeen townships, as they leave us one by one to pass over the Great Divide. Their untiring zeal and noble example in hewing out homes in that forest country in the early days, and the influence it had in the lives of their sons and daughters, helped in many ways to pioneer the last Great West, and many of the Western States."

The young people of Biley's school are to play the "Village Doctor" at Kincardine for Red Cross ladies there.

To give sweater coats a new lease of life

Now that sweater coats are getting more expensive, it is more than ever desirable that you wash yours with LUX. Of all things a sweater coat, which is seen so much, must be kept soft, fluffy, fleecy and "new" in appearance. You can keep yours that way and wash it again and again if you do this:

Pour boiling water over LUX flakes—pure essence of soap—allowing 3 or 4 tablespoonfuls for every gallon of water you use. Whip into a creamy lather—a few seconds is needed. Then put in the garment and stir it about. Let it soak until cool enough for your hands to squeeze the water out of the coat—the dirt just runs away. Rinse in two or three relays of tepid water, and hang to dry.

Very simple. Anyone can do it—just a few minutes' work and you get a result that the most expert French cleaner might well envy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson IV. April 22, 1917.

Jesus Anointed at Bethany.—John 12: 1-11.

Commentary.—I. Mary's expression of devotion (vs. 1-3). 1. Six days before the passover—It is probable that Jesus and his disciples reached Bethany on Friday evening. The Passover commemorated the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, the place of their enslavement, and the nation was commanded to observe the feast of the Passover year by year. All the males of Israel were expected to be present at Jerusalem on this occasion, any many women came of choice to the feast, hence great crowds of visitors were present in the city at the time of the feast. Bethany—This village was situated on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, about two miles east of Jerusalem. Where Lazarus was—The account of the raising of Lazarus from the dead is given in John 11: 1-46. It had been one or two months since Jesus performed this miracle when he came to the place again. 2. There they made him a supper—From Matt. 26: 6 and Mark 14: 3 we learn that the feast was given in the home of "Simon the leper." It is reasonable to suppose that Jesus had healed him of his leprosy; however, the name still clung to him. Attempts have been made to trace some sort of kinship between Lazarus and his sisters and Simon, but there is no definite basis for the opinions that have been expressed. The fact that "Martha served" shows a friendly relation between the two families. Jesus had often been in the home of Martha, Mary and Lazarus. Lazarus is mentioned because of the great interest centering in him on account of his having been raised from the dead. Sat at the table—The manner of sitting at the table at meals there was very different from our customs. There were low couches upon which persons reclined with their heads toward the table. 3. Mary—The sister of Lazarus. Her devotion to Jesus was great (Luke 10: 39, 42. A pound—An amount equal to about twelve ounces. Ointment of spikenard—This was a fragrant and costly perfume procured from the spikenard plant that grows in India. Very costly—In Mark 14: 5 and in v. 5 its value is given. It is about one-third as costly as the attar of roses. Anointed the feet of Jesus—Matthew and Mark speak of Mary's anointing of Jesus's head, but do not mention the anointing of his feet. She anointed both his head and his feet, thus showing the highest devotion to him. This rare devotion was emphasized by her wiping his feet with her hair. The Oriental custom of reclining at meals with the head toward the table gave free access to the feet, which were bare, as the sandals were left outside the house. House was filled with the odor—The ointment was contained in a vessel made of alabaster, a semi-transparent stone, found in abundance in parts of Egypt. She broke the box, and as the ointment was poured forth its fragrance filled the place where the feast was held. The fragrance of that act of devotion was not confined to that house in Bethany. It has gone far beyond those walls and it still being wafted through the preaching of the gospel, to all the world.

II. Her act criticised (vs. 4-6.) 4. One of his disciples—Judas Iscariot was the spokesman, and was, in reality, the one most responsible for the criticism, yet some of the disciples (Mark 14: 4) "had indignation" (Matt. 26: 8.) Which should betray him—Directly after this feast Judas began to bargain with the chief priests with regard to betraying Jesus. 5. Why—Judas could see no virtue or merit in Mary's act of devotion. His spiritual vision was clouded with avarice. He represents a great multitude to-day who can see only loss and folly in making sacrifice of time and money to carry the gospel to the degraded in every land. They examine every act from the spiritual values. In Judas' estimation Mary's use of the costly ointment was merely wasteful. Three hundred pence—Three hundred denarii would constitute the ordinary wages for three hundred days' work, or almost a year. The denarius was a Roman silver coin equivalent to about fifteen cents. In purchasing power the three hundred pence would be equal to that of three hundred dollars at the present time. Given to the poor—To give to the poor is a worthy act, but Judas was trying to mask his greed with a suggestion of benevolence. He would have been glad of the privilege of handling the value of the ointment. 6. Not that he cared for the poor—Judas knew how Jesus regarded the poor and would relieve them, and hypocritically expressed his interest in them, but this verse tears off the mask and shows him in his selfishness. He was a thief—We may suppose that it was because of his business turn of mind that Judas was appointed to have charge of the money of this devoted company. His greed got the better of him, and John does not hesitate to brand him as a thief. Had the bag—He was the treasurer. The margin of the Revised Version has "box" instead of "bag." Bare what was put therein—"Took away what was put therein." R. V. It is remarkable that two such characters as Mary and Judas should be connected with the anointing of Jesus for his burial. Mary's devotion to the Master led her to believe that no sacrifice was too great for her to make for him. The avarice of Judas led him to think that nothing was too sacred for him to violate, if only he could get personal gain. His contest was a prophecy of his act of betraying Christ for money. Only a basely selfish and wicked person could look upon Mary's sacrifice with disfavor. Judas may have fancied that it was his superior financial insight that called her sacrifice a mere waste, but it was his greed that prompted his criticism.

III. Jesus' approval of her act (vs. 7, 8). 7. Let her alone—Jesus would not have her deed criticised. He came to her defence against those who were disposed to find fault with her, and he gave his approval to her act for all time. Against the day of my burying—Jesus knew what Mary did not, that his death was close at hand. He regarded her act as an anointing for burial. Some think she had an impression that this was her last opportunity to show her devotion for him. 8. For the poor always ye have with you—"Here was no waste at all; no waste as regards the poor, for there were abundant opportunities to help them; no waste as regards the disciples, for they could help the poor at any time; no waste as regards the woman, for this deed would be told as a memorial of her; no waste as regards the Lord, for he was pleased to regard it as a burial gift." The poor will form a greater or less part of the world until the end of time. Jesus did not in this remark discourage in any sense charity toward the needy. The Lord has special regard for the poor and places the duty of helping them upon those who are able. Me ye have not always—His death was but a few days off, and within forty-eight days he was to ascend to his Father. Mary had improved her opportunity, and there was no ground for Judas' complaint. Matthew's words are expressive, "She has wrought a good work upon me" (26: 10), and Mark's are wonderful, "She hath done what she could" (14: 8). This is a remarkable tribute to be paid by any one. There are too many who content themselves with doing practically nothing for the Lord. They think they can do little, and do not put forth an effort to do their best.

IV. Interest in Lazarus (vs. 9-11). 9. Much people—"The common people."—R. V. They came—The works wrought by Jesus had made a profound impression upon the common people, and many were ready to believe in him. They came to him because of their high regard for him, and not wholly out of curiosity. But that they might see Lazarus also—An additional reason why they came was to see the man whom Jesus had raised from the dead a few months before this. 10. The chief priests—While the common people were eager to see Jesus and Lazarus, the high officials of the Jews desired to put them both to death. They would accomplish the death of Jesus to save the Jewish system from crumbling to pieces, for they reasoned that if this new leader should be slain his teachings would find no followers. They wished to put Lazarus to death to prevent the people from believing in him who had raised him from the dead. 11. By reason of him—Lazarus, alive from the dead, was a powerful testimony to the Messiahship of Jesus, and this testimony could not be ignored or refuted.

Questions.—Name some of the parables spoken by our Lord after Lazarus was raised from the dead. What did the feast of the Passover commemorate? Where is Bethany? What took place at the feast in Simon's house? On what ground was Mary's act criticised? How did Jesus regard her act? Why did many Jews come to the place where Jesus was? What did the chief priests consult to do? Why were they disposed to put Lazarus to death?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Love Vindicated.

I. By an everlasting memorial.

II. By an exposure of hypocrisy.

I. By an everlasting memorial. The miracle of Bethany has stirred Jerusalem. The restoration to life of Lazarus was Christ's immediate and undeniable work. He was a living monument of a most benevolent and divine power, the power of Jesus of Nazareth. Attention was fixed upon him because of what Jesus had done for him. In connection with Jesus, Lazarus had become intolerable. The determination to murder Jesus led to the determination to murder Lazarus. The chief priests would rather consent to murder than confess themselves in the wrong or endure the loss of position or power. The miracle which led many to believe in Jesus led the authorities to hate and oppose him. They revealed the power of the human heart to become utterly blinded to truth. While hostility and bitter opposition from the leaders of the nation increased daily, the devotion of Jesus' friends was more manifest. The feast of Bethany was their answer to the edict of the authorities at Jerusalem concerning Jesus. Mary was determined that Jesus should taste the sweets of human kindness and, as if inspired with the thought that it might be her last opportunity, with a noble impulse she poured out her choicest gift at his feet. Because her whole soul was in the deed, money value had nothing to do with it. To Jesus she was indebted for many precious lessons in spiritual knowledge and for a brother restored to life. Her act was an expression of profound gratitude and personal esteem for the life and character of Jesus. Her offering was too excellent in quality, too costly in value, too great in quantity to satisfy the loving impulse of Mary's heart. It was not in vain that she had sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his words of wisdom, comfort and guidance. She knew that he was the Christ, the Saviour of the world. Jesus rejoiced over a love which had antedated its purpose and given to the living Lord what had been intended for his burial.

II. By an exposure of hypocrisy. While the house was filled with the odor of the ointment, a murmur of dissatisfaction arose. It came from the lips of Judas, the traitor. His self-seeking heart turned a joyous feast into an hour of temptation, and the purest love-offering into an offence. He was blind to the moral loveliness of Mary's action. He had a false estimate of values. He was hypocritical in philanthropy. He ventured a heartless intrusion upon the devotions of a pious soul. His avarice, his jealousy, and, worse than all, his mask so readily assumed, of zeal for the cause of the poor, fitted him ready for Satan's last temptation to confer with the chief priests for the betrayal of his Master. Judas would have had Mary entrust the value of her offering to his keeping. Its value in the market gave to the spikenard its only worth in his eyes. His protest was dictated in no degree by a genuine regard for the poor. It was most selfish and insincere, yet he ventured to make it with a confidence of being justified in the eyes of the Master. There was in him an utter incapacity to appreciate the grandeur of true piety. A false motive prompted his remonstrance. Mary's act of love ripened and revealed his character. Instead of directly rebuking Judas, Jesus vindicated Mary. He distinguished at once between love and avarice, between worldly wisdom and genuine devotion, between generous, spontaneous, open conduct and pretended charity. Jesus not only vindicated Mary's devotion, but explained its meaning. Mary had provided for the honor of the dead. Judas made himself the instrument to bring about his death. Mary's act was acceptable to Christ as revealing a love over which death had no power. He recognized it as a noble act, a virtual consecration of himself to a divine work involving death, a befitting preparation for his burial. It was with a contrite and renewed heart that Mary poured her precious ointment on the feet of her Lord, in love's ingenious and original way, while Judas evidenced his unchanged nature, regardless of companionship with Jesus and the unsuspecting disciples. Mary was sustained by divine love. Judas became the companion of murderers. Her record inspires to worship, while the record of Judas provides warning. T.R.A.

Use Seed from High Yielding Varieties

Importance of Using Only Clean, Bright Seed from High Yielding Varieties Varieties Recommended for the Ontario Farmer.

One of the fundamental principles in profitable crop production is to grow a variety that is a heavy yielder and suited to the locality where it is to be grown. Yet far too many farmers in Canada grow varieties that are not heavy yielders or if they are they are not suited to the locality. From a survey made during the summer of 1916 in one county in Ontario it was found that practically every farmer grew oats, but only 53 per cent. knew the name of the variety used. Among those knowing the name of the variety fourteen distinct varieties were found.

There is no good reason why this should be. Although the climate of Ontario varies, of course, as we go north or south, it does not vary sufficiently to warrant the growing of as many as fourteen different varieties of oats. In almost every case the number of varieties grown could with advantage be reduced to three or four varieties for each different crop.

At the Ontario Agricultural College over a period of years the highest yielding variety of barley gave 59.1 bushels and the lowest yielding variety gave 32.8 bushels per acre; the highest yielding variety of wheat gave 93.21 bushels and the lowest yielding variety gave 48.0 bushels per acre; the highest yielding variety of fall wheat gave 51.1 bushels and the lowest yielding variety gave 41.5 bushels per acre. These results show clearly that selecting the variety of seed that is to be sown is a paying proposition.

Many men have the idea that it is necessary to change the seed every few years. From experiments carried on at the Ontario Agricultural College and elsewhere it has been proven that this is a fallacy. As a matter of fact it has been found that instead of the yield diminishing the yield has in many cases been increased by using the same seed year after year.

It is very important to use seed that has been carefully selected and properly cleaned by passing it through the fanning mill several times. Thus in experiments carried on at the Ontario Agricultural college it was found that in the case of oats large seed yielded 62 bushels per acre as compared with 46.6 bushels per acre from large plump seed 40.4 bushels from small plump seed, 39.1 bushels from shrunken seed, and 33 bushels per acre from split seed.

TREAT FOR SMUT

Every year smut takes a heavy toll from our crops, yet but a very small percentage of farmers treat their seed regularly to prevent the disease. Various methods are used for treating the seed. As a result of five years' experiments carried on at the Ontario Agricultural College it was found that treating the seed by immersing it for twenty minutes in a solution made by adding one-half pint of formalin to twenty-one gallons of water gave the best results. In the case of oats the untreated seed yielded 60.3 bushels per acre, while the seed treated by the immersion method yielded 68.3 bushels per acre. The untreated wheat yielded only 29.0 bushels, while the treated wheat yielded 42.2 bushels per acre.

The Field Husbandry Department of the Ontario Agricultural College, under the direction of Dr. Zavitz, has for a great many years been carrying on experiments to determine just what are the best varieties of seed of the different crops for the Ontario farmer to grow. After certain varieties of seed have been proved to be good yielders at the College, seed from these varieties is distributed through the province and experiments are carried on by members of the Experimental Union on their own farms.

In practically all cases it has been found that the results obtained by the experimenters throughout the province agree with those obtained at the College.

As a guide to Ontario farmers in selecting their seed for the coming season a short summary is given below of the results obtained with different varieties at the Ontario Agricultural College.

BEST VARIETIES OF GRAIN.

At the College it was found that of the various spring sown crops barley gave the greatest yield of grain in pounds per acre. The following gives the crops in order of yield: barley, emmer, oats, hulless barley, spring wheat, field peas and spring rye. In statistics gathered by the Bureau of Industries over a period of 33 years, it was found that in the province as a whole fall wheat yielded somewhat less than barley but a little more than oats. A mixture of grain will produce more feed than one kind of grain crop sown alone. One bushel per acre of O. A. C. No. 21 barley and O. A. C. No. 3 oats is recommended for this purpose.

For green fodder or hay a mixture composed of two bushels of oats, such as the Siberian or the Banner varieties, and one bushel of peas such as the Prussian Blue or the Golden Vine varieties should give best results.

The six-rowed varieties of barley have given best results at the College. They are as a rule heavier yielders and mature earlier than the two-rowed varieties, although they do not mature as early as the hulless varieties. The varieties giving the highest yields at the College during the last five years were the O. A. C. No. 21 and the Mandscheuri.

In selecting a variety of oats it is important to choose one that is not only a heavy yielder but one that contains a low percentage of hull. The O. A. C. No. 72 is the best late variety and the O. A. C. No. 3 is the best early variety.

Fall wheat at the College has given higher yields than spring wheat as would be expected, but there are some sections where fall wheat does not do very well. The highest yielding variety of fall wheat was Dawson's Gold Chaff, and Imperial Amber came next. Of the spring wheats, Saxonka and Climax give best results.

RYE FOR POOR SOILS.

Rye is a crop that does well on the poorer types of soil. During the last seven years the acreage sown to rye in Ontario has more than doubled. As with fall wheat the fall varieties of rye have been the highest yielders, the best of these varieties being the Mammoth White and Washington. Of the spring varieties the Petkus has given best results.

Buckwheat is grown chiefly as a cover or catch crop. The Rye Buckwheat has proved to be the highest yielder at the College.

There has been a great falling off in the area devoted to peas. In the year 189[illegible] 896,235 acres were used for peas, but during the last few years the acreage has dropped to less than 200,000 acres. The Early Britain has proved the biggest yielder as a result of five years experience, yielding 25.72 bushels per acre as against 25.25 given by the Multipliers variety.

With prevailing high prices many farmers are getting interested in beans. Pearce's Improved Tree is an average of fifteen years' experiments at the College has given the highest yield.

In the case of corn for silage one variety cannot be recommended for the whole province as in the northern part of the province an early maturing variety would give better results than a late maturing variety. At the College, Eureka and Salzer's North Dakota proved the heaviest yielders over a period of five years.

There are far too many varieties of potatoes grown in Ontario. Of the early varieties at the College the Extra Early Eureka has proved the best yielder, Burpee's Extra Early and the Rose of the North were the best medium ripening varieties, while of the late varieties the Davies Warrior, the Empire State, and the Rural New Yorker No. 2 head the list.

In Mangels, Sutton's Mammoth Long Red and the Ideal have been the best yielders. Fall turnips yield more than swede turnips, but they do not keep so well and are not therefore as extensively grown. Silage is largely replacing roots in the stock dietary, but for sheep and pigs a few acres of roots should always be grown. In fall turnips Red Top White Globe and Sutton's Purple Top Mammoth have yielded best, while in swede turnips Garton's Model and Garton's Keepwell have proven the heaviest yielders. Carrots have a limited space in the stock menu. Bruce's Mammoth Intermediate Smooth White heads the list of the varieties tried out at the College.

Cow cabbage and Kale is grown quite extensively in England and should be grown more extensively in Ontario than at the present. The biggest yielding varieties at the College have been Sutton's Earliest Drumhead Cabbage and the Thousand-headed Kale. Their yield per acre compares favorably with that of mangels and turnips, which have much the same feeding value.

Pasture is a very important crop in Ontario. Unfortunately many farmers do not give the thought and care to selecting the grasses that they use in their pasture mixtures they should. For seeding down for two or three years Dr. Zavitz recommends the following mixture: red clover, 6 lbs.; alsike clover, 3 lbs.; orchard grass, 4 lbs.; meadow fescue, 2 lbs.; and timothy, 3 lbs., making a total of 18 lbs. per acre.

As a permanent pasture mixture the following has given excellent results: Alfalfa, 5 lbs.; alsike clover, 2 lbs.; white or Dutch clover, 2 lbs.; orchard grass, 4 lbs.; meadow fescue, 4 lbs.; tall oat grass, 3 lbs.; meadow foxtail 2 lbs.; and timothy, 2 lbs., making a total of 24 lbs. per acre.

Alfalfa is becoming an important crop in Canada. Many farmers unfortunately have not had success with this crop, very largely because they have used varieties of seed that were too delicate to stand our rigorous winter. The Ontario Variegated, Grimm's and the Sand varieties are the only varieties that have proven at all satisfactory up to the present time.

MARK TWAIN'S HOME.

Its Charm and Hospitality and the Motto It Lived Up To.

Many frequenters have tried to express the charm of Mark Twain's household. Few have succeeded, for it lay not in the house itself nor in its furnishings, beautiful as these things were, but in the personality of its occupants, the daily round of their lives, the atmosphere which they unconsciously created. From its wide entrance hall and tiny jewel-like conservatory below to the billiard room at the top of the house it seemed perfectly appointed, serenely ordered and full of welcome.

The home of one of the most unusual and unaccountable personalities in the world was filled with gentleness and peace. It was Mrs. Clemens who was chiefly responsible. She was no longer the half timid, inexperienced girl he had married. Association, study and travel had brought her knowledge and confidence. When the great ones of the world came to visit America's most picturesque literary figure, she gave welcome to them and filled her place at his side with such sweet grace that those who came to pay their duties to him often returned to pay still greater [illegible] to his companion.

William Dean Howells, so often a visitor there, once said of the writer: "Words cannot express Mrs. Clemens—her fineness, her delicate, wonderful tact." And again, "She was not only a beautiful soul, but a woman of singular intellectual power."

There were always visitors in the Clemens home. Above the mantel in the library was written, "The ornament of a house is the friends that frequent it," and the Clemens home never lacked of these ornaments, and they were of the world's best. No distinguished person came to America that did not pay a visit to Hartford and Mark Twain. Generally it was not merely a call, but a stay of days. The welcome was always genuine, the entertainment unlimited.—Albert Bigelow Paine in St. Nicholas.

Temperament.

Technically, temperament means "the special type of mental constitution due to natural characteristics of the bodily organism." Broadly speaking, temperament is character—the mental make-up of a person, the way he is inclined to think and feel about things in general.—New York American.

It is an issue which can only be tried by war and decided by victory.—Abraham Lincoln.

STUCK IN THE MUD.

Then He Discovered the Magic Power of the Water Jet.

The water jet has been used for so many years in putting down and pulling piling that its discovery has long since been lost sight of. It was used during the civil war and for many years previous by government engineers.

Tradition has it that the discoverer of the advantages of the water jet was a government engineer and that his discovery was made in the following manner. It so happened that along in the forties this engineer was building a wharf and was having unusual difficulty in putting down his piling. One day in wading around his boots became stuck in a tenacious bed, and he found it impossible to pull them out. There happened to be a hose near by and one of the men handed it to the officer, the idea being, that he would wash the mud away from his boots. The water was turned on, and the officer applied a stream to his feet.

To his surprise he sank deeper. He tried it again and went down still farther in the mud. By this time he was in up to his waist and still going down. [illegible] turned to apply [illegible] his feet, and he might be going down yet had not his men come to the rescue and pulled him out by means of a small hand derrick.

Once on shore he began "to think the matter out." If a stream of water applied to a man's feet will cause him to sink deeper in the mud, why wouldn't it have the same effect if applied to the base of a pile? He tried it, and the pile which had obstinately refused to go down before sank easily to place, and in that way, so runs the story, was discovered the use of the water jet for putting down piling.

A PUZZLING CASE

Maxwell stood in a state of evident perplexity for a few minutes, as if he were making up his mind to take some step, then lifted his head with sudden decision.

"Come, and I will show you the Black Carnation."

I followed him with the greatest alacrity, as I was extremely anxious to see this famous plant, which seemed to be at the bottom of all the mystery surrounding the death of Mazzucata. Maxwell moved slowly along towards a greenhouse smaller than the others and talked rapidly all the time.

"I tell you it is impossible—impossible," he said, in an obstinate tone. "No one else possesses the secret of tinting flowers but myself. I made the discovery by accident some years ago, and can produce any flower I please—that is, as to color. Yes, I have produced green carnations, blue roses, lilies the color of violet, and vermilion pansies; but my greatest triumph has been this Black Carnation; and there is only a single plant in existence, which is kept closely locked up in this house. No one but myself holds the key, so no one could have obtained a flower. The blossom you speak of must have been dyed."

"My good sir," I said firmly, "I am positive it was not dyed. It was a real flower, as black as your hat."

"Can someone else have the secret?" he muttered, to himself. "Impossible."

"Have you told the secret of changing the colors of flowers to anyone?"

"No, I have not."

"Then perhaps a bud was stolen, when you were showing the plant to someone."

Maxwell paused at the door of the greenhouse, and looked at me in a troubled manner.

"Certainly, I showed the plant to Signor Ivan."

"You did."

"Yes; but I was present all the time. He was not left alone with the plant."

"Did you turn your back any time while you were in the greenhouse?"

"Oh, yes; I left him looking at the plant while I went to find him a red pansy."

"Then, depend upon it, he took a bud while your back was turned."

"I will examine the plant," said Maxwell, opening the door; "and if a bud has been taken, I can soon tell."

We entered into the green-house, which was, as I have said, of a smaller size than any of the others, and I felt as though I were transported to another world, for all the flowers contained therein were colored otherwise than by the laws of nature. There were green carnations, blue roses, red peonies, violet lilies, and one extraordinary camellia of blended red, white and blue.

"I call that the union camellia," said Maxwell, as I examined this bizarre flower, "it is the only specimen extant. Well, sir, what do you think of these flowers?"

"They are wonderful, but unnatural. I prefer nature."

"Look at this cardinal pansy, as red as fire; and this azure rose, is it not a delicate blue?"

"Hideous. This place is a museum of monstrosities. You must have a very perverted taste, Mr. Maxwell."

"No; but I am fond of trying experiments. As you see, I can change the colors of plants. Now I am trying to give perfume to those flowers which have no scent. This camellia, for instance, has no odor—well, I am going to give to it the perfume of a rose, then it will be a perfect flower."

"You can't do that."

"Why not?"

"Because it is against the laws of nature."

"So is a black carnation. Yet, you see."

I uttered a cry of amazement, for in front of me was a carnation plant, covered with sooty-looking flowers, which looked as though they had been dipped in ink. The effect was striking, but very unpleasant.

"Horrible," I said, with a shudder, "horrible. I feel as though I were of munitions, guns and armorplate for naval vessels, and was the most important commodity to the mother country. "What was there to do when war broke out?" asked Mr. Kemp. "Should we stop the export of nickel matter? If we had done that the war would have been won by Germans transported to one of those strange planets which astronomers tell us have red skies and green suns."

"I have seen a green sunset in the tropics," said Maxwell, coolly, "so why should there not be a green sun? As to my black carnation, it is worth its weight in gold."

"There is something unlucky about the sight of such a monstrosity of nature."

"It is not a monstrosity of nature, it is a monstrosity of man. Nature could not produce a black carnation, but I can, as you see."

"Well, Mr. Maxwell, if you are the only person who possesses this curious plant, I can tell you, that one of the flowers was used in a bouquet which murdered a woman."

"We will see," replied Maxwell, going over to the plant. "I have not counted the buds for a long time, nor have any new flowers bloomed lately. Last time I counted, was before I saw Signor Ivan, who called on me. Then there were twelve blossoms. Now."

He counted the flowers quickly, and gave a cry of rage.

"Eleven! eleven!" he said, stamping his foot, "one of them has disappeared."

"Signor Ivan."

"Yes, it must be that man. He stole a bud—the villain. See, here is the stalk nipped off close to the mould in the pot. Thief, that he is. I will go up to-town to see him. He stole my black carnation."

"Yes, and placed it in a bouquet which also contained a dynamite cartridge."

"What is that to me?" raged Maxwell, furiously. "I don't care what he did with it."

"But I do. For the man who placed the black carnation in the bouquet, is responsible for the death of Mazzucata."

"The singing woman," said the gardener, contemptuously, "well, let her die—or is she dead. Well, I care not, but I will see this thief, and punish him for stealing my black carnation."

"You can't punish him more than justice will. If he killed Mazzucata, he will be hanged."

"He deserves to be."

"For killing Mazzucata?"

"No for stealing my Black Carnation."

He was perfectly beside himself with fury, at the loss of his single flower, and stamped about, raging like a lion, while I was so dumfounded at the discovery I had made, that I could do nothing but stare at him in stupefied surprise. Suddeny, I heard a soft voice call out to Maxwell:

"Father."

I turned slowly and saw a woman standing in the door of the greenhouse. At the sight of her I started forward with a cry, for it was the dead returned to life.

"Mazzucata," I cried, in amazement, for at that moment I verily believed that the prima-donna stood before me.

The woman at the door made a step forward, and an expression of horror overspread her face.

"Mazzucata," she repeated, in a dismayed whisper, "who said that name?"

CHAPTER IX.

To say I was astonished would be but a weak way of expressing the state of bewilderment into which I was thrown by the unexpected appearance of this woman. All kinds of grim stories concerning doubles, apparitions, astral bodies, Doppelganger, rushed on my mind, for though I had seen Madame Mazzucata killed on Covent Garden stage, yet, to all appearances, here she was in the flesh. It was horrible, incredible, impossible, and yet for a moment, I could have sworn it was the dead woman, and none other, who had [illegible] her own house. When I recovered my senses, which had been rather upset by the occurrence, I saw that it was not as, for a moment I had thought, Mazzucata, but a woman who resembled her in every respect.

Face, hair, height, the woman was the exact image of Mazzucata, and the startling likeness was rendered still more impressive by the strange fact that the double was dressed in a loose robe of white similar to that which the singer had worn in the third act of La Reine d'Ecosse when she met her tragic death.

For a moment that seemed an eternity she paused on the threshold and then came toward me with outstretched hands, not in greeting, but as though to feel her way. I looked at her feet, they moved cautiously forward as those of one not quite certain of the ground. I looked at her eyes, they were devoid of any expression. Outstretched hands, stumbling feet, expressionless eyes, I fathomed the mystery at a glance—she was blind.

"Mazzucata," she murmured, in a low voice. "Oh, who are you that talks of Mazzucata?"

"Edith," said Maxwell, sharply, "What are you saying? Why are you here? This gentleman is here on business. You are disturbing us."

"Not at all, not at all," I interrupted, hastily, for I felt indignant at the tone adopted toward this poor blind woman. "Pray, Mr. Maxwell introduce me to this lady."

"My daughter, Major Granby," replied the gardener in a grudging tone, and then walked quickly to the other side of the greenhouse in order to conceal his temper.

"I beg your pardon, Major Granby," murmured Miss Maxwell, with a faint smile, as she gradually recovered her self-command. "I am not very strong, and you mentioned a name which rather startled me."

"Mazzucata."

"Yes." She laid her hand on her breast as though she felt a cruel pain in her heart. "I—I know the name."

"And the singer?"

"No, no," she replied, vehemently, "I do not know her. I have heard the name as that of a famous singer."

"Whom you resemble very strongly."

"I?" she said confusedly. "Oh, no, you must be mistaken."

"I assure you, Miss Maxwell, that when I saw you enter, I thought you were the twin sister of Mazzucata, or the singer herself."

"How absurd," said the girl, with a faint attempt at a smile. "I ought to feel flattered, Major Granby."

"As soon as you are done talking, Edith," cried Maxwell, sharply, "perhaps you will let me finish my business with this gentleman."

"We can finish it together," I said, cheerfully determined not to let this old ruffian crush the girl. "Let us walk round the greenhouse, Miss Maxwell, and if you will accept my arm ——"

"Oh! not at all. I assure you, I know my way about the whole place It is my little kingdom, is it not, father?"

"A very small kingdom," said Maxwell, in a kinder tone than usual, on hearing which, she sighed faintly, and turned her sightless eyes in his direction.

"Large enough for one who is blind," she observed, at length, and then proceeded to converse in a livelier tone. "Well, Major Granby, have you seen all my father's treasures? His red pansies, his blue roses——?"

"And his Black Carnations. Oh, yes, I have seen them all, Miss Maxwell."

"Black Carnations," she said, with a terrified look. "Ah! you have seen the Black Carnations."

What could there be about this flower, to have such an effect on every person to whom it was mentioned? Mazzucata, Dallas, Tressinger, all quailed when any reference was made to it, and now this girl received the name as though it were something horrible. Surely, there was some fatality connected with this flower that made it so awesome: the signal of death to one woman, a name of ill omen to another. I was puzzled, I was startled, I was utterly perplexed, and all on account of this confounded Black Carnation, which was certainly the most obtrusive flower with which it had ever been my fortune to meet.

"Why should I not see the Black Carnation?" I asked, in reference to her last remark.

"Oh, you see, my father does not show it to everyone," answered Miss Maxwell, with an attempt at lightheartedness. "You are very much in favor, Major Granby."

"I wish to purchase the plant, if I may."

"Purchase the plant!" cried Maxwell, wrathfully. "Do you think I would sell it?"

"Well, then, let me buy a bud, at least."

"No, certainly not."

"My father will not part with a single blossom," said the blind woman with a laugh; "he values the plant [illegible]"

"I suppose you sold it to [illegible]?"

"No," answered the gardener, sharply, "it never leaves this greenhouse, [illegible] knows that such a flower is in existence."

"There you are wrong," I observed, quickly. "All the world knows about the Black Carnation."

"All the world!" cried Miss Maxwell, in surprise, "why, how can that be? No bud has ever been shown to the world. You never saw a Black Carnation until to-day."

"Indeed I have."

"But ——"

"Edith," said Maxwell, angrily, "let me take you to your room. This interview is exhausting you."

"It is not," she replied, quietly, "I am delighted to have some one to talk with. I have not enjoyed a conversation so much since Mr. Dallas was down here."

At this name her father started, and uttered an angry sound, and seemed about to insist upon her retiring, but on second thoughts evidently thought better of it and turned away. As for me, I was so astonished at hearing the name that I did not know very well what line of action to take.

"Do you know Mr. Dallas, Miss Maxwell?"

"Just as I know you, Major Granby. He came down to Lippanton some few weeks since."

"And on the same errand?"

"Well, I don't know what your errand is."

"I came to buy flowers."

"Well, Mr. Dallas came to see the famous Black Carnation."

"Edith," cried Maxwell, angrily.

His daughter took no notice of the hint, and went on talking to me.

"Like yourself, Mr. Dallas wanted to buy the Black Carnation, but of course my father refused to sell him a single bud."

"He did, however."

"Oh, no, you are mistaken."

"Of course, Major Granby is mistaken," said Maxwell, advancing towards us with an angry look. "I did not sell Mr. Dallas a bud, nor did he obtain one. Edith, how many flowers are on the plant?"

"Twelve."

"You are wrong, there are only eleven."

"What, father, have you sold a bud?"

"No, but one has been stolen."

"Stolen!" said Miss Maxwell, with an astonished expression on her mobile face, "and by whom?"

"Mr. Dallas," I said, promptly.

"Nothing of the sort," retorted the gardener, quickly; "by Signor Ivan."

"Oh, that singer who was down here," said Miss Maxwell, carelessly; "yes, I remember, he spoke about the Black Carnation."

This was said in so significant a tone, that Maxwell bit his lip, as if to keep down his fast-rising anger.

"He not only spoke of the Black Carnation Edith, but he stole a bud."

"But why should he do that?"

"Ah! that is the question, Miss Maxwell," I said, boldly, in spite of the furious look darted at me by Maxwell. "I told you I had seen a Black Carnation in London."

"Yes; was it Signor Ivan who showed it to you?"

"No, I saw it in a law court—in the police court."

Miss Maxwell grew as pale as death, and shuddered.

"What! what!" she began, faintly, when her father took her arm and tried to lead her to the door.

"Edith! Edith! It is nothing; do go to your room. You are ill."

"I will not got to my room," she cried suddenly, stamping her foot. "I want to hear the end of this."

"Major Granby, tell her nothing," cried Maxwell, greatly agitated.

"Major Granby, tell me all," she said in a commanding tone. "Why was this Black Carnation in a law court?"

The father told me to hold my tongue; the daughter ordered me to speak; so at first I hardly knew what to do. I could not understand the strange conduct of Maxwell, unless it were that he was trying to screen either Dallas or Signor Ivan; but being determined to find out what I could, from Miss Maxwell, since her father was so silent, I spoke out boldly:

"It was evidence in a murder case."

"A murder case!" she echoed, in a sharp tone of anguish. "Mazzucata."

I recoiled, when she said this name, for I could not conceive how she had derived the connection of the flower with the dead woman. Her father, however, came to her assistance.

"She read the papers, you know, sir, about the case."

"Case, what case?" cried Miss Maxwell, turning round to her father, and clutching his hand. "I have read no papers, what do you mean?"

"You are ill, Edith. Come and lie down," he said, trying to sooth her agitation.

"I will not go from here, till I hear all that there is to be told about this case you allude to, Major Granby."

"For God's sake go," whispered Maxwell, pointing to the door.

"He will not go," said the blind woman, imperiously, overhearing the words. "I command him to stay. Father I must know all."

"Then hear all," he cried, furiously, flinging her hand away, "and when you know the truth you will be sorry you did not take my advice."

He rushed out of the door, leaving me alone with the blind girl, and I, astonished at this strange scene which served to hint at hidden mysteries, stood my ground with the determination to learn the truth. Miss Maxwell, with a pale, set face, waited till her father's footsteps died away in the distance, then turned towards me with a commanding gesture.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic Is All You Need.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives, as many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong. Mrs. Maude Begg, Lemberg, Sask., says: "I can unhesitatingly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a blood builder and tonic. I was very much run down when I began using the Pills, and a few boxes fully restored my health."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

OYSTER TODDLE.

Oyster toddle is a kind of chowder. Chop a quarter of a pound of fat salt pork and cook slowly until well dried out. Add two cupfuls of sliced raw potatoes, cover and cook in the fat until very tender. Pour in two cupfuls of hot milk and cook five minutes. Thicken with one teaspoonful of flour worked into one teaspoonful of butter. Add three cupfuls washed oysters, salt and pepper to taste; remove from fire as soon as oysters ruffle. Serve hot with crackers.

SURPRISE OYSTERS.

Cook four medium size potatoes until done, mash and season with salt, pepper, butter and a little parsley. Scald a dozen oysters in their liquor, then drain. Take up enough potato when rolled to be about the size of an egg, make cavity in one end, insert oysters, fill in cavity, dip in beaten egg, roll in cracker crumbs, and fry in deep fat until a golden crown. Serve while hot. This is nourishing and inexpensive.

OYSTER PADDIES.

To one pint of mashed potatoes, add one beaten egg and a little minced onion, form into cakes, split cakes with sharp knife, lay two or three oysters on lower part, and replace top. Bake in moderately hot oven until paddies are brown, garnish with parsley.

"My trouble started from overwork," Mrs. Macdona states, "and I suffered for two years. I was treated by a doctor, but the results were not satisfactory. My joints were stiff, I had cramps in my muscles, my sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I was heavy and sleepy after meals. I had bad headaches, my appetite was fitful and I was always tired and nervous. I was depressed and low-spirited, I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the mornings and I was often dizzy.

"I perspired with the least exertion and I often had sharp pressure or pain on the top of the head. Then rheumatism was added to my troubles. I have taken just two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and they have done me good, not only in one way, but in many. Even my rheumatism is much better."

Mrs. Macdona's symptoms all showed that her kidneys were wrong. If you have similar symptoms try Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Capt. Minniflo is working in aid of the Belgians.

On Wednesday evening last friend and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. Wm. Brown, Con 4, to bid farewell to he and Mrs. Brown on the eve of their departure from their old home where they had resided nearly all their life. Mr Dan McNaughton was appointed chairman and a lengthy program was given consisting of songs, recitations, instrumental music and speeches and many were the reminiscences of olden times. The most interesting part of the program was the address and and presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Brown who were taken completely by surprise. Mr. Brown in a few words in behalf of himself and Mrs. Brown, thanked his friends very kindly for what they had done.

The following address, read by Arch McLean and signed by M. Avis and N. Russell, after recounting the desire of the people to honor their worthy neighbors, set forth:

"For about 38 years you have faithfully toiled here together and made life a success financially as well as otherwise. During that time we have learned to respect and honor you. We have been especially impressed with the fact that in making your own affairs a success you had the happy faculty of leaving the affairs of others alone. We especially mention the true and kind disposition of Mrs. Brown and admire her pluck and integrity when facing those trials and tribulations with which she has been afflicted, but which, we hope, she has at last overcome. Your public career Mr. Brown is well worthy of some mention. The fact that you have occupied every position in the gift of the people of this township from the office of pathmaster to that of County Commissioner, has not come merely by chance. The choice of the majority made those things possible. We therefore ask you Mrs Brown to accept this upholstered chair and you Mr. Brown this arm chair, not on account of their current value but that they may help you to remember us when the future becomes the then present and this present the distant past.

"Our earnest wish is that happiness and prosperity may follow you wherever you may reside and that your future. Hope may rest in the boundless ages of a never ending eternity."

Lunch was then served by the ladies and after enjoying some good old-time Scotch reels etc., the company dispersed after wishing Mr. and Mrs Brown health and prosperity in their new home, wherever they decide to locate.

Underwood Oddfellows had a fine time at Lucknow on Good Friday, when they had the honor of putting on the first degree in the Lodge of Instruction. A Clean-up Day?

Clean up! Brighten up! why not use the first afternoon half holiday for a general clean-up? Would the council care to lead in a general clean up day in the town?

Eternal Vigilance Needed

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir: At the last session of the Legislature a bill was introduced to be known as the Provincial Highway Bill, which contains the following clause:

"The Minister may make regulations respecting the use of a Provincial Highway by any class of vehicles or animals, or prohibiting its use by any class of vehicles or animals, and may impose penalties for violation thereof, but no such regulations shall have any force or effect until approved by the Lt.-Governor in Council, after notice to the Municipal Corporation affected thereby."

I contend sir, that legislation of this kind must never be allowed on the statute books of this province. I should like to ask who are the parties that are to be denied the use of the roads?

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Our roads are public highways, and must forever remain so.

Gilbert Christie.

Saugeen, April 19/17.

Death of Robert Strong

The death took place on Saturday morning of an old and respected resident of Port Elgin in the person of Robert Strong, in his 76th year. Deceased had been ill for the past couple of months, first taking grippe.

The late Robert Strong was born in Portland, England in 1841. He first landed in Owen Sound, with his wife and five children, in 1869, and he walked from there to Port Elgin. After getting a house on the 6th concession, near Salters', he got a yoke of oxen and went back to Owen Sound for his family, and began working for Salters picking stone out of the lake to burn lime. Shortly after he moved to Port Elgin, and worked at his trade of Engineer in Port Elgin and Southampton, for a few years. Then he worked for P. Cross & Co. for some years in the tanning business, but during the last 25 years he has been working, up to 3 months ago, at the Stevens-Hepner Co. He enjoyed good health right up to his last illness. He was a member of the Methodist church, and always tried to get people to be Christians. He was a good living man, very fond of music, and the strains of his concertina on Sunday evenings will be much missed by his neighbors. He was of a kindly loving disposition always anxious to do what good he could. His wife predeceased him about 11 years ago. Out of nine of a family four children have gone before. With the passing of Robert Strong it can be truthfully said that a good man has gone to his reward. The surviving family are: Mrs. A. Wilkie, Port Elgin; Mrs. Tim Harman, Toronto; George, Toronto; Charles, Vancouver; Thomas, Port Colborne. The funeral was held on Monday, afternoon, interment taking place at Port Elgin cemetery.

Hear the Southampton orchestra at town hall Friday night. A musical program before the play beginning at 7.30.

Quality Counts

After all its quality that counts. The reason we have the quality in meat is because we buy plenty of good beef cattle ahead, and keep them fitted, so that when the meat is put on your table it has the flavor, the strength, and the tenderness. Yes, quality counts at Eaton's Butcher Shop.

When all her diseases did leave her.
And now her troubles leave her.
And at once they were all forced to leave her.
And died when it reached her liver.
And all her diseases did leave her.
For she thought no other could relieve her.
Hoping soon all her troubles would leave her.
But alas for the folks who received her.
For she knew all her troubles would leave her.
And there's where the physicians believed her.
And now she eats greens to relieve her.

Organizing the Sunday Schools

Just now superintendents, teachers and scholars of the various Sunday schools in the townships are looking forward to the re-organization of the schools.

Quite a few of the township Sunday schools, in fact nearly all of them close for the winter months. The snow and cold make it almost impossible for the smaller ones to attend, and the practice has been to close the schools. Just whether the practice is a wise one or not is open for argument. Perhaps it is more of following in the same old way, rather than having a well organized school and keeping it summer and winter. It is true, there may be some Sundays when the attendance would be very small, but it does seem that no sooner does the school get working well than it must close for the winter. When the Sunday schools close, then the church attendance also falls off.

No doubt this will be one of the questions which will receive attention at the coming Township convention, which is to be held in June, and Underwood will likely be the place.

FRED. SCHNITTKER

Bruce township is fortunate in having as its organizer Mr. Fred. Schnittker. He is well-known and a prominent young farmer. Fred has a class of boys in the Evangelical Sunday school on the 4th of Bruce, and he is familiar with all the departmental work, and besides has made quite a study of Bruce township, so far as Sunday school affairs go. He would make a good man for the superintendency of the township Sunday schools as allied with the Provincial association. He enlisted with the 160th early last year, but was finally rejected on account of defective eyesight.

It might be interesting, in fact we know it will be, for every parent wants to know about Sunday schools, for us to give a few statistics of Bruce township. The township has a population of about 2100, whereas in 1911 it was about 2300, so there has been a slight depreciation. This depreciation is accounted for pretty much through enlistments. But any depreciation in population has its effect upon the churches and Sunday schools.

	Church Members	Sunday School
Presbyterians	1061	1056
Baptists	165	235
Methodists	134	130
Evangelical	60	75
Union school		75
Brethren	37	90
Free Methodists	5	37
Anglicans	100

Bruce township has 14 churches and 8 pastors, and one preacher holding services in a schoolhouse.

A meeting of superintendents and pastors is to be held in the Methodist church Underwood on May 2, at 7.30 p.m. to complete arrangements for the convention.

A motion of thanks was placed on the minutes for her services. A letter of condolence was also sent by the Union to Mrs. John Henderson.

A telegram was received Thursday by A. Thomson that Joseph, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Forrester, of Red Deer, Alta, had died, after a brief illness of pneumonia. The loved one was but 15 months' old. Mrs. Forrester and the baby were preparing for a visit to Port Elgin in May. The sincerest sympathy is extended to the grief-stricken parents in the taking off of their little boy.

Double Crossed

The lively one act comedy in the town hall Friday night by the Soldier's Friend Club promises to be something all will want to see.

Before he recovers from the shock, number one telephones that she has changed her mind, and the next mail brings word from the other that she will be his. How he gets out of it is the story of a very funny play.

A Toronto report says 160 men are waiting for jobs on the farm and the War Production Club has many more men in sight who want to work on farms.

The Southampton orchestra will begin a musical program at 7.30 Friday night before the play "Double Crossed".

WOUNDED AT VIMY RIDGE

The following letter was written by Pte. Howard Caldwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Caldwell, Chinook, Alberta, formerly of this district.

The letter was written from the War Hospital at Dustan, Northampton, England, and will be read with interest by Times' readers:

Dear Mother:

This is the first opportunity I have had to write on account of not having either material or stamps. However, the Canadian Red Cross sister called on me this morning and left me enough to do some time.

Well, Fritz gave me a hard hit on the morning of March 1st, and I have been taking life easy ever since. Got hit in eleven places, some of them, of course were very slight, and are already healed, however, there are four which will take some time to heal. I had an operation while in France and had a piece of shrapnel taken from the calf of my left leg, and also a piece from my right knee. My right leg is slightly paralysed but the doctors say it will get alright.

PTE. HOWARD CALDWELL

Am in a pretty good place here. Am the only Canadian in the ward I am in, but like it fine. The nurses are nearly all Irish.

While I was in France I was not allowed to say where I was at but here I guess it is alright. We were on Vimy Ridge, and could see Lens with the naked eye, and which is in the hands of the enemy. I am sending Bertha a picture of the boat that brought us from Bologne to Southampton. I spent my birthday on it, March 8th as it was too rough to sail that day. We get four good meals a day here. Must close this time.

FOOD AND MORE FOOD

The importance of increased production is being emphasized as never before. We are told that the food supply of the world is very low. The producers of farm foods are becoming less, and the non-producing consumers are increasing. Wide sections of country, which were formerly productive, are being trampled by armies, and large quantities of food materials are now being lost in transit. The food situation is becoming increasingly serious.

More than one-half of the cropping land of Ontario is now in grass, and the grass lands of the Province have been increasing at the rate of fully one hundred thousand acres annually during the last four years. During this time there has been a decrease in Ontario and in the whole of Canada of live stock, including dairy cattle, beef cattle, sheep and swine. In the last four years there has been an actual decrease in the acreage in Ontario of 23 per cent. in beans, 57 per cent. in peas, 7 per cent. in winter wheat, 10 per cent. in turnips and 12 per cent. in potatoes. In 1916 83 per cent. of the beans, 84 per cent. of the peas, 82 per cent. of the fall wheat and 30 per cent. of the potatoes of Canada were produced in Ontario.

It is estimated that an average acre of beans produces as much real food material as is usually obtained from five to fifteen acres of pasture land in the production of either meat or milk.

With slight exceptions, the most economical sources of food materials in Ontario in the past winter were obtained from the following groups: First, farm crops, oats, wheat, corn, peas, beans, potatoes; second, dairy products—milk, butter, cheese; third, meats—beef, mutton, pork; fourth, fish—salmon, cod; fifth, eggs. According to recent determinations and prevailing prices, as much valuable food material for human consumption could be obtained from the purchase of beans, with twenty cents, as from the purchase of cheese with forty-three cents, of beefsteak with seventy-nine cents, and of eggs with one dollar and sixty-one cents.

Field beans approach animal foods in nutritive value. They contain a high percentage of protein, and in this respect surpass the cereals commonly used as food, such as wheat, and oats. There is a higher percentage of protein in beans than in the best cuts of meat, but it is not quite as completely digested. Protein is a nutrient which serves to build and repair body tissues, as well as furnish energy. It performs essentially the same part in nutrition, whether it is from beans, peas, wheat, meat, milk or cheese.

Skilled labor throughout the Province is very scarce. The farmers of Ontario have an exceedingly difficult task ahead of them if they are to increase the production of the most valuable kinds of food materials in 1917. The following suggestions are offered in the help that they may prove helpful:

1. Carefully plan the crop production for the season at an early date.

2. Thoroughly clean and grade the grain so as to procure the large, plump, sound and well-matured seed.

3. Test the germinating power and the vigor of the seed before time to sow.

4. Overhaul implements and machines so as to be ready to start seeding early and to sow each class of crop at the best time for highest results.

5. Arrange for at least a small amount of such cultivated crops as beans, potatoes, turnips and corn.

6. Watch and destroy the weeds before they are able to make much headway.

7. Economise man labor by using three and four horse teams when possible.

8. Plan so as to make the best use of the unskilled labor which is available.

Copies of bulletins on "Farm Crops," "Field Beans" and "Potatoes" may be obtained from the County Agricultural Representatives, or from the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

Let us do our part as best we can for the good of humanity and for the prevention of a world's famine in essential food materials.

C. A. Zavitz.

CANADA'S NATURAL RESOURCES

An important survey of the natural resources of Canada is being undertaken in conection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has for its purpose the co-ordination of the work which has been so well done by many government departments and with it other data which the government has not collected, thereby making easily accessible to those qualified to utilize the information as much data as possible relative to the natural resources of Canada. Great care will be taken not to do work that has already been well done, and the effort is one which distinctly calls for co-operation. Arthur D. Little, Limited, the Canadian branch of a Boston organization of analytical chemists, are the directors of the work and will do their part of the work with the same altruistic spirit they hope to find among those who assist. The information now available is to be collected on standard forms, is to be transferred to cards in a manner to make it possible to quickly separate the cards according to required classification at the moment. Thus if one desires to know all the places in Canada where deposits of iron are to be found in proximity with limestone, water power, or some other resource, the list of localities can be supplied very quickly. To accomplish this work, which is in the interest of the whole Dominion, it will be necessary to have part time assistance from a great many people who will be willing to devote a very small fraction of their spare time to the work because of self interest, patriotism, local pride, and in some cases nominal remuneration. Those to whom the plan has been explained have offered their co-operation, and have been enthusiastic over the possibilities of the work and the advantage to the country at large in having such information thus brought together and classified for the free use of those interested. A bulletin is now being compiled setting forth in greater detail the plan and purpose of the survey, and this will be sent out especially to those whose co-operation is desired.

Temperament.

Technically, temperament means "the special type of mental constitution due to natural characteristics of the bodily organism." Broadly speaking, temperament is character—the mental makeup of a person, the way he is inclined to think and feel about things in general.—New York American.

The girls who have the most cheek seldom use it in blushing.

THE MIRACLE.

Not in the Easter lily's heart
Of gleaming gold and snow,
Not in the carols silver clear
Where jewelled windows glow,
Not in the stately harmonies
The gilded organs play,
Is found the miracle divine
Of Easter Day.

But in the worm entombed so long
In darkness and in cold,
The resurrection and the life
Immortal we behold:
It breaks the cocoon coffin small,
Arises from the clay,
And heavenward soars on joyful wings
On Easter Day.

THE STORY OF GLASS.

How Made and What Used for in Electrical Industry.

Glass is older than the arts. Volcanic glass was in use in the stone age. The cave man made from it arrow points, spears, knives, etc., because it could be chipped to a razor cutting edge. Obsidian, or volcanic glass, was extensively used by the Aztecs of Mexico and the Incas of Peru for the same purpose. Many a doughty Spaniard fell beneath the great two-handed wooden swords, with seriated teeth of volcanic glass, in the hands of Montezuma's warriors. It is to be inferred that the earlier civilization would act on this suggestion from nature and endeavor to make glass by the fusion of certain rocks and sands. Glass is very old. Its manufacture was common in ancient times.

Chemically, any vitreous compound is called glass. Commercially, glass is a fused mixture of two or more silicates and is often named, from the predominant base, as "soda glass," "potash glass," "lime glass" and "lead glass." It is usually transparent, or at least translucent, and is brittle at ordinary temperatures. Sand is now generally used for obtaining the silicates which form the base of glass. The sand for the finer qualities of the glass is quartz. The principal deposits of sand for glass-making in the United States are in Massachusetts, Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Indiana, Miss part of the country.

There are innumerable kinds of glass. Some are named for their uses as bottle glass, mirror glass, optical glass, window glass. Others, according to the process of manufacture, as blown glass, pressed glass, cast glass, cut glass, ground glass. Other are named according to the localities from which they are obtained, as are Iliar, Bohemian, Murano, Venetian or Venice and Gobain glass. Still other names are given to glass, according to finish and form, as kinkled, corrugated, fluted and spun glass. Then there is agate, marbleized, rose, argentine, aventurine, favrile, bronzed, silvered and platinized glass. The commonest kind of glass, however, is flint glass, and this includes all the myriad forms of glass and bottle glass. Besides all those, there are stained, painted, colored and mosaic glass.

The principal bases used for making all glasses are sodium, potassium, calcium and lead. A host of other ingredients are used in making glass, for coloring, etc., but these vary greatly with the many different glass companies and no definite information can be given as to their use. Very often colored glass is made ordinarily like any other glass, the coloring being accomplished by the addition of dyes (generally metal oxides) to the molten charge. The same metal produces several different colors at various temperatures. More often, however, colored glass is stained, painted or enameled, and when joined by strips of lead to form a pattern, is called mosaic.

Probably the largest use for glass in the electrical trade is in connection with the lighting fixture business. For this class of trade the glass that is most used is milky white opaque glass called bone, milk, opal, alabaster or rich stone glass. Colored or stained glass, cut glass and glass that is green on one side and white on the other, are often used for lighting fixtures. Colored glass is principally used for domes, cut glass for flowers and chandeliers, and the white and green glass principally for half shades and parabola reflectors. Mirror glass, too, is used to a large extent for reflectors.

While it is impossible to state definitely the kind of glass that is used for each electrical device that contains glass in its make-up the following list of devices will serve to give an adequate idea of where and for what glass is used by manufacturers of electrical appliances and devices: Annunciators, arc lamps, bath light cabinets, leads insulating, carriage calls, clocks, car headlights, current rectifiers, color caps, domes, drink mixers, electro-medical apparatus, electroscopes, fuses, fire alarms, electric fountains, flash-light lens, hydrometers, house numbers, insulators, illuminate columns, instruments, incubators, lamp bulbs, luminous radiators, lighting fixtures, marine fixtures, mirror shades, projectors, portables, showcase fixtures, shaving mirrors, signals, stage lights, static machines, vaporizers, voltage regulators and wet bateries.

Glass is an insulator—a non-conductor of electricity and is largely used for insulating purposes, principally in the form of insulators for pole line distribution of electrical energy, generally, however, for voltages of less than 5,000.—Troy Times.

This is to certify that fourteen years ago I got the cords of my left wrist nearly severed, and was for about nine months that I had no use of my hand, and tried other Liniments, also doctors, and was receiving no benefit. By a persuasion from a friend I got MINARD'S LINIMENT and used one bottle which completely cured me, and have been using MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family ever since and find it the same as when I first used it and would never be without it.

Where the Niles Meet.

At the junction of the White and the Blue Niles, 1,400 miles from Alexandria and 1,000 miles from Uganda, stands the capital of the Soudan, which but for the life and death of General Gordon might still be a struggling Soudanese village. Khartoum mean's elephant's trunk, and may well designate the long strip of land which separates the turbid waters of the White Nile from the clear and more rapid streams that come from the mountains of Abyssinia. Across the White Nile stretches the straggling, ancient dervish capital Omdurman, with a population of over 60,000, and it is practically a part of Khartoum, as Brooklyn is of Greater New York.

The quays, streets, gardens and public buildings present the picture of a civilized town, as regular and a good deal more ambitious than some metropolis in the growing west. The majority of the streets are wide, macadamized and lined with splendid trees. There is an excellent system of lighting, and tram cars connect Khartoum with the suburbs, from Gordon College on the east to Omdurman on the west, as well as with North Khartoum across the Blue Nile. Luxurious express trains, with dining and sleeping cars, run twice a week from Khartoum to Cairo.—Christian Herald.

They Cured Him And They Did It Quick

WHAT GEO. W. GARDNER SAYS OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

His Symptoms All Said Kidney Trouble and They Yielded Readily to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Fern Creek, Alta., April 26.—(Special.)—After suffering for three years from kidney trouble, George W. Gardner, a well-known farmer living near here, is again in the best of health, and he gives full credit for his cure to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I think Dodd's Kidney Pills are wonderful," Mr. Gardner said, in telling of his cure. "My trouble started from a strain or a cold and I noticed it first about three years ago.

"My eyes were puffed and swollen, and I had dark circles under them. I was very irritable at times, and my skin had a dry, harsh feeling. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the morning.

"I took medical advice but got no permanent benefit, till I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. Just two boxes of them fixed me up, and I feel as well as ever I did."

Everyone of Mr. Gardner's symptoms is a symptom of kidney trouble. That's why Dodd's Kidney Pills cured them so quickly.

HIGH PRICED EGGS.

A correspondent writes:

"The Dominion Live Stock [illegible] draws attention to the [illegible] high price paid for [illegible] last winter, and there [illegible] to let any producers [illegible] next winter. To many farmers [illegible] it was said [illegible] calling high prices [illegible] making a [illegible] in the laying stock [illegible] season, as the continued [illegible] eggs shows. To relieve the threatened shortage next winter it has been strongly recommended that city dwellers take their keep hens to produce the necessary eggs. This can be done at lowest cost by feeding all table scraps and kitchen waste to the [illegible] cook no food for them, as modern poultry practice shows nothing is gained by cooking. The fowls can and will eat raw anything you may give them.

The city man's best investment is in day old chicks. These are easily raised, as a chick can eat right from the start in life. The chicks can be placed under a setting hen at night, and she will usually take to them, or they may be placed in a comfortable box, with a hot water bottle, renewed frequently, or an electric lamp kept burning, will provide sufficient heat, till they are five or six weeks old, depending on the kind of weather at the time. The best breed for the city man is, without doubt, the white Leghorns, justly called "the egg machine." They give more eggs on less feed than any other breed of fowl. More chicks are obtained from one hundred white Leghorn eggs than from any other breed, and a higher percentage of Leghorn chicks live than of any others, also more Leghorns can be kept in less space than any other class of poultry.

The world's egg-laying record is held by a white Leghorn, and in practically all egg-laying competitions, white Leghorns win three out of the first six prizes. They are now excelling as winter layers, even when kept in open front houses. The modern white Leghorn is not to be confused with the Leghorn of some years back, as the laying strains are now developed into nice, plump birds, well fitted for the family table, some of the roosters weigh about five pounds. The city man cannot go wrong, in getting some Leghorn chicks now, as the early hatched chicks are the sure winter layers. Be sure and get the laying strain, and have strictly new laid eggs at low cost, all winter and summer, and a nice fowl on the table whenever you want it. If this matter is taken up as earnestly as it should be, it will relieve a large quantity of farm produce for export to Britain, where it is needed now, more than ever before.

ONE-THIRD OF GERMAN GUNS ON BRITISH FRONT CAPTURED

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—Although the weather continues atrocious, the aeroplanes daily brave the gales and snow squalls and carry on the important work of serving as the "eyes" of the army. Two of them had a new experience yesterday. They were forced to land within the German lines southeast of Lens, neither the pilot nor observer being injured. Realizing their position, they salved two machine guns from wrecked plane and drove off two German patrols which attacked them. They held the ground until nightfall, when eventually they returned safely to their own lines.

(By Perry Robinson.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable. The weather continues impossible. A thick mist robs us of the advantage of supremacy of observation. We have the high ground commanding the battlefield, and our mastery of the air is hardly less complete than in the Battle of the Somme. Each day enemy machines make perhaps a dozen crossings of our line. Since the Battle of the Arras began we have made daily 400 crossings of his line in deliberate reconnaissance, careful observation, taking on thousands of photographs, and making long-distance raids. Our guns have smothered every enemy battery within range. It is wonderful to see everywhere along the line in captured German positions not only heavy guns knocked out by direct hits, but machine-gun emplacements. All this firing was done as the result of aeroplane observation. The communique informed you of the number of guns captured. It now amounts to 230 since the beginning of the battle. The enemy had 600 guns on the front attacked. We have taken therefore over one-third of his artillery.

The British official report to-night reads:

"Our troops gained ground during the night along the left bank of the River Scarpe, east of Fampoux, and this morning captured a further portion of the enemy's front line system southeast of Loos. We took a few prisoners.

"In the course of bombing expeditions carried out last night our aeroplanes obtained hits upon an enemy train, two hostile columns, a mechanical transport and a German transport park. Great damage was observed in each case."

FARM BETWEEN FIGHTS.

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—In addition to its thousands of other activities and duties the British army is now endeavoring to give the French farmers every possible assistance in getting their crops under way. A bureau has been established where farmers requiring help register. Troops resting in the neighborhood of farms volunteer their help, and horses temporarily unemployed are loaned for plowing and other farm duties. Tractors occasionally are furnished. Some of the principal work consists in reclaiming the battlefield, filling up of trenches and shell holes and levelling the ground.

[illegible] GUNS BROUGHT IN.

British Headquarters in France, Cable. The operations about Lens are proceeding. The British already hold positions on all the western approaches, although the city itself has not been penetrated. Lens is the central point of the great mining district which straddles for miles in all directions. It is an ideal place to defend against ordinary attacks, each slag heap and factory building being an individual fortress.

Minor assaults here and there are improving the British positions, but the general battle scheme is awaiting the development of its next stages.

The British plunge forward in Easter week reached a greater depth in a shorter time than any attack on such a large scale since entrenched warfare began on this front. The total of [illegible] guns brought in, together with ammunition by the thousands of rounds and other [illegible] [illegible] during a similar period of the war.

All German documents which have been captured show that the enemy [illegible] was being planned about Arras because of the massing of troops and artillery. It is [illegible], however, that the Germans expected [illegible] to hold. This was particularly true of their positions on Vimy Ridge, which was the northern Gibraltar of the Hindenburg line.

MODERN BABYLONIANS.

With the French army, Cable.—[illegible] the whole civilized world has an idea of the crimes against civilization which have been committed by the Germans in the districts watered by the Somme, the Oise and the Aisne, from which they have been driven out by the combined French and British forces, but the accounts published limited the descriptions to the way they had destroyed property. Little has been said of the brutal behavior to the inhabitants themselves.

The Germans have acted towards the French as the Babylonians did to the Jews. As soon as they saw retreat inevitable, especially in February and March of this year, they began a systematic deportation of the population. They carried away captive people of both sexes and of all ages, from 14 to 60, to break up families of the unhappy inhabitants in their power. As they broke up the homes of the victims children were torn from their parents, parents from their children, and brothers from their sisters without the slightest regard to the cruel sufferings inflicted. No worse crime was committed by the most brutal masters in the bad old days of negro slavery. About these modern German deportations there is no redeeming points. They are sheer, unabashed vindictiveness. They are carried out without the slightest regard for the feelings or comfort of the victims. From one village they carried off the people at half past three in the morning. Another received only one hour's warning of its impending fate. A third they kept shut up for two days in bitterly cold weather in a building the windows of which were broken and the only bed was the floor, before they were sent off on their long journey to the Fatherland. No regard was paid to the state of health of those chosen for this modern, enlightened form of slavery. In many cases, in spite of the Arctic conditions, no opportunity was given them of providing themselves with the necessary extra clothing.

So much for the treatment of actual captives, who, needless to say, are still being employed in many instances in work of a military nature, contrary to the conventions agreed on before the war by all civilized nations and by Germany. The plight of those left while others were taken was hardly less wretched. They were forced to work their oppressors had no right to exact, which in fact the Germans expressly bound themselves when they still ranked as a civilized nation, not to exact. These people were terrorized by a deliberate system of fine and imprisonment inflicted for either trivial offences against the rules or no offences. As individuals and as communities their goods and money were taken or deliberately smashed and burnt. The list of spoilers included not only the dregs of the German soldiers, but were headed by highly placed military officials—they do not deserve the titles of officers—such as [illegible] von Kluck and the Grand Duke of Hesse.

These things are not vague generalities. They are known to be true. They happened all over the district now happily re-occupied. By what its armies have done under orders after the example of its officers this part of France, where the French have been able to find out for a certainty what happened these past two years under German rule, the whole German nation, until it repents in sackcloth and ashes, has put itself outside the pale of ordinary erring humanity, because its wickedness is no error, nor yielding to overmastering temptation, but deliberate setting up of calculated cruelty as the accepted moral standard of the people.

ROUMANIAN TOWNS BURN

Petrograd Cable.—A report received here from Jassy, the seat of the Roumanian Government, says the Germans have burned the towns of Braila and Fokshani. The despatch says Roumanian military circles consider that this foreshadows a German retirement.

Braila and Fokshani are both important railroad towns in Roumania. Braila lies on the Danube to the south of Galatz, while Fokshani is situated on the railway line about midway between Bucharest and Jassy. A special cable from the London Times published yesterday stated that the Germans were destroying all the sown crops in Wallachia, the great Roumanian grain fields.

RUSS PARLIAMENT.

Plan of Council of Workers and Soldiers.

London Cable.—A Petrograd despatch says that the Congress of the Council of Workers, Soldiers and Delegates has adopted a report regarding the Constituent Assembly which makes the following recommendations:

The assembly shall be convened at Petrograd as early as possible on the principle of universal suffrage. The army shall take part in the elections like the rest of the population, but the active army shall vote separately. Women shall have the same voting privileges as men. The qualifying age for the vote shall be twenty years. The Council of Workers, Soldiers and Delegates shall control the election, which shall fix the political regime of Russia and her fundamental laws.

The report also provides that after constitutional questions are settled the assembly shall take up agrarian problems and draft new laws on matters of labor, questions of nationality, organization of local self-government and all questions of an international character.

OUTLOOK FOR BACON TRADE

Swine Breeders' Committee Meets in Toronto.

Right Type of Hog and Co-operation Urged.

Toronto Report.—A meeting of the committee appointed by the Canadian Swine Breeders' Association at the February meeting, comprising P. J. McEwen, president; J. E. Brethour and R. W. Wade, whose special office is to enquire into the possibilities of the bacon industry, was held yesterday afternoon at the Carls-Rite Hotel. Facts were presented in regard to the campaign for an improved supply of and better market for hogs by Mr. H. S. Arkell, Assistant Live Stock Commissioner; Professor G. E. Day, who has accepted the responsibility of chief director of the movement, and other representatives of the live stock industry.

Mr. Arkell gave an account of the views of the department in regard to the importance of establishing the Canadian bacon trade on a firm foundation that will uphold it in years to come when keen competition again develops, as it will no doubt after the war.

Present conditions, which include the failure of the Danes to maintain their hold of the British market, are specially favorable to the chance for Canada to secure the greatest portion of that business, but it is absolutely necessary, if the trade is to be held, that all of the most exacting conditions must be filled in. The selection and the breeding of the right type of pig and the feeding to just the desired weight and form before going to the packer, and the maintaining of a sufficient and regular supply of the animals.

The fact that pigs of any form or size are bringing abnormal prices at the present time works to some extent against the farmer accepting the desired bacon type as his standard and one object of the present campaign is to impress on all swine raisers that present conditions will not always exist and that Canada's chance of success in the world's swine business depends on her producing a special product for a special market, namely, the British market for bacon.

The professor remarked that one of the first things necessary in undertaking the popularizing of the movement was to secure an understanding with the packers as to their ideas of the future of the trade and its requirements. [illegible]

WOULD END GERMANY

Says Reventlow of Count Czernin's Plan.

Amsterdam, via London, Cable.—The proposal of Count Czernin, Austrian Foreign Minister, for a peace conference of all the belligerents, is attacked by Count von Reventlow in the Berlin Tages Zeitung as menacing to the German Empire. Von Reventlow declares that Count Czernin took no account of the fact that the German Empire is now fighting a battle "which must lead to victory." He declares that a conference on the basis of the principles recommended by the Austrian Minister would destroy Germany internally and externally.

Anything can be overdone. Even the under dog can be spoiled by too much sympathy.

HOW CANADIANS HELD THE RIDGE

Thousands Busy Day and Night With Shovels

Opening Up Trails, Only Communication.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent with the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Headquarters in France, Cable.—Exploration of the field of Vimy at the Canadian corps' front continues to yield remarkable results. The artillery captured now totals: One naval gun, 35 howitzers, many of large calibre, 27 field guns, 124 machine guns, 47 trench mortars.

Stripped of this large proportion of his material the enemy has been unable to organize any serious counter-attacks.

Our outposts have been pushed forward to the wood of Mont Foret, in the region of Arleux.

Now that communications have been opened up across the desert made by our gunfire, it is no longer necessary, for military reasons, to withhold information as to the fight against adverse weather conditions, which were far more prolonged than that against the enemy. The ridge was won by the splendid fighting qualities of our men and held by ceaseless toil throughout the week by thousands of men with pick and shovel, who opened up trails where roads could not be built because of the condition of the ground. The work of restoration is still in progress, but the ridge already is impregnably held.

The people of Canada should know that our soldiers have earned praise in this hurried construction of the means of communication almost as laudable as that given to them after the Battle of Vimy Ridge. At first every pound of food and ammunition and every gallon of water used had to be carried on slippery trails by man power. Even pack mules could not negotiate the labyrinth of shell holes and craters. Our men cheerfully worked long hours, and sometimes they slept in the open in the rain, without food, because detail sent out to bring it up got lost. It is easy to do this, even in daylight and after dark movement is practically impossible. In less than a week, during which snow fell for three days, the work of restoration was well on toward completion, and the military side of the campaign taken up.

The Prussian Grenadier Guard is [illegible] on our front as the capture of prisoners this (Monday) morning proves. The total of prisoners for the week was well over four thousand.

Prussian Guard Officer Says No Excuse

For Giving Up of the Position.

(By Times Special Cable.)
(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent.)

France, Cable.—The Battle of Vimy was a disgraceful defeat for the enemy troops who took part in the action. This is the frankly held opinion of [illegible] officers of the Prussian Guard captured by patrols on our front, where a whole brigade of this guard has taken the place of the Bavarians driven out after the battle.

An officer who is well known in British Columbia, where he has visited as a big game hunter, says that, despite the intensity of the cannonade, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The enemy resistance on our front east of Vimy ridge has [illegible].

Everybody on this front has been greatly encouraged by the good news from the south of Arras.

During the recent [illegible] work of the Canadian cavalry, a young officer and patrol of less than a dozen men killed or captured several members of the fleeing German infantry. A concealed machine gun then opened fire on the horsemen. The lieutenant fell wounded, but refused the rescue proffered by his sergeant, whom he ordered to run back to the infantry lines with the important information gathered during the ride through the enemy's country. The sergeant got through, but the lieutenant is posted as missing, and is presumably a prisoner. His self-sacrifice had important results.

Friend—You are not going to run again, Congressman—No. It's too strenuous. I was sent down to Washington to look out for my constituents, and from the tone of their letters I've got to look out for them when I get home.—Puck.

U. S. Ambassador at Vienna Said to Have Tried.

Amsterdam, Cable.—The Budapest correspondent of the Tages Zeitung, of Berlin, says he was reliably informed that Frederic C. Penfield, former American Ambassador to Austria-Hungary, before his departure from Vienna made definite proposals for the separation of Austria-Hungary from Germany, and the conclusion of an agreement with the Entente. The [illegible] of this arrangement, the correspondent says, was the cession by Austria-Hungary of part of Galicia, the Trentino, Bosnia and Herzegovina, [illegible] which it would receive [illegible] and Silesia after Germany's defeat. This proposal [illegible] the correspondent says Mr. Penfield realized the uselessness of prolonging his stay in Vienna.

FALL WHEAT IS NOT PROMISING

Freezing and Thawing of Last Few Days Harmful.

Farm Labor Situation Also Not Bright.

Toronto Report.—From reports received from the district representatives of the Ontario Department of Agriculture it would appear that the outlook for Fall wheat and clover is not all that could be desired. The clover and wheat came through the Winter in excellent shape and looked very promising until the last ten days, when as a result of the freezing and thawing, combined with high winds, the clover has been heaved out of the ground and the wheat severely scalded. Western Ontario, being somewhat earlier than the East, would appear to have suffered to a greater extent than Eastern Ontario. The report from Essex County estimates that two-thirds of the wheat has been killed. Very little work has been done on land up to date, except the land of a gravelly or sandy nature. However, a few warm days would enable practically all the farmers of the province to begin seeding in earnest.

The farm labor situation is somewhat serious throughout the province. It would seem, however, that the farmers are fairly well prepared to take care of things during the seeding and planting period. In many cases there are indications of the farmers having purchased labor-saving machinery in order to do their work with less man power. It is felt, however, that the farmers will be very much in need of help during the haying and harvest and are depending upon the towns and cities to help them out. The reports would seem to show that the farmers who used High school boys a year ago were well satisfied and are planning on similar assistance this year. With the large number of High school boys who are apparently willing to assist in production it is felt that they will go a long way to relieve the situation.

U. S. CITIZENS IN OUR RANKS

Brig.-Gen. Mason Points Out Exaggerations.

7,500 Americans is an Outside Figure.

Toronto Report.—Brigadier-General the Hon. James Mason, Chief Organizer of the Reserve Militia of Canada, writes as follows:

A few days ago there appeared in a Toronto newspaper under the heading of "Canadian Press Despatch," and of date New York, April 13th, a statement from which I quote:

"A special cable to the Herald from London, dated yesterday, says:

"'The prospect of the early participation of American troops fighting under the American flag on the western front has caused tremendous enthusiasm here.

"'At [illegible] the nucleus for a force is at grips with the Prussians in France, it being estimated that 32,000 American citizens are fighting in the [illegible]'"

[illegible]

Were not [illegible] detrimental [illegible] due to those Americans who are gallantly [illegible] I think, in justice to [illegible] the following facts should be made known.

I had [illegible] the Senate [illegible] session of [illegible] and also as [illegible] and the figures I obtained in connection with the [illegible] of these [illegible] official in every instance.

Up to March 31st, [illegible] total of [illegible] the foreign born numbered [illegible]. From this total of [illegible] there must be deducted Russians, French, Greeks, Italians and other foreign nationals or patriots who naturally preferred the facilities given in the Canadian army to those in their own distant lands, and probably not more than 5,000 of this total were Americans, and on the proportion of [illegible] Canadians enlisting between after March 31st, the outside total of Americans in our 400,000 men training in Canada and England or fighting at the front would be barely 7,500, with less than half that number actually in France.

In view of this it is difficult to understand why such statements should be made, and I trust the press of Canada will do its best to correct this erroneous American impression, more especially as I am told New York papers the other day were sold on the streets to the cry of "Great American Victory at Vimy."

ATROCITIES BY THE HUN OVER FRANCE

Government Commission of Investigation Reports On Its Work.

REIGN OF TERROR

Barbarism of All Sorts Proved to the Hilt Against Invader.

Paris Cable.—A Government commission which was appointed to investigate German atrocities has just completed its inquiry in the evacuated regions north and south and prepared a report, which appears in the Official Journal to-day. The commission, which is headed by Georges Payelle, President of the Superior Court, has traversed a portion of the regions of the Oise, Aisne and Somme.

"Everything in this spectacle of devastation offers we have had before our eyes the [illegible] of such [illegible] and striking uniformity that it is impossible not to see in it the execution of a rigorous prepared plan," says the commission in the opening of its report. "All this was done at the same time, and with the same [illegible], in order to bring about [illegible], inspire terror, and create desperation."

The report [illegible] recounts atrocities committed by the Germans when they entered some of the villages in August, 1914, and which are now made public for the first time. At Noyon, it says, one of the residents, M. Devaux, selected as a hostage, was shot by a soldier who was about to look for a handkerchief. The same day, Aug. 30th, V. [illegible], a janitor, was shot and wounded. Some time afterward Madame [illegible] was shot and killed by a soldier to whom she had refused to give wine.

At the beginning of October the report affirms, inhabitants of Verpillieres were arrested on the pretext that they were communicating with the French army. They were taken before a court-martial at [illegible], and after an inquiry twelve of them were marked on the right cheek with a blue cross.

"We have not yet been informed of the fate of these prisoners," says the report. "We only know that M. Poisson, aged 67, and M. Vasset, aged 78, were brought back to Verpillieres."

Sister Romanie, superior of Noyon Hospital, was told by an officer that the French people did not want peace, and that the Germans had orders to war on civilians. At Guiscard, says the report, a German [illegible] declared: "Germany's peace offer having been refused, the war now covers another phase. Henceforth we shall respect nothing."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Dr. Creelman, commissioner of agriculture in the Ontario government, gives it as his opinion that wheat will sell for $4 before it returns to $2, and one of his reasons is that the United States has scarcely enough food to take care of its own needs. Wheat, if it should soar to $4 will mean that many families in the centres of Canada, will go hungry. But perhaps the commissioner, who made the prediction before Reciprocity came, will be mistaken. Were we not told that free wheat would simply flood the Canadian markets with U. S. wheat?

Victoria county, at a recent meeting of its council, has entered the Good Roads scheme, and some 250 miles of roads will be assumed as a county road system. Towards the cost of constructing these roads the County will receive the Provincial subsidy of 40 per cent and towards the maintenance 20 per cent. The addition of Victoria County to those which have assumed county road systems makes a total of 25 of the 37 counties in the Province which will receive the Government grants as outlined above.

Mr. Choate, former U. S. ambassador to England, urges the United States to prepare for three years of war. This is hard for Canadians to believe, and we all hope that it may not be so. Mr. Choate points out that at the beginning of the war there were many to advise Lord Kitchener that the war would only last three months, but he went on preparing. Mr Choate argues that if Germany should get good crops this year, they will stiffen up for further hardships. The Germans fear defeat more than they fear anything else, and their feelings will be played up to the greatest possible degree by the autocracy.

J. Ogden Armour, the famous meat packer, of Chicago, urges the United States government to take over all the wheat the farmers can produce, guaranteeing them $1 50 per bushel. He says if this is not done his country will find itself next fall and winter in the same condition as European countries. The government should regulate the prices, and let everyone produce. Mr. Armour, strange to say, also advocates that the government introduce two meatless days a week, and put it in force at once. The war is doing wonderful things. Here is a celebrated meat packer advocating people to cut off eating so much meat.

Free wheat and wheat products is latest mandate from the Dominion government. In other words the reciprocity of 1911 fame, has been forced upon us. The demands of the western farmer have been insistent, and the little remedial measures adopted now and then by the government the past few years has only made the producers of the great west more insistent. It will be said repeatedly that war conditions have made the reciprocity in wheat products necessary, but after all, it is the west which has asserted itself. There are many opinions being expressed as to just how the new order will work out. But they are mainly guesses. Time alone will tell

There is a movement, aided by the Swine Breeders' Association and the government, under the cover of enquiring into the bacon industry, to aid the packers and a few special breeders, so that hog prices will be paid according to quality. At a meeting in Toronto awhile ago between government officials and association officials it was shown that the packers favor the idea of a graded high class of hogs, also that they are willing to see the farmers get fair treatment. That last sentence is most amusing. Perhaps the system these fellows have in mind for giving fair treatment to the farmer, is that the packer, under the new scheme, will dock the farmer so much for not bringing to market hogs with the proper shade of hair. Farmers should retaliate with the co operative idea.

A Crying Need For More Food

It is estimated that forty million men are bearing arms in the present titanic struggle, while twenty million men and women are producing munitions and clothing for soldiers. Many of these sixty millions were formerly producers of food. From that work they are withdrawn, leaving vast regions idle. Ten nations are on rations, and six in distressing lack of food.

Canada is one of the countries that are expected to produce a surplus of food to help to make up the deficit in lands that are more severely affected. It is our duty to feed our soldiers and our allies. Our country is exceptionally well situated, for a vessel can make four trips from Canada to England in the time occupied by one trip from Australia.

Our present production falls far short of what ought to be done. The acreage of wheat, oats, barley, and potatoes was nearly 365,000 less 1916 than in 1915, and the yield declined by more than 73 million bushel. Between 1914 and 1916 the yield of potatoes fell from 26,717,587 bushels to 7,408,429 bushels.

Through the Ontario Government Public Employment Bureaux a determined effort is being made to secure a large amount of farm trained labor and it is hoped that the farmer will make full use of same and produce large crops this season, for every pound of which large prices are likely to be paid.

April Showers

April showers, aren't they sweet.
They refresh the air, and wash the street,
To field and tree, they bring the green
And make of earth, one picturesque scene.
They bid the gentle snow retire
A long repose, her well earned hire
And to the frosts, they whisper low
Your duty's done, now you may go.
Their pattering sounds the insects start
Thus they come forth, to do their part.
They give the worm, a timely hint,
They bring to life, the fragrant mint.
They remind the bird, of building time
They coax the tiny vine to climb,
From trench they order farmer's foe
The command is march and face the hoe.
They are welcomed by the screaming goose
They let the frogs and reptiles loose.
The fishes dart with lightning speed
So glad from fetters to be freed.
They raise a stream beside the way
By which the children love to play,
They fill each gentle heart with joy,
To masculine hands they bring employ
They charm belated winds to rest
The flowers spring at their request.
The splendor of this world of ours
We owe to God for April showers.

Seeing Auld Scotland

Edinburgh, Scotland,
March 24, 1917.

Editor The Times,
Port Elgin, Ont., Can.

Dear Sir:—One of our worthy old sayings runs something like this. "If you know a good thing pass it on," so with your permission I will pass on something I considered good, namely, an account of my visit to Scotland, the land of the thistle and heather, taking place from March 19th till March 26.

In the beginning may I say a word or so concerning the Y. M. C. A. which is a wonderful institution, especially for looking after the needs and comforts of sailors and soldiers from all parts of our Empire. Go where you may the Red Cross women of these countries are sparing no efforts to make the sailors' and soldiers' lives more pleasant through the Y. M. C. A. and other means.

But to return to the story; arrived in Edinburgh by way of London at 8.30 on Tuesday, March 20th, a bright and cloudless morning, and as the sun later rose from behind the eastern hills, this old city's towers and castle showed up to fine advantage. By the way, Edinburgh is a wealthy city, and very little manufacturing or employment of any kind is noticeable. This is where a great difference exists between Edinburgh and Glasgow for instance. First thing after breakfast was a sight seeing expedition on foot, and we had the pleasure of entering within the walls of the famous castle, the residence of Scotland's former monarchs. Queen Mary's room was a sight and she was able to look down to a depth of about 400 feet. One wondered if she ever walked in her sleep at that height. One also sees the old frame work in which the fire was kindled in case of alarm that it might be spread throughout the land. Numerous old cannon guarded the city and stood ready at holes in the thick walls through which they hurled their contents. The Scotch regalia was not on exhibition during the war. Next comes Scott's monument on Princess Street, a very costly structure. St. Giles Cathedral still stands, and is counted as one of the land marks in Scotland's religious life. Other places of interest are John Knox manse and later home (in the basement of which is an old curiosity shop), Holyrood Palace containing Mary's room and that of Lord Darnley. The Chapel Royal stands at the rear of the Palace. Nelson's monument stands on Calton Hill, from here away in the distance about 8 miles one span of the Forth bridge is distinctly visible. Near the monument stands "The Disgrace of Edinburgh" or as the Scotchmen terms it "Scotland's Pride and Poverty." In fact I think the latter is the most fitting name. It appears that at one time the Scotch attempted a large building after the style of the Romans, and long ere its completion funds ran low and the large pillars stand today to tell the tale. Edinburgh contains the finest art gallery in Scotland. But to pass on.

At 8.15 next morning we leave for Aberdeen by way of Dundee, Stonehaven and the bridges spanning the Firth of Forth and Firth of Tay. The former is a wonderful example of engineering indeed, and is classed as the longest bridge in the world to day. On both sides of the train one can see large ships anchored in the river. From here on the train runs along the sea side, and as the tide was out one could see men and women digging in the sands away out from shore, searching for bait with which to catch fish later on. At Dundee let us rest awhile and mention the farming operations as viewed from the coach window. Here as in Canada their horses are two abreast in this way they differ from the English custom. Plowing is done in an almost perfect way, every furrow being even and straight as can be. On many of the farms the women are seen taking the place of those gone to war. One does not see anything but the best of heavy horses, and apparently every farmer owns a large flock of sheep.

Well, having again started we arrive in Aberdeen. The principal building is the University of Aberdeen, erected by Strathcona. Here also stand monuments to Wallace, King Edward VII, and other prominent men. Aberdeen has many other fine public buildings, art galleries, theatres, etc.

Leave here next day for Perth and Stirling, and at this place we visit the field of Bannockburn, on which stands a high flag pole. Here also we saw the little stream of Bannockburn near which the battle was fought. The next item of interest is Wallace's monument, containing this warrior's sword 5 feet 4 inches in length. Sterling Castle we also visited and from the lookout of the the late Queen Victoria it is said one of the finest views in Scotland lay. Within the castle walls are the Douglas room (where Douglas was murdered) lions' den, and dungeon. One may see from the lookout the battlefields of Bannockburn, Falkirk and Stirling bridge where Wallace cut the old wooden bridge spanning the Forth river, thus cutting off the English advance. Gillies Hill is also just accross the way.

Leave for Glasgow arriving in the city on March 23, at 5 p.m., and have no trouble in finding the Central Y.M.C.A. for soldiers and sailors. Here we received the best of treatment. From Glasgow we leave for Balloch a little town 32 miles N. W. of the city and situated on the famous Lock Lomond.

While here we had a motor boat ride on the Lock, which is 24 miles long by 7 miles wide. It contains 34 islands. The steep sides of Ben Lomond are near by and the top of this mountain, over 3000 feet high is clothed in mist and clouds.

Returning to Glasgow we pass for quite a distance along the Clyde River where ship building is in full progress.

From here we return to Edinburgh and attend service in St. Giles, Sunday morning at 11.30. The singing is grand and the whole service inspiring.

At 7 p. m. we leave Edinburgh for London and one cannot soon forget such a pleasant trip in which the hospitality of the Scotch people is so strikingly seen.

Best of wishes to all my old friends and thanking you Mr. Editor.

THE FORD car has been on the market twelve years, surely long enough to have proven its high quality. There is nothing experimental about it. Every part has stood the test of time and proven its stability with hard service. No other car has ever approached the durability record of Ford

No matter what price you pay for a car you cannot get one with a stauncher chassis. Government Laboratory tests have shown that the different parts of the Ford car are superior to those in any other car. Ford Vanadium steel has never been equaled in strength.

If you want a car that can plough through deep mud, sand and gravel—that can cross fields, corduroy roads and ford streams—that can climb the steepest hills with ease—that will give the greatest mileage all year round with the least expense and care—then there is only ONE car for you—The Ford.

This Coupon is for Every Farmer who is willing to use Help

The Empire must be Fed or we lose this War

As the District Representative of the Department of Agriculture I have orders to do my utmost, amongst other duties, to encourage production of Farm Products and particularly to assist in securing a supply of farm labour.

By a system, I report on both the available supply of labour and the local demand. If the demand exceeds the local supply I have the whole Province to draw on, through the Ontario Government Public Employment Bureaux which I represent in this District, and I will do my utmost to see that my District is supplied.

I am satisfied that if the farmers in my District who are anxious to fill a patriotic duty and take advantage of the strong demand there is and will be for every pound of food stuff that can be produced—want or will use the available labour, they can get good help by filling in, clipping out and mailing the above Coupon. But you should do it today.

The Motherland sorely needs food.

Where is the I coming from? Ever

It is streaming in to us quarters. Thanks to the deep shown by the Department of Agri the Public Employment Burea Organization of Resources Com Boards of Trade, etc., a sweeping paign has been carried on in the Cit Towns, etc., to arouse the people to a sense of the duty they owe to the Farmer and to themselves to place hand and mind in readiness for a call to work on the land this season.

High School boys, retired farmers, teamsters, warehousemen and business men in thousands, preferably those who were raised on farms, are being lined up.

We are taking great care to impress on them that this means work—not a holiday—and they will all understand this thoroughly. In most cases the workers will be actuated by fine patriotic motives, ready to work and work hard.

This is a sincere endeavor to co-operate with the farmers to increase food production. We know you Farmers will do your part.

Our boys at the Front must not go hungry.

Pte. Wm. McKenzie in a letter home dated March 27th says:

"By all reports you have had a very heavy winter in Bruce county. It has been very nice here up to the last few days. when it was showery. The ground is nice and dry. We finished our musketry course yesterday, and I was quite glad to get it through. We went to the ranges for fourteen days steady. We walked down the ten miles in the morning, and back at night on the train.

We are back at signalling again. I like it very much. Harvey McLean is away taking a course just now. I was very sorry to read of the deaths of Mrs. Ira. Hilker and Lawrence Schrank. I also noted the write-up in The Times of the banquet tendered to Warden Izzard.

We had a great time here the other night. We were sitting in our hut, when in rushed Lieut. Cameron, and told us to be ready for France in thirty minutes, with our heavy packs. That meant we had to do in half an hour what should take a half day. Believe me, there was some tall hustling, packs, boots, socks, etc., flying. There were many of the men outside the camp, some a few miles distant. Word was sent to them that every soldier must report to his unit. One man was at Gilford, and he tried to get a bus to bring him to camp, but could not, so he started to run it. He did the eight miles in an hour. After all the rush, it wasn't to go to France. It was just a general mobolization of all the troops in England. It sure made some excitement for us.

Our mascot, the bear, a picture of which appeared in The Times shortly after we left Canada, broke away from us the other night. He was tied under a big tree, when he broke his chain, and went exploring. He visited another battalion, and went up to one of the huts. The door being open, he went right in, and seeing two men lying on the bed, he thought he would like a sleep, too, so jumped upon the bed. The men were quite frightened for a few minutes, but our bear is quite tame, you know.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

Tells how to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn or callus the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off with the fingers.

Freezone dries the moment it is applied, and simply shrivels the corn or callus without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but will positively rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or hardened callus. If your druggist hasn't any freezone he can get it at any wholesale drug house for you.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson V. April 29, 1917.

Jesus Welcomed as King.—John 12: 12-26.

Commentary.—I. A welcome for Jesus (vs. 12, 13). 12. The next day—On Saturday evening, after the Jewish Sabbath, the feast was given at Simon's house, where Mary anointed the head and feet of Jesus. It was "on the next day," or Sunday, that the triumphal entry took place. Much people that were come to the feast—The feast was the Passover, which was held annually to celebrate the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. The multitudes who came to Jerusalem from all parts of Palestine and from many foreign countries were very great. A census is said to have been taken in Nero's time of the pilgrims attending the feast of the Passover, and the number was found to be over two and a half million. This indicates the interest that existed in the observance of this feast. Heard that Jesus was coming—The important utterances and the great miracles that had been crowded into the three and a half years of his public ministry had resulted in spreading his name far and wide. The multitudes at Jerusalem heard that Jesus was approaching the city and they were intensely eager to see him. They were impressed with the thought of his greatness and goodness, and were ready to accord highest homage to him. 13. Took branches of palm trees—"Took the branches of the palm trees."—R. V. The language indicates that there were palm trees growing along the road between Bethany and Jerusalem, and the people took branches from them to do honor to Jesus. The palm is recognized as an emblem of victory and rejoicing. The fact that the people took these palm branches "and went forth to meet him" is evidence that they believed in his kingship. They would welcome him to the sacred city, the centre of the great Jewish system of religion, as the one who was to come to fulfil the prophecies uttered centuries before. Hosanna—This is the Hebrew word translated to the Greek and passed on into the English. It means, "Save, we pray." It was used on this occasion in adoration of him whom the multitudes were hailing as king. Blessed—Happy, honored, adored. The King of Israel—This is an acknowledgment that Jesus was the Messiah, the king who was to come. The prophets spoke of him under the title of king (Isa. 32: 1; Jer. 23: 5; Zech. 9: 9). The idea the multitudes had of the nature and work of the Messiah was vague and crude, yet they were eager to recognize his kingship. In the name of the Lord—He came not only in the strength of the Lord and with his authority, but also as divine, assuming man's nature that he might make an atonement for the sins of the world. The different evangelists record different forms of this ascription of praise, and taken together they are most expressive. "Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest" (Matt. 21: 9); "Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest" (Mark 11: 9, 10); "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the highest" (Luke 19: 38); "Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord" (John 12: 13).

II. Coming in humility and triumph (vs. 14-19). 14. Found a young ass—The other evangelist gives an account of Christ's sending two of his disciples, presumably Peter and John, into a village near to Bethany to find an ass and her colt tied, which they were to bring to him. Jesus told the two disciples that they should tell any who might question why they were taking the animals that the Master needed them. Sat thereon—This is the only instance during Christ's public ministry of his traveling in any way on land except on foot. As it is written—The reference is to Zech. 9:9. In this passage Jesus is spoken of as being a King, and at the same time as lowly. 15. Daughter of Sion—The people of Israel. Thy King cometh—Jesus came to establish a spiritual kingdom and not to rule as a mighty earthly sovereign. He came directly to the Jews, but he came also to all the world. He is to bear the title, "King of kings," and happy are they who in this life own his authority and render hearty obedience to him. Sitting on an ass's colt—It was a young animal, on which no one had ever ridden. The ass is highly esteemed in the east and is almost indispensable. The horse is used in warfare, but the ass is associated with peace.

16. Understood not—The minds of the disciples were not prepared beforehand for this extraordinary scene. Their Master appeared to them in a new office, and they wondered at the homage that was paid to him. They failed to recall the Scripture texts that show that this was a part of the divine plan of working out human redemption; but after the ascension of Jesus they remembered what had been foretold and then they understood the import of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. 17. The people therefore bare record—The raising of Lazarus from the dead a few weeks before this had made a profound impression and was still fresh in the minds of the people. Those who were present when Jesus called Lazarus from the tomb gave wide publication to the miracle, and the multitudes were attracted to Jesus. Even the Pharisees admitted that this miracle had been wrought and they were powerless to keep the people from flocking to him. 18. The people also met him—The evangelists speak of two multitudes, the one before Jesus and the one following after him. The multitude that was coming forth from Jerusalem to meet him was composed largely of pilgrims who had come from distant places to attend the Passover and were in sympathy with Jesus. Those who followed him were the people of the vicinity of Bethany who had been joined by others who were on their way to the feast. Heard that he had done this miracle—The Jews who had come from remote places were told by the people who lived near Jerusalem that Jesus had recently raised Lazarus from the dead. The events of the last few days of the earthly life of our Lord was known to multitudes of Jews. The great reception that was given to him on his approach to Jerusalem at this time must have made a deep impression upon them; and they must have been greatly affected by what took place a few days later. It would be a question in the minds of the people, why there should be such a change of the people's attitude toward Jesus, whose words and miracles were known to all.

19. Pharisees—An influential sect of the Jews. At the time of their rise they were a reform body and deeply devoted to the Mosaic law, but they had become powerful and popular and had lost their devotion. They took a strong position against Jesus, for he denounced their hollow profession and their hypocrisy. Coming in lowliness as he did, he did not appeal to them as being the Messiah. Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing—These opposers of Jesus consulted together over the enthusiastic reception which Jesus was receiving. They had used their most earnest efforts to keep his followers from giving honor to him, but they had not succeeded. They admitted among themselves that with all their plotting and activity they had accomplished nothing. The world is gone after him—The Pharisees made use of a strong expression in acknowledging the hold that Jesus had upon the people. From the different accounts of this event there is nothing to indicate that there was any part of the multitudes that were opposed to giving a royal welcome to Jesus. While Jesus knew what awaited him, he saw that this welcome was genuine and the people really honored him.

III. Greeks seeking for Jesus (vs. 20-26.) 20-22. Among those who came to Jerusalem to worship at the feast there were some of Grecian descent. They were probably proselytes to the Jewish faith, but had not fully conformed to Jewish customs. They had heard of the miracles which Jesus had wrought and were desirous of seeing him. They made this desire known to Philip, who in turn told Andrew. These disciples bore the request to Jesus. 23-26. In answer to the desire of the Greeks to see him, Jesus made it very clear that his mission was not to become a great earthly ruler, but he must become "obedient unto death" and "be glorified." The grain of wheat must fall into the ground and be buried before it can become fruitful in producing a harvest. Jesus must go through the ordeal of death in order to accomplish his glorious mission of making possible the salvation of the race. The Greeks were shown that eternal life might become their possession upon the condition of surrendering all to Jesus. The earthly life must become fully subservient to the spiritual life if one would have the life that is eternal. The way is open to all who will follow Jesus. The followers of Jesus enter upon a life of service; but the servant is in close fellowship with the Master and will receive honor from the Father.

Questions.—Where did Jesus spend the Sabbath before his triumphal entry into Jerusalem? What feast was soon to be held? In what ways did the multitudes give homage to Jesus? Describe the manner of Christ's entry into the city. What Old Testament prophesy bears on this point? What miracle increased the desire of the multitudes to see Jesus? By what figure did Jesus foretell his death? What are the conditions on which eternal life is received?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Acknowledged Kingship.

I. Indicated by the joyous multitude.

II. Explained in its spiritual import.

I. Indicated by the joyous multitude. Both the Jews of Jerusalem and those in attendance at the Passover, bore witness to the miracle, the raising of Lazarus, which led to the demonstration the day following the supper at Bethany. With palm branches, symbols of triumph, and with loud acclamations they welcomed the King to the Royal city. Until then Jesus had resisted and restricted the enthusiasm of the people. Now the time had come for him to accept it. His entry into Jerusalem was in accordance with duty and necessity, the carrying out of an eternal plan indicated six hundred years before. Two things were to be done, first openly to announce his true relation to the theocracy and to assert himself in such a way as to give no countenance to mistaken Messianic ideas. He who had tacitly claimed to be Zion's King, who had repeatedly proved his right to such dignity and had established it by the miracle at Bethany, now asserted it in the most open manner by riding in royal state into his capital, to complete his work. He was no usurper, but one to whom the throne belonged by divine appointment. The event seemed at first to confound the plot of the Pharisees. The nation seemed to be slipping from their hands. They seemed to blame each other for the frustration of their plans. They evidently concluded that the time had passed for half-measures and therefore prepared to adopt the more extreme measures suggested by Caiaphas. The day was memorable for its surprises and reversals of judgment. The hopes and visions of the disciples were doomed to disappointment.

II. Explained in its spiritual import. The Greeks were representatives of the great Gentile world seeking after Jesus, ready, it would appear, to enter his kingdom. Their request was for a private conversation with Jesus on religious subjects. They may have cherished some desire and hope of being admitted into the number of Christ's disciples. It is significant that they, as proselytes of the Gentiles, should be so anxious to see Jesus at a time when the Pharisees were taking counsel for his destruction in a spirit of deepest hatred. Jesus regarded the request of the Greeks as an indication that the crisis of his career was at hand; not that he needed such an evidence, but he welcomed it as it came, as he looked through the vista which opened up him and the joy before him. That approaching hour in the Saviour's life was that for which all others had prepared, which had been foretold, expected and waited for. It was the hour of the apparent success of his foes. It was the hour of his humiliation and woe. It was the hour of sacrifice and redemption. Jesus knew that he must die in order to become to mankind the source of spiritual and eternal life. His truest glory was to consist in the salvation of multitudes by means of his sacrifice and intercession. The including of Jews and Gentiles in "one new humanity" made up the triumph of Christ's spiritual Kingship. The principle of death and fruitfulness as applied by Jesus to himself is one ordained by the Creator of the moral universe, teaching that the only true enrichment is through giving, the only true gain is through loss, the only true victory is through suffering and humiliation, the only true life is through death. Jesus foretold the results of his obedience unto death, the spiritual hopes of a whole race. The prospect of approaching suffering and of future victory stirred and troubled his soul with a mighty emotion. In the coming of the Greeks our Lord discerned the earnest of a glorious future. His answer to their application was in substance that the extension of the gospel to the Gentiles was conditioned by his death. Their presence suggested the thought of the scattered sheep, for whose gathering the Shepherd must lay down his life. His language implied that the hour of his passion was at hand. He alone could appreciate the magnitude of the crisis, the mysterious import of the great transaction. In him was the promise of a new and blessed life for humanity. Because he was the son of God, it was impossible for him to bring to the human race spiritual vitality and fruitfulness. The relationships here revealed are indissoluble in Christ, identification with Christ and hope in Christ.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS FROM PURE-BRED AYRSHIRES

How a Firm of Dairymen Near Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Are Making Good in Winter Dairying Their Methods of Management Explained.

(By A. J. Campbell.)

A farmer who was trying to sell a cow represented the animal as a "nice cow" to the prospective purchaser, who thereupon asked: "How much milk does she give?" "Oh, I don't know, I never measured it," replied the farmer. "But she's a nice kind cow. If she's got any milk at all she'll give it to you."

A visitor to the dairy farm of Andrew McRae & Sons at East Royalty, near Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, was told this story. It represents the haphazard system of farming once prevalent in the Maritimes, but now passing away unregretted, except, perhaps, by a few lovers of the picturesque. It is true that artists' pictures of rural life seldom portray the separator, and bucolic poems are silent about the Babcock test. At the same time a visit to any of the leading dairy [illegible] of the Island reveals the fact that [illegible] may go hand in hand with all the circumstances of old order.

Messrs. Andrew McRae & Sons began to specialize in dairying in 1900. They have a herd of sixteen pure-bred Ayrshires on their farm of 125 acres.

The McRaes [illegible] the Ayrshire, the pride of the Scottish breeder. "[illegible] the Ayrshire to be admirably suited to grazing [illegible]" they said. "She belongs to a hardy, vigorous breed, quick and active, and withstands adverse conditions admirably. She has a vigorous appetite and gives a good account of her food. She is a persistent milker and transmits her good qualities to her offspring. We find that the Ayrshire milk may be turned at will either into the finest cheese or the choicest butter, while as a market milk none excels it. The fat globules are small in size and hence the milk stands transportation admirably."

The mature cows of the McRae herd yield an average of 10,000 pounds yearly, giving an average of 430 pounds of butter fat; the heifers yield from 7,000 to 8,000 pounds, with an average of from 300 to 350 butter fat. The milk is separated and the cream sold to the creamery at from 26 to 32 cents for fat.

The herd are on pasture from June 1st to October 21st. The pasture feed is supplemented by green feeds. If the price warrants, a small amount, up to two pounds, of cotton seed meal is fed to the heaviest producers according to yield. In winter the cows are fed the usual quantities of hay, roots and ensilage, together with a meal ration of oats, barley, bran and oil cake, mixed according to price and fed at the rate of about one pound to every four pounds of milk given. Every effort is made to have the cows in prime condition at the time of freshening, but two weeks before this time all heating feed is cut off. After freshening the cow is fed for a week chiefly on roots and bran, and then is gradually brought out into the full meal ration.

The rule of one pound of meal to every four pounds of milk is not, of course, followed in the treatment of the young cow, as she has to produce bone and flesh as well as milk. After the first freshening the heifer is fed on a bran mash, and if the weather is cold all chill is taken from her drink. After ten days her feed is increased gradually and as soon as possible she is fed well and milked hard. She is developed all that is possible during the first year and she is milked for the full twelve months during the first period.

The calves are allowed to get one good fill of first milk and are then taken from their mothers. They are fed whole milk for a month, and then gradually put on a mixture of separator milk and a gruel made by soaking oil cake in cold water for some hours. This gruel is warmed before being given. The calves are fed three times daily. The bull calves are sold at prices ranging from $50 to $500. The surplus heifers are sold when fit for service. The heifers are bred when two years old.

The soil of the McRae farm is for the most part a sandy loam, and under a judicious rotation has been held at full strength. Last year the farm produced 1,200 bushels of potatoes, 8,000 bushels of roots, 200 bushels [illegible] bushels of barley, 112 tons of corn, 64 bushels of wheat, 36 tons of clover and 40 tons of timothy. In addition eleven acres were utilized for the growing of oats, peas and vetches, corn and white turnips, which were cut and fed in a green state. The soiling crops are cut from May 1st to July 1st.

For some time a five-year rotation was followed, but finally it was decided that this system was too slow for high-priced land. Now a four-year rotation is practised. First year, corn and roots; second year, grain; third year, clover; fourth year, timothy and pasture. Pasture land is summer fallowed for roots, and the corn is grown on sod that has been manured early in the spring, and the grass plowed under about the first of June. From twelve to sixteen tons of stable manure per acre are applied to the corn land. Potato land is treated to from eight to twelve tons, supplemented by 250 pounds of superphosphate and 250 pounds of sulphate of potash, and occasionally fifty pounds of nitrate of soda. The area devoted to roots is given from sixteen to twenty tons of stable manure and about 450 pounds superphosphate per acre. In normal times the superphosphate costs the firm $22 and the sulphate $26.

Messrs. McRae believe that fresh air, light and warmth and comfort are essential to animal health. They also hold that the extent to which these requisites are supplied will largely determine the measure of success attained by any dairyman. Their cows are well stabled with plenty of light and ventilation. The stalls are made thoroughly comfortable for the animals. A large quantity of straw is bought every year for bedding. A covered manure shed stands beside the stable, but most of the manure is hauled direct to the fields and placed in lots, low heaps, which are kept well tramped down. Two large silos stand beside the barn and are filled to overflowing every autumn.

Thirty Berkshire and Tamworth hogs are marketed yearly at an average weight of 175 pounds. The pork was sold last year at eleven and one-half [illegible] the pound. The hogs are fed all they can consume of roots, [illegible] grains and skim-milk.

"I believe in winter dairying," said the head of this enterprising firm. "Our cows, as a rule, freshen in the fall, from September to December. As a result of this we are able to devote more of our time to their care. We also obtain higher prices for our milk [illegible] and we find that we get actually more pounds of milk from fall freshening than from spring freshening. Moreover, fall calves are very much more easily raised than spring calves. It must be remembered that the heat, dry pastures and the fly pests of July and August cut down production, and in our experience offset the low cost of production when the succulent grasses of June are available. It is difficult and expensive to handle milk during the hot summer weather, not to mention the extra trouble involved in the constant effort to keep all dairy utensils clean and sweet. It seems to me the advantage of winter dairying is so apparent that arguments in its favor ought to be unnecessary. If it were more generally adopted our province would be in a position to produce more and superior milk from a higher grade of dairy cows. I for one am firmly of the opinion that dairying is and shall be the mainstay and salvation of the farms of this island."

A PUZZLING CASE

"Major Granby, let us sit on this bench. There! give me your hand. Now, though I am blind, I can tell if you are speaking the truth. Begin."

"About what, Miss Maxwell?"

"Tell me about this last case. This murder. Who is murdered?"

"Marietta Mazzucata."

She tore her hand from my grasp, and covered her face with a cry of anguish. For a few moments she continued thus, then motioned to me to continue.

"Shall I go on, Miss Maxwell?"

"Go on."

"Mazzucata, as you know, is a singer, and was engaged to be married to my friend, Sir Gilbert Tresinger. On the sixth of May, Mazzucata arrived in London. On the twelfth she received the token of Black Carnation, warning her that she was to die. On the sixteenth she was killed on the stage of Covent Garden Opera House by means of a dynamite cartridge concealed in a bouquet of white flowers with a Black Carnation in the centre."

Miss Maxwell sat as though turned into stone, then suddenly snatching her hands away from her face, broke into a hysterical laugh.

"Oh! It is horrible—horrible!"

"It is horrible," I asserted, gravely, "both for Mazzucata and Gilbert."

"What, the lover? Is he dead also?"

"No, but he is at present in prison on suspicion of causing the death of Mazzucata."

She arose to her feet with a cry of horror.

"An innocent man—an innocent man!"

"I know he is innocent but how do you know?"

"I cannot tell, I cannot tell. Oh! great heavens, how terrible."

Her agitation was truly pitiable, and many a man would have called for assistance, but I am too well used to women to be unprepared for such hysterical exhibitions, and promptly produced a bottle of smelling salts, which I always carry in case of emergencies. Thrusting this into her hands, I gave her time to recover herself which, with the assistance of the salts, she did speedily.

"Major Granby," she said at length, in a voice very much exhausted by emotion, "I am glad you told me all as you have done. I was completely ignorant of this matter, and am surprised that my father did not tell me about it."

"He perhaps wished to spare you pain."

Miss Maxwell's lip curled.

"I don't think so," she answered, quickly. "Oh! no, no, major, I understand my father very well. He has no love for me. It is his flowers he cares for, and particularly for that black carnation."

"Which, by the way, seems to be very much mixed up in this case."

"Yes, I cannot understand it."

"Do you think Signor Ivan took the flower your father speaks of as being lost?"

"I do not know."

"Do you think Mr. Dallas took it?"

"I cannot know."

"Then if neither of them stole it, who did?"

"Why do you wish to know?"

"Because, Miss Maxwell," I replied, solemnly, "the person who took that had killed Mazzucata."

"Impossible!"

"I tell you it is so. Now the person who stole that flower must have been down here in this house. Was she [illegible] down here besides Signor Ivan and Mr. Dallas?"

"No one that I know of."

"Was there a woman——"

"I am certain there was none. I should have known. Why do you ask?"

"Because I suspect Mazzucata was murdered by her maid, Bina Cellnski."

Miss Maxwell rolled her handkerchief up into a hard knot.

"Why should Bina kill her mistress?" she asked [illegible]

"I don't know [illegible] suspect she did."

The blind girl [illegible]

"Miss Maxwell," I [illegible] in a pleading tone, "my friend is in prison on a charge of murder. My friend is innocent of this charge and you know it."

"I?"

"Yes, you know more about this affair than you choose to tell."

"How can that be?" she replied composedly; "a poor blind girl, who sees nothing—who knows nothing. You are talking at random, Major Granby."

"I am not talking at random, Miss Maxwell; I am convinced you can tell me something if you choose. You are the double of Mazzucata—when you hear her name you are much agitated—when you hear of her death you are thunderstruck. You say Mr. Dallas and Signor Ivan have been here; well, these two gentlemen were connected with the murdered woman. The black carnation, which you assert has never been out of this greenhouse, is involved in the case—it is the key to the whole mystery. The key of the mystery is here, and in this greenhouse is to be solved the problem as to who killed Mazzucata, and you know it."

During my speech she had risen to her feet and was standing pale and trembling before me. She was ill, she was blind, she was a woman, and I felt like a brute in thus speaking to her, but Gilbert's life was at stake, and I felt that she could save it if she chose to speak. For some time she kept silent, but at length she spoke.

"Major Granby, I do not know who killed Mazzucata. I cannot tell how the black carnation was stolen."

"You deny everything?"

"I have nothing to deny."

"Why are you so like Mazzucata in appearance?"

She glided towards the door like a ghost, as if she would escape without replying to my question, but I followed her quickly.

"Who are you—Miss Maxwell?"

"You have said it. I am Miss Maxwell."

"But why are you so like Mazzucata?"

"Major Granby," she said, turning round, "I can tell you nothing, but if you wish to know you can learn from Signor Ivan."

"Signor Ivan. What does he know?"

"He knows everything."

I put out my hand, involuntarily, to detain her, but she was gone, and I remained alone, confused with astonishment.

"Signor Ivan," I said, considerately, "Can it be—oh, impossible!"

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

It cannot be Bina Cellnski who killed her mistress, though, I confess, appearances are very much against her. No, I believe she is innocent, and I am firmly convinced that Signor Ivan is the real assassin, for the following reasons.

Gilbert told me that Signor Ivan was in love with Mazzucata.

He is a Russian, and consequently passionate, so would be jealous.

Mazzucata was killed by a dynamite cartridge, which is a peculiarly Russian idea, savoring of Nihilism.

Signor Ivan picked up the fatal bouquet and presented it to Mazzucata.

Maxwell says that Signor Ivan stole the Black Carnation.

The black carnation was placed in the fatal bouquet; so I verily believe that Signor Ivan killed the singer out of jealousy.

CHAPTER X.

"A most remarkable story," said Tancred, stretching out his long legs. "A most remarkable story."

We were talking together in his Temple chambers, for, on returning to Town from Lippleton, I had driven straight there from the station, without a thought of going to my rooms before I had told Tancred all the events of that day. After Miss Maxwell's astonishing communication regarding Signor Ivan, I had left the house, but first, in order to give some reasonable pretext for my visit, ordered some plants. This procedure, however, did not deceive old Maxwell, as I could see by the expression of his face when I said "Goodbye." However he evidently did not think it necessary to make any remark concerning his strange behavior. He did not even question me as to the result of my interview with his daughter; but I have no doubt, as soon as I left the house, he obtained all necessary information from her by his usual process of bullying. That he suspected Ivan I saw plainly; but he vouchsafed no opinion on the matter, so, as I had found out all I could from Miss Maxwell, I took my leave. Fortunately I was able to catch a train just as I arrived at the Lippleton station, and speedily found myself steaming towards London, with my mind full of all kinds of ideas.

My visit, instead of doing anything towards clearing up the mystery, only deepened it, and now that a new element was introduced in the person of Signor Ivan, I foresaw endless complications in store for me. I could not [illegible] admiring the foresight of Tancred regarding the involvement of Ivan in the affair, and, as before mentioned, on my arrival in Town, drove straight to his Temple chambers to make my report and hear what he had to say on the subject.

I flatter myself that I told the story in a sufficiently dramatic style, for Tancred could hardly keep still during the recital; and it was at the end of the narrative that he stretched himself out in his chair, with the commonplace observation, "A most remarkable story."

"You've said that twice," I said, with some impatience; for I certainly deserved congratulations, which I did not obtain from this dry stick of a lawyer.

"Well," he replied, coolly, lighting his pipe, "and I'll say it again, seeing there's luck in odd numbers. It's a most remarkable story. Have a cigar, major?"

"No, thank you, Tancred, I don't smoke."

"You ought to, then, especially at the present crisis. Your nerves are all jumping about, while I am as cool as a cucumber. Tobacco soothes the nervous system, my dear major."

"Are you not astonished?"

"Yes, and no."

"I don't understand."

"I am not astonished at your finding out about the visit of Signor Ivan, for, if you recollect, I prophesied that same. But as to this duplicate likeness of Mazzucata, yes, I am very much astonished at Miss Maxwell."

"Well, and what do you think?"

"I can't tell you until I arrange my ideas in due order. When you have a ball of tangled string, you first find the beginning and unravel it slowly and judiciously. Good, let us find our beginning of it, and we will unravel Miss Maxwell's connection with Ivan—Ivan's connection with Mazzucata, and her connection with Maxwell. It's all in a circle, you see."

"What do you mean? Surely you don't think——"

"Gently, major, gently. We must begin at the beginning. First, we will take Signor Ivan. Now, you remember I was suspicious about our Russian friend, seeing he picked out that bouquet for presentation to Mazzucata, from among a mass of others. I knew you would hear something about him at Lippleton, so, to meet you half way and come to some conclusion regarding the guilt or innocence of this man, I made some inquiries."

"You couldn't find out much in twelve hours."

"Ah! I did not tell you I employed Melchizedek."

"One of the ten lost tribes?"

"No, one or two that remained at home," retorted Tancred, dryly. "Well, Melchizedek is a wonder. He can find out anything, and he has found out a few episodes of Ivan's past life to which I wish to call your attention."

"Is he a detective?"

"Who, Signor Ivan?" asked the lawyer, provokingly.

"No, confound it. Mel—what's his name?"

"Melchizedek. Yes, he has a private inquiry office, and finds out all sorts of things people don't wish known."

"What a horrible profession."

"A very paying one, at all events, and Melchizedek charges pretty highly, I can tell you."

"He wouldn't be a Jew if he didn't."

"Probably not. However, he gives full value for the money. Now, my dear major, listen to this, and admire the dexterity with which our Jewish friend in twelve hours has found out what we wish to know."

He took a sheet of foolscap covered with writing from his desk, and began to read out a series of notes made by Melchizedek, commenting thereon when explanations were required.

"Ivan Ivanvitch, born at Moscow in 1858, natural son of a nobleman and peasant girl. Went to Milan in 1876 to study for the lyric stage—made his debut in 1881 as Raoul in Les Huguenots—sang with great success in all the principal European opera houses—has been in England for the [illegible] season—has sang frequently with Mazzucata."

"Well," said I, interrupting this [illegible] statement, "all this is very interesting from a chronological point of view, but what has it to do with the case?"

"Wait a minute," replied Tancred, in nowise ruffled by my interruption. "You see by the foregoing, that being a lyric artist, Ivan has been more or less connected with Mazzucata."

"And the result is love."

"Precisely. Your intelligence is wonderful, major. Yes, he was deeply in love with Mazzucata, but she would have nothing to do with him. Like our friend Dallas, he said that he would rather see her dead than married to anyone but himself."

"Oh, did he? What a dog in the manger there is about these young men. Because they couldn't get the singer for themselves, they wouldn't let anyone else marry her."

"Man is the most selfish of all animals," said Tancred, sententiously; "but to proceed—Ivan, besides being a lover, was also a patriot."

"You use the past tense. Is he not a patriot now?"

"Yes, of course he is, but I am reading from Melchizedek's notes," retorted the lawyer, impatiently. "We'll never get on if you interrupt, major."

"I beg your pardon. Proceed."

"Ivan," resumed Tancred, bending his brows over the Jew's scratchy handwriting, "is a patriot, and has been mixed up more or less with Nihilism."

"I see," cried I, in a state of great excitement, "and he induced Mazzucata to join a secret society, who killed her through Ivan because she revealed the secrets."

"Nothing of the sort," said Tancred, in despair, laying down the manuscript. "Nothing of the sort."

No one can say I am not a veracious writer, for I have put down everything connected with this case in detail, even to the sacrifice of my own vanity. I considered my theory of a secret society to be excellent, and was not at all pleased with the crushing way in which Tancred pooh-poohed my idea. But these lawyers have no imagination, and confine themselves entirely to fact, which, for my part, I consider very dry reading without the aid of fancy. My suggestion was at least feasible, and Tancred need not have been so severe on my deduction. Nevertheless, he was severe, and such severity I set down in due form, though I am much averse to appearing in so humiliating a position before the public. Still the truth is the truth, and I strictly adhere to it throughout this history, so that everyone may see what indignities I suffered in my efforts to discover the assassin of Mazzucata.

"My dear major," said Tancred, after a pause, during which he glared at me in the most aggressive fashion, "don't interrupt me again, or you will not be able to understand the connection, at least with the case."

"Well, go on," I replied, philosophically, "I won't say a word, but I reserve my right to criticise at the end of the performance."

I could not help making this ironical remark in the hope that Tancred would feel ashamed of his conduct, but he was not at all ashamed—on the contrary he smiled, and resumed his reading.

"Ivan has been involved in several Nihilistic plots, the last of which nearly cost him his liberty. For the sake of his great genius as a lyric artist, however, the Czar contented himself with banishing him from Russia. Abroad, Ivan has still carried on his plots against the Romanoff dynasty, and is particularly interested in infernal machines."

"Oh!" I cried, half rising, but remembering my promise I fell back in my chair, while Tancred read on hurriedly, so as to give me no further chance of interrupting him.

"There is a man in London who makes these dynamite bombs with clock work, timed to explode at a certain moment, and Ivan is frequently in his company. This man, Kutsoff, by name, lives near Soho square, and has frequently been seen in conference with Ivan."

Here Tancred paused, and deliberately folding up the manuscript, put it away, a proceeding which somewhat surprised me, as I could not think the notes of Melchizedek had come to such an abrupt termination.

"Well, Tancred," I said, after a pause, seeing he kept silence, "is that all?"

"All!" he repeated in surprise. "Isn't it enough? It shows us that Ivan was in love with Mazzucata, and mad with jealousy. That he was, and is, the intimate friend of a maker of infernal machines."

"Afterwards?"

"Afterwards, my dear major. Can't you put two and two together? According to your story, as constructed out of your interview with Maxwell, this Russian called down at Lippleton, and stole from thence a black carnation. According to my story, he is well acquainted with this Kutsoff, who is an expert in dynamite cartridge manufacture. What is easier for him than to make, with the assistance of his friend, the fatal bouquet, and have it thrown at Mazzucata on the stage? His quick eye picks out the special bunch of flowers by means of the black carnation. He knows the cartridge is timed to explode at a certain moment. He gives the bouquet to Mazzucata, and then—well, you know the rest."

"Then you think he committed the crime?"

"Well, at present I think so."

"Why at present?"

OYSTER RECIPES

OYSTER TODDLE.

Oyster toddle is a kind of chowder. Chop a quarter of a pound of fat salt pork and cook slowly until well dried out. Add two cupfuls of sliced raw potatoes, cover and cook in the fat until very tender. Pour in two cupfuls of hot milk and cook five minutes. Thicken with one teaspoonful of flour worked into one teaspoonful of butter. Add three cupfuls washed oysters, salt and pepper to taste; remove from fire as soon as oysters ruffle. Serve hot with crackers.

SURPRISE OYSTERS.

Cook four medium size potatoes until done, mash and season with salt, pepper, butter and a little parsley. Scald a dozen oysters in their liquor, then drain. Take up enough potato when rolled to be about the size of an egg, make cavity in one end, insert oysters, fill in cavity, dip in beaten egg, roll in cracker crumbs, and fry in deep fat until a golden brown. Serve while hot. This is toothsome and inexpensive.

OYSTER PADDIES.

To one pint of mashed potatoes, add one beaten egg and a little minced onion, form into cakes, split cakes with sharp knife, lay two or three oysters on lower part, and replace top. Bake in moderately hot oven until paddies are brown, garnish with parsley.

Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in every home where there are small children. They regulate the bowels and stomach and never fail to cure the minor ills of little ones. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—The spring retail trade continues to broaden out. Some dry-goods wholesalers report that business shows signs of tapering off, but add that payments due April 4th were fairly well met. The leather trade is firmer. The hide market is also slightly stronger. Groceries are moderately active with the sugar market very strong at advances that total 15 cents per cwt. within the last eight days. Canned goods are firm and stocks are becoming depleted, while general advances have been made on teas.

Montreal—In wholesale circles the movement is described as fair, and in some quarters there is a feeling that the pinnacle of the high price movement has been reached. In grocery lines there is a fair movement, with marked strength in the sugar market, and with prices higher than have ever been known in the history of the trade. The leather trade is rather slow, but hides are firm. City collections are fair.

Ottawa—Retail trade in dry goods and men's and women's wear was good at Easter and very satisfactory reports were given out by retailers. Collections are fair to good.

Calgary—Business prospects in the Prairie Provinces are bright. Both wholesale and retail lines have experienced a good trade, and reports from Edmonton, Regina, Moosejaw and Medicine Hat merely serve to confirm local estimates.

London—Trade in western Ontario is retarded by the condition of the country roads. This has been reflected in a curtailment of the movement of travellers who are on the road with spring samples, and also in the matter of collections, which, however, are still reported as fair. Retail trade reports for the Easter season indicate that a very satisfactory business was done, and wholesalers feel that trade will hold up well during the coming month.

Mrs. P. J. Brown Dies in Toronto

This community was greatly shocked to hear of the death of Mrs. P. J. Brown of Tiverton.

A few weeks ago she went to visit her daughter in Ottawa, and on her return journey was taken ill in Toronto, and where she succumbed, after a brief illness, of nephritis.

The news is received with deep regret by all. Mr. Brown is known by everybody in the province, and so was Mrs. Brown, for their zeal and energy in the work of the Famers' Institute, Mrs. Brown being especially prominent in the women's department. The funeral was on Monday, and was largely attended.

Men Get Boudoir Caps

Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Elliott did a splendid act when they gave their home over to the White School Patriotic Society for a pancake and maple syrup supper Wednesday. There was a good crowd, everybody had a fine time, and the Patriotic society were richer by $33.

The rooms were prettily decorated, and the tables were tastily arranged with red and green, and were attended by pretty young ladies in white middy suits with red ties. They were kept busy, too, serving the delicious syrup and pancakes. A program was also given, taken part in by the Burgoyne orchestra, B. Collard, M. Black, Miss Green, Miss Tranter, Miss Eva Cook, C. H. Green, the Pierson family, Ross Pierson, Gus Shanks, Irwin Grieve, Dick Miller.

The sum of $3.25 was realized from a boudoir cap donated by Miss Chappell, this was drawn for and won by Alex Strachan, who at once put it up for sale, for what would Alex do with a fancy thing like that. On sale it was bought by John Shanks. Now, the editor is curious to know just what John will do with that cap.

Altogether a very fine time was enjoyed, and the society are grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Elliott for offering their home.

The young people of Jubey's school are meeting with great success in their play "The Village Doctor", which they are giving for Red Cross. At Kincardine last week the house was sold out entirely, and the players are producing the play again on Friday the 27th. This work on the part of Miss Young the teacher and her friends, will realize nearly $600 for Red Cross.

Autos were raising the dust, Sunday. A sure sign that the ground is about fit for sowing. Field work has already commenced and the much advised farmer, who all along had an idea that he knew his own business best, will just give his shoulders a shake and for the next four weeks keep his eyes on the land and do something. The wonderful flourish of expensive ads. in the dailies and weeklies are likely for the most part, to pass by unheeded, save as a source of amusement and revealed ignorance. Even "Peter McArthur" seems to have got somewhat muddled in regard to the assistance really acceptable and needful at the present season. Wait till harvest and see. That's when triple assistance will be needed.

NOTICE

After this week the law office of Mr. W. Burgess, will be closed except on Saturdays, until further notice.

President Chambers of the North Riding Liberal Association, has issued a call to all Liberals to meet in Tara on Friday May 18, at 2 p. m. for general business election of officers and the nomination of a candidate to contest the riding in Liberal interests.

What Say You?

Suggestions have been made by some of the business men that a meeting should be held at once to make plans whereby all the vacant lots could be cultivated, and made to produce this year.

The suggestion is a good one. Action should be prompt. Two weeks are left yet to plow and seed down if a plan were arranged.

Rule And Regulations of The Standing Field Crop Competitions, 1917

1. NATURE OF COMPETITION—Societies can enter two crops, to be selected by the Board of Directors. Each field entered must consist of not less than five acres nor more than twenty, in one block; but for beans, potatoes, mangels, turnips, clover or alfalfa, the minimum plot must be not less than one acre. In Northern Ontario, the minimum for grain will be three acres, and for roots one-half acre.

If a field contains more than five acres and the competitor wishes to reduce it to the minimum acreage allowed, it will be necessary for him to either cut a swath between the part to be judged and the balance of the field, or set a row of stakes not less than four feet high for a division line. Unless this is done the judge will be required to score the whole field.

Selection must be made from the following crops, viz., spring or fall wheat, white oats, barley, rye, flint corn, dent corn, peas, alsike clover, alfalfa, red clover, potatoes, mangels, turnips, beans, or other staple crop grown for seed in Ontario.

2. COMPETITORS—Competition will be limited to those who are paid up members of an Agricultural Society for the current year, and fields entered must not be more than fifteen miles from its headquarters. Competitors will be allowed to make entry in one Society only, for one or two varieties of crop, and only one entry can be made by each competitor in each kind of crop. A father and son residing on the same farm cannot make separate entries.

3. SOCIETY'S ENTRY—Societies desiring to enter this competition must notify me not later than the first day of May, except for corn, the latest date for making entry in which will be May 15th. Not less than ten bona fide entries for each crop in any Society will be accepted.

4. INDIVIDUAL ENTRIES—Individual entries must be forwarded by the Secretary of each Society to me, on or before May 25th, 1917, except entries for corn which can be sent in up to June 15th.

5. A society may charge an entry fee of not more than one dollar for each crop entered by competitor, but this is optional with the Directors.

6. The Government Grant to a Society will be $50 for each crop, making a total grant of $100 if two crops are entered. This amount must be supplemented by the Society to the extent of $25 for each competition. In the event of one crop being entered the total amount of prize money offered will be $75; for two crops the prizes to be awarded $150.

In the event of prizes being offered at the exhibition of a Society which has entered the crop competition, the prize winners should exhibit at such local fair not less than one bushel of grain and a sheaf; said sheaf to be not less than 8 inches in diameter at [illegible]. The condition upon which prize winners are to exhibit is that not less than $3, $2 and $1 be given as first, second and third prizes for such exhibits of grain and sheaves.

The amount contributed by the Society of $25 for each crop can be counted in as expenditure for agricultural purposes in the yearly financial statement on which the regular Annual Grant is based. If an entry fee is charged for each crop the net amount paid by a Society would be very small when the large financial benefits received by the members who take part in these competitions are considered.

7. Seven prizes must be offered as follows for each crop: First, $20; Second, $15; Third, $12; Fourth, $10; Fifth, $8; Sixth, $6; Seventh, $4. These must be paid in full to the winners without any deduction.

Quite frequently The Times has been annoyed with people making reports to it of happenings which have had no foundation in fact. Only constant watchfulness on the part of the editor and staff has saved the publication of several items which would give annoyance to the people concerned. There is too much taking common gossip for granted. "I think so" is usually a long way from the facts. We should mention that these items are usually concerned with town affairs, where apparently people have plenty of time. It is a notable thing that very seldom have we mistakes in the budgets of news from our country reporters.

Corp. Roy Thomson Writes

In a letter home last week Corp. Roy Thomson tells his mother how he was wounded. He says:

"The mail was held up for some time and we did not get any, but we are receiving it now. I suppose by the time you get this you will know that I was wounded. I had rather a rough time of it for awhile but now my temperature is back to normal and I am feeling all right. All my wounds were clean ones and it will just take time and treatment to heal them up. I underwent an operation to have the pieces of shrapnel removed. At present I am at a Canadian base hospital in France but expect to go to England soon.

"I was over the trench with five others in a raid on the German trench, when a bomb lit right in front of me. All the others as well as myself, were hit, and one man was killed.

"Well as I soon as get settled I will write again and let you know my address. There is no need though, to worry about me."

Roy.

Doing Their Share

Under supervision of Agent Thomas Stout the Indians are being urged to produce greater crops this year, and he has secured a number of them to enter the field crop competition.

On Monday he had several men in Port Elgin where they secured 120 bus. of O. A. C. 72 seed oats from Mrs. John Forrester.

Mr. Stout has also arranged for the school garden competition both at French Bay and Chippewa schools.

If you are a subscriber to The Times and change your address, don't fail to notify us.

Pte. W. Cairns Writes From France

Pte. W. Cairns, son of Adam Cairns, of Turner's, in a letter home, tells of his preparation for the front line, where he, by this time is likely doing his bit. He was in the hospital for three weeks, and left it on March the 9th. He says:

"We finally reached our battalion on March the 10th, after having been taken from place to place by the staff, who, of course knew where our battalion was situated. We travelled for a few hours each day by train and spent the night at rest camps. They gave us papers directing us to a certain place, and on arriving there we would get directions and papers for some other point, and so on until we joined our battalion.

"By producing these papers we were served with rations. Our battalion was divided into four companies and each company was sent to a battalion, where they were initiated into the front line, and where they get their training in real action. Of course my address remains unchanged, as we are merely attached to these battalions for a few weeks to get experience.

"We have church services to morrow, and so I expect we shall soon be going up 'the line'. We have not received much mail lately, the transports being too busy to deliver it, but it will get along one of these days. The mud is very bad here just now. You haven't any idea of the kind of mud it is here, our barnyard never could hold a candle to it any time of the year. We are in a billet hut now, and it's a pretty good place. On either side of the hut are three tiers of bunks, with chicken wire for the bottom of the bunk. "Teddy" and I sleep together in a double bunk, and we are quite comfortable. We don't do any squad drill, for which I am truly thankful, in fact we have some leisure time. I am anxiously looking for letters from home, and will welcome any boxes. A fellow cannot buy bread in France now as the people are rationed there, too. We draw bread, butter, cheese, jam, each night, while our meat, tea and stew are cooked for us. Best regards to all the folk."

PTE. W. CAIRNS

(A later letter informed his parents that Pte. Cairns is now in the trenches and he was no doubt in Vimy Ridge fighting.—Editor.)

MISSING LINE CONTEST CLOSES

Over 70 contestants are in the Missing Line competition run by The Times the past three weeks. Yesterday it closed, and this morning the letters were mailed to the judges at Toronto, who will decide the winners, and announcement will likely be made next week.

All classes of Times readers have entered the contest, and from their letters they have enjoyed both the Limerick and Missing Line Contests.

For the present there will be no further contests, but The Times would like suggestions from its readers as to other contests which might be run, and which would create interest.

The lines sent in since last issue are:

And soon our doctors relieved her.
And now she's so fat you can't squeeze her.
Now there goes the rheumatics, measles and fever.
And she knew that it wouldn't deceive her.
And the breeze off Lake Huron relieved her.
Twas Port Elgin did the trick and cured old lady Cleaver.
Now she's well, and goes skating at Ebenezer.
And she found all the ailments did leave her.
As she thought the lake air could relieve her.
And Port's fresh air with doctor's care did relieve her.
And Lake Huron's breezes relieved her.
Now she tries to flirt with the weaver.
Since then Mother Earth has received her.
And the breeze from the lake did relieve her.
And now she can trounce a coal-heaver.
And now weighing 200 lbs grieves her.
Now she's trapping weasels and beaver.
And suddenly her troubles did leave her
She didn't know the ads. would deceive her
For local option was the feature that pleased her
Where the high cost of living won't peeve her
Now the Sand-hill awaits to receive her.
And each ailment did instantly leave her
Now she will surely stay here forever.
For she thought our climate would heal her
For she thought its good sanitation and water would cure her.
And our time renowned physicans relieved her.
And rheumatics, measels and fever did leave her.
And now she's so big you can't squeeze her.
And now she has neither measles nor fever.
And now she is both healthy and clever.
As there is no place better for recreation and sport.
Now I'll bet her diseases will leave her.
And she thinks it's the finest place ever.
In the hope these diseases would leave her.
Said she—"Now I'm cured"—"I believe her".
Cured? Sure! Ain't the Port some achiever?
Got cured, then discoved Ebenezer.
Since cured, calls the "Port health retriever."

Cincinnati man tells how to shrivel up corns or calluses so they lift off with fingers.

Ouch ! ? ! ? ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender, aching corn or hardened callus stops soreness at once, and soon the corn or callus dries up and lifts right off without pain.

He says freezone dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any drug store, but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels. If your druggist doesn't have freezone tell him to order a small bottle for you.

EARTH-EATERS.

They Flourish in Various Climes of the World.

At Ochrida, in Macedonia, and in some villages of Sardinia, says Literary Digest, a fine white earth forms an essential part of the local bread and is brought to market together with other articles of food. Other countries in Europe where earth is eaten are Trebisco, in upper Italy, Styria, in Austria, and certain parts of Germany around the famous Kyffhauser, and in the heath of Luneburg. Here the workingmen butter their bread with a fine clay nicknamed by them "stone butter." Finally, in the northernmost parts of Sweden, and on the Peninsula of Kola, in the government of Archangel, a fine clay, cleaned of mud and pulverized, is mixed with flour to make the bread tasty.

But the real home of earth eating is Asia. The famous earth of Nishapur, Persia, is used either raw or roasted, and is often prepared with spices and perfumes. According to the traveller Sailer, the Eskimos are great consumers of various kinds of earth.

Passing to India, we are told by Dr. Rabitsch that in the markets of Calcutta burned clay is offered for sale in the shape of small disks. The women are its principal consumers. Women and children in Siam consider steatite a delicious dainty. The women of the coast towns of Java swallow their ampo in the form of small tablets or tubes, mainly with the purpose of preserving their slimness. Upon the island of Timor, of the Malay Archipelago, burned clay is consumed with solemn religious rites.

The earth-eating centres of Africa are Nubia and certain parts of the western coast. The negroes of Guinea, for instance, have become so fond of their couac that no means of persuasion is strong enough to prevent their overeating. On the shores of certain rivers in Senegambia the natives use a white, soapy earth, as soft as butter, to replace fat in the preparation of their food.

The inhabitants of New Guinea consume great quantities of a greenish soap stone, while the natives of New Caledonia eat a ferruginous clay either fresh or preserved in the form of dried, perforated cakes for their dessert.

A classical land for earth-eating, according to our authority, is South America, where we meet with it under its most various forms, from the Rio Grande del Norte down to Parana and Pilcomayo. In many parts of Mexico earth is eaten passionately, not only by children and women, but by grown men, and in the markets of Guadalajara, San Luis, Puebla and other towns, pastils of white burned clay are offered as dainties. The inhabitants of Guatemala use instead of powdered sugar a white and yellowish earth, probably an efflorescence of volcanic ashes. On the western coast of our continent we find earth-eating populations from Columbia to Bolivia.

Evidently, earth-eating is not limited to any particular altitude, although more prevalent in the tropics. Women are its principal adepts. One authority does not agree with the famous ethnologist, Dr. F. von Hellwald, in finding a close relationship between malaria and earth-eating.

The ultimate reasons for this dietetic curiosity are manifold. Necessity, the agreeable salty taste, and perversion of appetite, generally met with in people suffering from chlorosis and hysteria. Sometimes, however, it is the medicinal instinct, the craving for a cure for certain dainty tropical sicknesses, which drives man to indulge in this strange dainty. This explains the use of earth by some of the greatest physicians of antiquity. Curiously enough, earth-eating, if not abused, is not detrimental to health. But with certain people—above all, children and young girls—the craving is often so strong that harsh preventive measures, such as iron masks or the tying of hands, must be used.

I fell from a building and received what the doctor called a very bad sprained ankle, and told me I must not walk on it for three weeks. I got MINARD'S LINIMENT and in six days I was out to work again. I think it is the best Liniment made.

Investment and Speculation.

When any one is buying a coat or a fishing rod or a rose tree or laying down a cellar or setting up a library, either he knows what he wants, where to get it and what to pay for it or else he takes earnest counsel with his friends and with the most trustworthy professional advisers that he can find and uses all the wits that he and others can bring to bear on the subject in order to make sure that his purchase is prudently conducted. He attends sales, rummages in shops and discusses the matter in his club until he and it are voted a nuisance. If only half as much time and trouble were devoted to the careful selection of investments there would be fewer bad companies, unscrupulous promoters and ornamental directors, the world would be very much richer, and its riches would show less tendency to gravitate into questionable hands. —Cornhill Magazine.

It gives me much pleasure in recommending the Tablets to other mothers." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Jest.

"Land of the free!" Grim humor in the name.
Our ships lie idle at our freight-choked quays,
The patriot's head is bowed in bitter shame,
While Germany, the mistress of the seas,
Issues her mandates cravenly obeyed.
Our ports are blocked, the highways of the sea
Denied to us; yet, cringing and afraid,
We meekly bear through insult. Are we free?
We lick the hand that strikes us in the face,
Insults we meet with vain and empty words,
Unworthy scions of a once proud race,
The freedom purchased by our sires' swords
Its naught to us. An insult to our flag
Is nothing. Trade is good. Our hearts increase.
The world may sneer. Our enemies may drag
Our honor in the dust. We call it peace
When, injured, robbed of every sacred right
Bought by our fathers' blood, like frightened sheep,
We skulk and cringe and bleat, "too proud to fight!"
The butchers of our children on the deep.

"Home of the brave!" Who dares to sing that song?
Parents and children slaughtered on the sea.
Cry out to us in vain to right the wrong
And stay the hand of murderous Germany,
While "statesmen" save the mark!—within the halls
Where rang of old the voice of liberty,
With coward cries disgrace those sacred walls—
Give aid and comfort to the enemy.
No. While our banner droops its folds in shame,
A poor despised, defined, insulted thing,
Let none presume to mention Freedom's name,
Or sing the songs that heroes used to sing.

SWISS UNEMPLOYED.

Beggars, Loafers and Dependents Not Tolerated.

Switzerland regards the problem of the unemployed poor as an economic question, believing that a man who is not employed, if left to himself, is apt to become unemployable. Such men will sooner or later become a subject of charity, and therefore a burden upon the community, which is obliged to support not only the individual, but also those dependent upon him. Switzerland deems it, consequently, in her own interests to lend her assistance to the unfortunate unemployed to get work.

While the authorities help persons who are making honest efforts to find employment, they also regard it their duty to punish the shirker of work, and to see to it that he earns his living by his own efforts. Loafers are not tolerated in the Alpine republic, and begging is prohibited by law. There is no resorting to charitable institutions, no wandering about the country extorting alms from honest people, while pretending to be in search of employment.

If an able-bodied man refuses to work, the state will promptly find something for him, and if the task does not suit him and he still persists in idling about, he is placed in the workhouse, where strict discipline is maintained, and where every inmate is obliged to labor to the full capacity of his strength, the compensation he receives being board and lodging and three to ten cents in cash per day. The length of his stay in such an institution depends upon his conduct during his forced employment. The state meanwhile even makes a profit on his labor, for most of the institutions of this character are under such efficient business management that they are sources of income instead of expense to the respective cantons.

A distinction is made between the unemployed by necessity or misfortune and those who have no work on account of lazy habits or misconduct. This latter class are treated as criminals, and as such they are assigned to a penal institution; the deserving unemployed, however, are treated with every consideration, and work is found for them in a way which is not humiliating to them.

A system of insurance against unemployment prevails in some of the Swiss cantons. By it persons contributing a certain sum per month are guaranteed employment or paid a weekly indemnity for the period during which they are out of work. Such persons, must however, be able to show that their unemployment is not their own fault. This plan of insurance is not general, nor is it very popular, as it involves many details which make it difficult for the beneficiaries to secure the payment of the benefits.

Employees of Swiss industrial institutions are required to insure themselves against the expense of medical treatment and supplies in case of illness or accident. The Society for the Protection of Domestic Servants assumes, for instance, the responsibility for the care and treatment of those enrolled upon its records.

About twenty-five years ago employment agencies were first established in the leading centres of Switzerland. Municipal interest was soon shown in these institutions and by 1900 several of the largest cities, such as Zurich, Geneva, Berne, etc., operated municipal bureaus. In March, 1910, these official institutions were united into a national organization, subsidized by the Federal government, called the Swiss bureau of Employment, with head offices at Zurich.

The undertaking of supplying the needy unemployed with work has thus practically passed into the hands of the Federal government.—New York Evening Post.

HISTORIC NAUPLIA.

First Capital of Grecian Kingdom an Impregnable Seaport.

"It is an interesting coincidence," says a war geography bulletin recently issued by the United States National Geographical Society, "that one of the most important places in Greece where King Constantine's cause has been openly supported by the populace against the Venizelists in their revolutionary movement to force a declaration of war on the side of the Entente Allies is Nauplia, the almost impregnable seaport situated at the head of the Gulf of Nauplia, in Eastern Morea (the district known in ancient times as Peloponnesus).

"The coincidence lies in the fact that Nauplia was the first capital of the modern kingdom of Greece. It was here that the first Greek President, John Capo d'Istria, a native of the island of Corfu, was assassinated, and it was here that in 1862 a military plot was hatched which resulted in the dethronement of King Otho, third of the Hellenes and father of the second son of King Christian IX, of Denmark, who became George I., King of the Hellenes and father of the present ruler.

"Nauplia is a charmingly situated town of some 6,000 inhabitants. It has a salubrious climate, and guide books, regardless of the offence which such praise may give to the rest of the nation, emphasize as one of the striking features of the municipality 'the un-Grecian cleanliness of its streets.'

"Like the neighboring city of Mycenae, Nauplia reached its greatest importance in the era of myth and legend. By the dawn of historical times it had waned in influence and population, and the historian Pausanias, writing in 150 A. D., described it as a 'deserted city.'

"It is probable that Nauplia was founded not by colonists from Argos and Mycenae, the two important adjacent cities of the plain, but by settlers who arrived by sea. The very name of the city would seem to suggest this—naupiois meaning seaman—while the lofty, fortified eminence which dominates the harbor takes its name, Palamidi, from the foreign Palamedes, a famous hero of the Trojan war and the inventor, according to the ancients, of the lighthouse, alphabetical writing, the discus, back gammon and dice.

"Throughout the period in which Athens, Sparta, Corinth and Thebes were emblazoning their names on the pages of ancient history, Nauplia's share in Peloponnesian politics was obscured by larger affairs. In the middle ages, however, the seaport once more comes to the fore, and when the crusaders took Constantinople in 1204 the Byzantine governor, Leon Sgouros, attempted to found a Greek monarchy, with his headquarters here. The effort met with failure, but the town remained in Greek hands for several years. It finally passed under the control of the Franks and was made the capital of the duchy of Argos. During this period the feudal system was established in the Morea.

"In the closing years of the fourteenth century both Argos and Nauplia were bought by the Venetians, and 150 years later the latter was given to the Turks, but retaken by the republic of St. Mark in 1686. The Turks were again in control 30 years later.

"Both the Turks and the Venetians labored to fortify the Palamidi, which was eventually held to be a veritable Gibraltar. In their uprising in 1822 the Greeks captured this stronghold, an achievement which greatly encouraged them. Five years later, by the famous victory of Admiral Codrington, in command of a United British, French and Russian fleet, over the Turkish fleet at Navarino, Nauplia was relieved at a critical moment in a siege.

"The tragic death of the first president, Capo d'Istria, by gunshot and dagger, at the portal of the Church of St. Spiridion, on Oct. 9, 1831, has been mentioned previously. With the removal of the seat of government to Athens the year following the crowning of King Otho in 1833 and the success of the military plot hatched here against this monarch twenty-nine years later, Nauplia once again disappeared as a date line for historic events until a few days ago, when the King's party made an armed demonstration against former President Venizelos' adherents.

"Nauplia is often visited by tourists not only for its own sake, but because it affords an excellent starting point for excursion to the ruins of Mycenae, which legend tells us was founded by Perseus; whose walls were built by the Lycian Cyclopes, and which was the home of Agamemnon, famous leader of the Greeks in the Trojan war. From Nauplia also it is only a short drive to Tiryns, reputed to be the birthplace of Hercules, son of Zeus and Alcmene. Heraeon, the place at which the leaders of the Greeks swore their allegiance to Agamemnon, and where Kleobis and Biton lay down to their eternal sleep after having taken the places of tardy horses to draw the chariot of their priestess mother, is equally accessible.

"Only a short distance from here, too, is the famous Hierion of Epidauros, celebrated as the seat of the cult of Aesculapius, the god of healing, who mythology says was born to Koronis and Apollo on a nearby mountain. To the temple of Hierion was attached a great hospital in which the priests were physicians and which was supported by the lavish gifts of patients who had been cured. The treasury of this hospital was looted on one occasion by the Roman dictator Sulla, who used the money to pay his soldiers.

"The harbor-castle of Nauplia, whose modern name is Bourtzi, occupies the site of the ancient Acropolis. The steep southern slope of the hill (280 feet high) is covered with a dense growth of cacti."

RAILROADS ARE MANUFACTURERS

A recent issue of The Way-Bill, published by the Traffic Club, of Chicago, contains the following concise but pointed exposition of the American transportation problem, which seems to apply equally well to Canadian railways: "Railroads are manufacturers. It is a commodity in which they specialize. It is the only one they produce. There are some who insist that theirs is a 'service' and not a commodity. Whichever you choose to call it, it is made by the railway company out of raw materials and labor. The raw materials, which, through competent management and labor, are fashioned into transportation, are roadbeds, rails, ties, cars, locomotives, machinery, general supplies and terminal facilities. For fifteen years the cost of all these raw materials, as well as of labor, has been steadily advancing, and it is still rising. For fifteen years the price at which railroads have been compelled to sell their transportation has remained practically the same. There have been increases here and there, but, generally speaking, rates have not risen much above the level of fifteen years ago. A box car fifteen years ago, cost about $500. To-day it costs, approximately, $2,000. The rate on grain carried in the box car from Chicago to New York has decreased. This illustration can be multiplied by tens of thousands. In spite of the increased cost of producing transportation, do you expect the railroads to furnish not only the same, but better quality, and more of it, at rates which have not been allowed to keep pace with business development? It can't be done."—Railway Age Gazette.

Well Known Farmer Gives His Evidence

SAYS DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HIM OF GRAVEL.

Mr. William Wood, of Hadlington, Ont., is Added to Long List of Cures by the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Hadlington, Ont., May 7 (Special)—Mr. William Wood, a well known farmer, living near here, is shouting the praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills. He claims they cured him of two of the most painful and dangerous forms of kidney trouble, bladder trouble and gravel.

"Yes, I was troubled with gravel and bladder trouble," Mr. Woods said when asked about his cure. "But since I took four boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills my troubles are gone. I also had heart flutterings and shortness of breath. There were flashes of lights and specks before my eyes and I was very nervous. All those troubles have gone, too, since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Others in this neighborhood have used Dodd's Kidney Pills and found that they were the greatest of all remedies for kidney troubles of any kind. Dodd's Kidney Pills are specialists. They cure sick kidneys and that is all they claim to cure. The reason they are given credit for curing rheumatism, lumbago, dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease is that all of these diseases are caused by sick kidneys.

FOE WASTING HIS FORCES IN ATTACKS

Germans, Evidently Fearing Crisis, Are Pouring in Their Reserves.

BUT ALL IN VAIN

Battalion After Battalion Mowed Down in Useless Counters.

(By Perry Robinson.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable.——The fighting the last 36 hours has been as fierce as anything the western front has seen. Gavrelle to the southern end of the famous trench line running north through Oppy and Guémappe until it is barred by [illegible] along Cojeul and between that stream and the River Sensee. The importance the enemy attached to both places was shown by the desperate efforts he made to retain them. It was fitting that on St. George's Day the great majority of the troops engaged should be English troops, of whom not a few wore in trench helmet or tunic the twin roses, red and white, in honor of the day.

German officer prisoners say freely they can see no choice left but to win back the ground recently lost or fall definitely behind the Hindenburg-Drocourt-Quéant or so-called Wotan line. We know that parts of the latter are nowhere nearly as strong as other positions we carried in the last 15 days.

DESPERATE COUNTER ATTACKS.

The Germans have enormously increased the number of guns on this front since the Battle of Arras began. The shelling is very heavy. Under this shelling our men had to go over ground where the enemy had every advantage and innumerable machine-gun posts cunningly disposed at each vantage point on the terrain. Enemy counter-attack after counter-attack was delivered with great weight and determination. More than once our thin line of unprotected, newly-won positions was compelled to fall back, but never failed to come on again, and after some of the bloodiest fighting the war has seen we rest in possession of the ground. The prisoners this evening totalled 2,500, but there will be more. They include 70 officers.

We won an entrance into Gavrelle within an hour or two after starting, with comparative ease, and with the same impetuosity swept nearly all the ground from Gavrelle to north of Roeux, included in this territory being the chemical works. Here occurred one of the costliest incidents of the whole operation. Two battalions of the 1,413th Regiment of Grenadiers were massing for a counter-attack when caught by our artillery. One battalion is believed to have been almost wiped out, while the other is completely shattered. Other severe counter-attacks were delivered against Gavrelle, in the course of which the enemy forced his way into the ruins only to be driven out again.

We won close to the edge of Roeux Cemetery. After our advance here also heavy counter-attacks were thrown against us by fresh troops, but we hold the ground won. The enemy is still in possession of the spot where Roeux was.

Before Monchy we also won ground in the first rush, since then bearing off counter-attack after counter-attack against it. A body of Germans, estimated at 4,000, which attempted to advance from the direction of Bois-du-Vert, directly east of Monchy, was absolutely knocked to bits by our fire.

ENEMY LOSSES ENORMOUS.

North of Lens we took Guémappe in a gallant attack in the morning. The Germans plastered the place throughout the day with heavy shells. It was also swept by an enfilade of machine guns and rifle fire. Our men were obliged to fall back in the evening, but came on again and drove out the enemy and swept them 1,20 yards beyond. The enemy threw in fresh troops later in the evening, and endeavored to counter-attack, but uselessly.

At the southern end of our attack in the open country, where there are no villages or landmarks, tremendous counter-attacks made us give ground, but we came on again, and the enemy was again driven back. At nightfall [illegible] had 1,000 prisoners, we had won little ground. This morning we [illegible] gun forward, and now, at the farthest point, we are midway between Guémappe and Cherisy. Counter-attacks on this part of the front were generally delivered from the direction of Fontaine-les-Croisilles, which is on the Hindenburg line. West of here bitter fighting raged among the defences of the Hindenburg line, almost ceaselessly, sometimes coming to hand-to-hand encounters.

It is certain the enemy is fighting harder now than at any time this year. The troops engaged are almost entirely Prussians and Bavarians.

I have not actually seen the enemy advancing in counter-attack myself, but those who are fighting described how he comes on, leading in masses over villages and woods and ascending [illegible] seemingly solid and unbroken lines as they advanced. In the whole series of attacks their losses must have been heavy indeed.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

London Cable.——The British official communication, issued at midnight, says:

"Further information received regarding Monday's battle shows that the fighting was of an exceptionally severe nature. Seven German divisions were engaged on the front from Croisilles to Gavrelle. Several points of tactical importance changed hands more than once, but eventually all these remained in our possession, except for a few buildings north of Roeux.

"Not only were frequent hostile counter-attacks shattered by our massed artillery fire, but those of the enemy who succeeded in penetrating our barrages were cut down by our rifle or machine-gun fire.

"One British corps took prisoners from no less than four German divisions. Our troops advanced along the whole front.

"To-day there has again been considerable fighting, though somewhat less fierce in nature, at several points on the battle front. Between the Sensee River and Monchy-le-Preux our progress has been continued, and our line has been advanced to within a few hundred yards of Fontaine-les-Croisilles and Cherisy.

"During the afternoon in the neighborhood of Gavrelle a hostile counter-attack by strong forces was broken up by our artillery and driven back in disorder under our fire.

"More than two thousand prisoners have passed through our collecting stations since Monday morning, and there are others yet to come."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable.——The official communication issued by the War Office Tuesday night reads:

"The day was marked chiefly by artillery actions along the whole front. We continued to shell the enemy batteries and organizations in the regions of St. Quentin, the Oise, Corbeny, Juvincourt and the Champagne. Explosions were observed in a number of batteries.

"We have brought in four German howitzers of 105 millimetres, captured during recent engagements on the plateau of the Chemin des Dames, not included in the previous inventory made public.

"Near Moronvilliers our light forces penetrated the German trenches."

SLEW WIFE AND SELF.

Terrible Double Tragedy at Brockville.

Brockville, Report.— Returning to her parents' home for the midday meal to-day, Miss Kathleen Clarke, a stenographer, went upstairs, and at the end of the stairs saw her father lying in a pool of blood, dead. Her brother soon followed her home. The father was dressed in his underwear and trousers, but wore no shoes or socks. Frantic search for the mother by the son and daughter was instituted, and the woman's body was found in the cellar of the house, cold in death. The body was fully clothed, lying in a large pool of blood. She had evidently been in a stooping position in the cellar when she was shot in the right side of the back by her husband.

Neighbors thought they heard a shot about eight o'clock this morning. Evidently that was about the time when Mr. Clarke had murdered his wife, as she had been dead some time when found. It would seem he went upstairs and later shot himself in the heart, while seated in a chair, evidently using his toe to manipulate the trigger of a 12-gauge new Victor single-barrel shot-gun, which was found near the body.

Some years ago Mr. Clarke suffered a nervous breakdown through overwork as a moulder. Recently he underwent treatment for a short period in the Eastern Hospital for the Insane here, to cure his nervous trouble.

BRITISH FLIERS IN GOOD WORK

Fifteen Hun Planes Wrecked in Arras District.

Moving Train Wrecked Much Damage.

London Cable.——During the fighting on Wednesday, in which the British made slight advances south of the Scarpe River, there was a continuation of aerial activity in which fifteen German aeroplanes came to grief, according to the official communication issued to-night, which reads: "The fine weather enabled our aeroplanes to carry out work fairly again yesterday.

"In the course of these raids we dropped bombs with good effect upon the enemy's railway junctions, aerodromes, billets and ammunition dumps. In one raid a large bomb struck the engine of a moving train, blowing the engine off the line, and wrecking the track. Hostile troops and transports also were successfully engaged with machine-gun fire.

"There was again a great amount of air fighting, in the course of which seven German machines were brought down, and eight others driven down out of control. Two German observation balloons also were destroyed. Six of our machines are missing."

HUN RETIREMENT.

Said to Be Preparing to Quit Mulhausen.

Paris Cable.—— Despatches from Switzerland announce that the German Swiss frontier is being fenced off by electrically-charged wires, similar to those of Holland-Belgian frontier from [illegible].

This was done because of the number of escapes and desertions by Germans. Prisoners of war were also escaping.

Swiss reports also state that evidence is apparent that Mulhausen may be evacuated by the Germans. Swiss military critics believe Hindenburg's need for troops may force the shortening of his line by abandoning the Altkirch-Mulhausen wedge to the Swiss frontier by taking up a new line through Colmar to the Rhine.

SHIPS LOCK IN BATTLE AND MEN FIGHT HAND-TO-HAND

Glorious Story of the Victory of Two British Boats Over Six Hun

In the Recent Dover Battle---Best Naval Traditions Upheld.

FRENCH TORPEDO BOAT SUNK.

Paris Cable.—— Dunkirk was bombarded by German destroyers early this morning. British and French patrol ships engaged the Germans, one of the French torpedo boats being sunk, according to an announcement to-night.

London Cable.—— Two British destroyers on patrol duty in the English Channel, off Dover, on the night of April 20 came upon a flotilla of six German destroyers and then ensued an encounter which will live long in the history of naval engagements. German destroyers were torpedoed and rammed; every gun aboard the combatants were working, sweeping the decks and tearing gaps in the sides of the opposing craft. There was the locking together of a British and German destroyer, and the men fought furiously in a hand-to-hand battle.

German seamen of a rammed destroyer climbed aboard one of the British boats and a midshipman fought them back with an automatic revolver. They were killed or driven again into the sea by the British jackies who came to the midshipman's aid.

The British destroyers were the Swift and the Broke, and, although they had received many wounds, they returned to port. The story of the engagement, compiled from the accounts of officers and men, has been made public in the form of an official report. It is an exciting and graphic story of a boarding encounter with cutlasses and bayonets, recalling the days when wooden warships came together and the men fought on the decks.

The British destroyer leaders Swift and Broke, on night patrol, were steaming a westerly course. It was intensely dark, but calm. The Swift sighted the enemy at 600 yards, and the Germans instantly opened fire. There were six German destroyers, according to German prisoners. The Swift replied and tried to ram the leading enemy destroyer. She missed ramming, but shot through the German line, missed the [illegible], and in turning neatly torpedoed another boat in the enemy line.

Again the Swift dashed at the foe, er, which again eluded her and fled with the Swift in pursuit.

FOUGHT HAND-TO-HAND.

In the meantime the Broke had launched a torpedo at the second boat in the line, which hit the mark, and then opened fire with every possible gun. The remaining German boats were stabbing furiously for full speed.

The Broke's commander found round to port and rammed the third boat fair and square abreast the after funnel. Locked together thus, the two boats fought a desperate hand-to-hand conflict. The Broke swept the enemy's decks at point-blank range with every gun from main armament to pom-pom, maxim, rifle and pistol.

Two other German destroyers attacked and poured a devastating fire on the Broke, whose foremost gun crews were reduced from 18 to six men. Midshipman Donald Giles, although wounded in the eye, kept all the foremost guns in action, he himself assisting the depleted crews to load. While he was thus employed a number of frenzied Germans swarmed up over the Broke's forecastle out of the rammed destroyer and found themselves amid the blinding flashes of the forecastle guns, swept all in a shouting mob.

MET ONSET SINGLE-HANDED

The midshipman, amid the dead and wounded of his own gun crews, and half-blinded by blood, met the onset single-handed with an automatic revolver. He was grappled by a German who tried to wrest the revolver away. Cutlasses and bayonets being among the British equipment in anticipation of such an event, the German was promptly bayoneted by Seaman Ingleson. The remainder of the boarders, except two who feigned death, were driven over the side the fight [illegible] this [illegible] manner.

Two minutes after ramming, the Broke wrenched herself free from her sinking adversary and turned to ram the last of the three remaining German boats. She failed in this object, but in swinging around succeeded in placing the boat's consort on the [illegible] with a torpedo. Both engaged with these two Broke destroyers, the Broke attempted to follow the Swift in the direction she was last seen, but a shell struck the Broke's boiler room, disabling the main engines.

GERMAN TREACHERY

The enemy then disappeared in the darkness. The Broke, altering her course, headed in the direction of a destroyer, which a few minutes later was seen to be heavily afire, and whose crew, on sighting the British destroyer, sent up shouts for mercy. The Broke steered slowly toward the German, regardless of the danger from a possible explosion of the magazine, and the German seamen redoubled their shouts of "Save! save!" and then unexpectedly opened fire.

The Broke, being out of control, was unable to manoeuvre or extricate herself, but silenced the treachery with four rounds, then, to ensure her own safety, torpedoed the German warship.

Meanwhile, the Swift continued her pursuit, but slight injuries which she received earlier in the action prevented her from maintaining full speed, so she abandoned the chase and sought fresh quarry. Sighting the outline of a stationary destroyer, from which shouts were heard, the Swift approached warily with her guns trained, to find that it was the destroyer which had already been rammed by the Broke. The Germans were bellowing: "We surrender."

Fearing treachery, the Swift waited, and presently destroyer heeled over and sank stern first, the crew jumping into the water.

As no other enemy was visible, and the action, which had lasted approximately five minutes, appeared to be over, the Swift switched on her searchlight and lowered boats to rescue the swimmers. Those who remained of the crews of the Swift and the Broke, after exchanging details of the action, cheered each other until they were hoarse.

HIT FOUR TIMES, STUCK TO WHEEL.

The British casualties are set down as comparatively slight, and the spirit of the wounded is illustrated by the conduct of the Broke's helmsman, Seaman William Rowles, who, though hit four times by shell fragments, remained at the wheel throughout the action, and finally only betrayed the fact that he was wounded by reporting to his captain: "I'm going off now, sir," and fainted.

A number of the wounded only presented themselves in the sick bay the following day, one stoker giving the surgeon the ingenious excuse: "I was too busy, sir, clearing up the rubbish on the stokers' mess deck."

The destroyer Broke was under command in the naval battle of Commander Edward R. G. R. Evans, who was second in command of Scott's Antarctic expedition.

SOCIALISTS HOT

Over Charge of German Tory Leader.

Amsterdam, via London, Cable.—The recent strike movement in Germany was discussed at a meeting of the Reichstag auxiliary service committee, at which Count Westarp, leader of the Conservatives, welcomed General Groener's declaration that further attempts to interfere with munitions work would be ruthlessly suppressed. Count Westarp insinuated that men had played a part in the strike, and accused the Socialist minority of playing the game of Germany's enemies. He denied that the trouble was due to lack of food.

The Socialists indignantly denied the insinuation that bribes had been used and placed the blame for the strike on the administration of the Spandau works, the fact that those bread rations had been decreased, and on the Agrarian policy. One speaker declared that the agrarians, owing to the high price of cattle, fed them with bread and corn, which the munition workers could not obtain.

A NEW ATTACK UPON HOLLWEG

Three German Parties After the Chancellor.

Blamed for Kaiser's Futile Message.

Copenhagen, via London, Cable.—The movement for the overthrow of Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, [illegible] the adoption of ruthless submarine warfare, is again [illegible] in Germany. The [illegible] by [illegible] over [illegible] peace terms, and food trouble.

The Pan-German, Conservative and National Liberal organs are in concert campaigning against the Socialist peace programme, and take the Chancellor severely to task for not [illegible] himself and his Administration from [illegible] and [illegible] against. The Conservative [illegible] Zeitung demands a [illegible] the [illegible] save the country from [illegible] it is heading on [illegible]. The Liberal organs speak of the [illegible] fears that ruthless submarining introduced, and declare that a strong and positive policy at home and abroad is much needed.

Other papers accuse the Chancellor of staking and losing the Imperial prestige on the Emperor's Easter manifesto, which failed to satisfy anybody. Von Bethmann-Hollweg's main strength lies in the fact that his enemies have no point of unity in their general dissent.

Reports from the Berlin Socialist conference indicate that there is trouble, too, in the ranks of the Socialist majority, and that Scheidemann is having increasing difficulty in keeping them in line in what has virtually been the principal Government party. A decided drift toward the policies of the extremists of the Radical wing was noticeable, and Scheidemann and other speakers intimated that, unless the government speedily and unequivocally pronounced itself on peace terms and made a satisfactory beginning toward the reform of the Prussian franchise, without waiting for the end of the war, a break in the ranks in the direction of Radicalism was highly probable.

The pan-German annexationists have turned a trick against the Socialists by exploiting an apocryphal peace programme which they claim the German Socialists will put forward at the Stockholm conference. This programme, which specifies in detail the disposition of all occupied territories, is indignantly repudiated by the Vorwaerts. The Socialist organ says that no programme exists beyond a general declaration against annexations and indemnities.

The Administration is evidently having no happy time in facing the utterly conflicting demands of its Socialist friends and Junker enemies, both clamoring for a definite statement as to war aims and internal reforms. The evident shakiness of Austria-Hungary is another source of concern, and the encouraging assurances of confidence and support which the Chancellor has been accustomed to receive in such times of trouble from press and Parliament are this time lacking.

NO GERMAN REVOLT

Says Cambon, Till Huns Realize Defeat.

Paris Cable.—— Jules Cambon, general secretary to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in the course of a talk to-day, said:

"I agree with James W. Gerard, the former American Ambassador to Germany, in his recent statement that the Allies should put no faith in prospects of an internal revolution in Germany."

M. Cambon said he felt that, later on, when the certainty of defeat had actually penetrated into the mind of the German people, there would be a change, and that, while his experience indicated that the German character is extremely slow in giving practical effect to extreme political theories, final realization of complete defeat would undoubtedly lead to the realization of a liberal and more democratic regime.

FOOD CRISIS IN ALLY COUNTRIES

Washington Appealed to by Several of Them.

Will Rush Plans to Send On Supplies.

Washington, Report.——Food conditions in several of the nations of the Entente allies have been reported to the American Government as critical, and as a result President Wilson and his advisors at to-day's Cabinet meeting concentrated their attention on what is being done to increase the food supply of the United States, and provide additional ships to carry produce to Europe.

Realizing that it will take time to make more plentiful American harvests, the immediate object of the Government will be to prevent waste and systematize the distribution and exportation of foodstuffs so that the best possible use can be made of supplies already on hand.

Preliminary conferences with members of the British commission now here and word received from American diplomats and commercial attaches in the allied and European neutral capitals, have convinced Administration officials that the food problem is acute and that the situation is constantly growing worse.

The question of supplying food, money and ships will play a very important part in conferences between American officials and members of the British and French Commissions now in this country. The members of the British Commission are able to speak with authority on the needs of all the Entente allies, because in several respects Great Britain has been the source of the other members of the alliance.

The President reported briefly to his Cabinet [illegible] information [illegible] from Foreign Minister Balfour of Great Britain. Afterwards it became evident that movements already under way to conserve food and shipping conditions will be speeded up.

The entire weight of the Administration is to be thrown behind the recommendations of Secretary Houston in Congress to strengthen the Government's [illegible] over controlling the food situation. The Administration desires to be in a position to direct the flow of exported food to the friendly nations where it is most needed.

Secretary Wilson reported that [illegible] shortage [illegible] on the farms and on the construction of merchant vessels. Organized labor, he said, is giving its active co-operation.

Several of the European belligerents and neutrals have asked for the assistance of the American Government in obtaining supplies other than food, but the details of these requests are being kept confidential, so that the markets will not be disturbed.

GERMAN DEAD STREWN THICK ABOUT MONCHY

Bloodiest Fighting of the Whole War Has Raged There.

BUT HUNS FAILED

Trying Again at Gavrelle, They Also Lost Terribly.

(From a staff correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Front in France, Cable—via London Cable.——The town of Monchy-le-Preux, which lies about five miles east of Arras, will stand out in history as one of the bloodiest spots of the world war. The fighting north, east and south of this little Artois village, perched upon a high knoll, has exceeded in intensity any of the individual struggles of the Somme. Efforts of the Germans to retake the village apparently have subsided on account of the sheer exhaustion of their available forces, and the British advance eastward of Monchy continues slowly but surely.

The ground around Monchy, as far as the eye can reach, is covered with the dead, the Germans at times having employed their old tactics of attacking in mass formation. Letters taken in the last two days from German prisoners, written in front of Monchy, say they regard the situation as worse than it was on the Somme, while the casualties are mounting up as at Verdun. In one of the letters the opinion is expressed that what has made the fighting difficult has been the fact that the opposing forces have not occupied fixed lines, but are scattered in half-built trenches.

During one German counter-attack on Monday a force of 700 Germans took one bit of trench from a British outpost. The Germans continued to press forward, not noticing that they were passing an isolated trench section on their right. When they were well beyond it several hundred British soldiers poured out of this trench section, and the Germans, trapped between two khaki lines, were absolutely wiped out in the fighting which followed. It was a general melee, in which the cries of the men, engaged hand-to-hand could be heard plainly.

The number of prisoners taken during the various operations this week amounts to more than 3,000. There is absolutely no index of the casualties inflicted on the enemy. The fighting is too thick for the most part to permit of individual surrenders.

Finding Monchy too difficult, the Germans late yesterday directed a counter-attack on Gavrelle where the last defensive line before the Drocourt switch position had been pierced. Four thousand men were seen forming for attack at a distance of 3,000 yards. British field guns, massed in great number, were trained on the Germans, but their fire was held until the advancing enemy was about 2,000 yards away. Then a perfect hurricane of fire was opened, and shrapnel played about the advancing column like fire flies in a summer thicket. The oncoming waves trembled for a time and then broke, completely routed. Their path was strewn with the dead and the wounded.

UPROAR IN REICHSTAG

London Special Cable says:——Adjournment of the Reichstag until May 2, after a brief session yesterday, is reported in a Central News despatch from Amsterdam. Philipp Scheidemann, Socialist leader, expressed regret that the Reichstag should be adjourned, and then adjourned almost immediately. Georg Ledebour, leader of the social democrats, said that recess was not enough. He demanded that the Reichstag should meet to-day for discussion of the food problem.

"Thousands of workmen," he said, "have been forced to abandon work owing to their distress."

Herr Ledebour's words caused an uproar. Permission to continue the speech was refused.

The Winchester Press, after the town has enjoyed a season of Union prayer meetings, urges that these meetings be kept up. In noting that the average church prayer meeting is slimly attended, it says: Why then should not the union meetings be kept up the year round. "Why not make it a union week night prayer meeting held in each church in rotation? Do anything to get out of the church rut. Try anything that will stir up the church life. It needs it and the people need it. It is up to our clergy to take the initiative."

A meeting of women in Chesley, connected with the W. C. T. U. of the county has pledged itself to independence of party politics, and to support only such candidates as will support advanced legislation guarding the home. They demand laws to prohibit the marriage of the feeble-minded, that will appoint will women judges to deal with juvenile offenders, and for the appointment of public health nurses to the Provincial Board of Health. This a very worthy move on the part of Bruce county women, and is much more to be commended than the desire of some women now that they have the vote to imagine that by mixing in politics they can purify it. Purifying politics by women would be rather a dangerous occupation for the women. It might be something like the progress made by certain women who marry men to reform them.

Prof. Reithdorf, who lectured in Port Elgin and district at the beginning of the war, and did much good work in informing the Canadian-born Germans of the workings of the autocratic Prussian government, has enlisted at Toronto as a private. He was given great applause last week when he appeared as a speaker in Trinity church, Toronto. Prof. Reithdorf was a man of wide knowledge. In a conversation with The Times editor, and in response as to whether he thought the Allies would be able to down Germany soon, the professor said he had no doubts if Russia remained with the allies. He made no public utterance of that fearing it would cause some to think that Russia might not remain an ally. And just at that time the professor made to the editor a prophecy which has come true. He said: "If Russia will stay with England, and fight with her for awhile the Czar will have to go. I believe that the time will soon come when Russia will throw off the yoke of autocracy, and when that is done Germany is doomed." The Russian part of the prophecy has come true. It may be only a short time before the Hohenzollerns will be overthrown in Germany.

Soldier's Friend Club Provide an Enjoyable Evening

One of the very best entertainments given here in a long time was that given by the Soldiers' Friend club in the town hall Friday night. The place was packed with an appreciative audience.

In the first place the young people made the stage look right for the first time in years, having got rid of the dilapidated scenery and replacing it with neat curtains, etc., and then too, they secured the Southampton orchestra, who began a musical program at 7.30, and provided the gathering with pleasant strains. During the program the orchestra had a big share, and each time their numbers were applauded. Mr. Raynor, who is assisted by several Port Elgin artists, has gathered together a fine lot of musicians, and their work was appreciated. Music and more of it is needed at our entertainments, and the Soldier's Friend club deserve credit for providing something a little better than usual.

Assisting in the program were choruses by the girls, recitations, instrumentals and songs by the club, while R. E. O. Smith and Donald McArthur also contributed.

The main feature was the one-act comedy by Misses L. Thornburn, A. McKenzie and Leigh Wells, and Messrs. Sidney Bell, Reginald Mann and Wm. Goar. It was a pleasant little farce comedy in which a bachelor gets desperately in love with two maidens, but is flatly turned down by them, but later both accept. This causes many amusing situations. The play was well carried out and the young people proved adept in their parts. Joe Thomas was surely in love, while Mel Treman, his pal, was enjoying the predicament of his friend. The bulk of the acting was with these two, and they did it well. Billy Goar, the [illegible], was fine. His sober face and austere manner were just right. Miss Wells as Mrs Thomson, played a perfect part, while Miss McKenzie and Miss Thornburn played the game of love splendidly, the former in finally refusing such a perfidious fellow as Joe Thomas, and the latter in the closing scene of falling into Joe's arms a blushing bride.

Altogether the entire entertainment reflects credit not only on those who took part, but on those who have the club's affairs in hand. The girls are making a success of everything they take hold of, and some $80 was realized, which will be used in sending more fine parcels to the soldiers at the front.

During the evening a draw was made for a couch cover donated by Mrs. Mc Murray. Billy Brigden held the lucky ticket for the beautiful piece of fancy work.

The members of the girls' club were neatly attired in white middies and red bow ties.

A Car of Proven Quality

THE FORD car has been on the market twelve years, surely long enough to have proven its high quality. There is nothing experimental about it. Every part has stood the test of time and proven its stability with hard service. No other car has ever approached the durability record of Ford

No matter what price you pay for a car you cannot get one with a stauncher chassis. Government Laboratory tests have shown that the different parts of the Ford car are superior to those in any other car. Ford Vanadium steel has never been equaled in strength.

If you want a car that can plough through deep mud, sand and gravel—that can cross fields, corduroy roads and ford streams—that can climb the steepest hills with ease—that will give the greatest mileage all year round with the least expense and care—then there is only ONE car for you—The Ford.

Sad Death

The death of Noah Ament at Saskatoon a short time ago was a very sad one. He is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. George Ament, Port Elgin. A few weeks ago he came from his home at Kindersley to a specialist at Saskatoon to have a slight operation for adenoids. It was performed and Mr. Ament felt all right, and was around town the same day. Next morning he left his hotel to go back home, but before taking train he felt ill, and went back to his room. In the evening his physician was called and pronounced him suffering from cerebral meningitis. He was taken to the hospital at once, and died Saturday, being ill only from Thursday, and developing unconsciousness almost immediately. He was a young man of 30 years, and his sudden death is very sad. Just two weeks before the death of the father a little baby girl of five weeks was laid away, and the wife and mother is grief stricken. A young son is the only family left. The remains were brought to Gowanstown, accompanied by the bereaved wife and son, and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Ament. The funeral was very largely attended. The deepest sympathy is extended to all the bereaved.

Germans Pack Shells With Needles

Word was received last week from Pte. John Roberts, of Hepworth, who was wounded in France on October 8. At present he is in an hospital in England. His hand was injured in many places, having been struck by a shell from a German gun.

Lately he underwent another operation, and a needle was found in his leg. He says when he was in a hospital in France, there was an officer in the same hospital with him, who had ninety wounds and in one arm he had thirty-six, and they were all needles. It seems that in addition to other cruelties, the Germans pack their shells with needles.

Quality Counts

After all its quality that counts. The reason we have the quality in meat is because we buy plenty of good beef cattle ahead, and keep them fitted, so that when the meat is put on your table it has the flavor, the strength, and the tenderness. Yes, quality counts at Eaton's Butcher Shop.

Sad Drowning

People in this district will regret to hear that the wife of Capt. Minifie, who appeared here in behalf of the Belgians, and who was in Underwood a couple of weeks ago, was accidentally drowned off the pier at Kincardine. Mrs. Minifie had not been well, and was in Walkerton hospital for awhile, and went to Kincardine for a stay with the captain, who was lecturing in that section. While walking on the pier Mrs. Minifie's hat blew off, and the captain while recovering it, was shocked to see his wife fall off the pier. He immediately jumped in, and succeeded in bringing her to the surface. Frank Cuyler, who saw the accident, ran for a rope, and the captain held on until further help was secured and the couple rescued. The water was so cold that Mrs. Minifie was dead, while the captain was rushed to the hospital, where, after three hours of persistent effort, doctors were able to resuscitate him. The tragedy has cast a deep gloom over the whole district.

From the Front

Sometime ago Miss L. Donaldson, of Elsinore, in sending socks to the soldiers put a note in one of the socks.

The following letter was sent her which is self explanatory.

Just a few lines to thank you for the socks I received the pair with the note the other day and they were just fine. We appreciate them. I am writing this up in my bunk. The rain is coming in through a hole in the roof. I have my steel helmet under the drop, so it comes in useful in more ways than one.

What do you think of the war? I certainly do not think much of it. It will be a great blessing when it is over. The general opinion is that it will be over this summer. Let us hope so, any way.

I have been out here since last July. Came over with a battalion from Calgary, Alta., and now in the C. M. R. My address Pte. J. McKenzie, Regt. No. 160087 "C" Coy. 2nd. C. M. R. France.

I would like to write and tell you where we are and something about our work. But as you probably know, we are not allowed to say anything regarding military matters, so will keep silent for the present.

My home is also in Ontario, but have been in the west for the last four years. I liked the country fine and often wish I was there these times. But hope to have the pleasure of returning.

The big guns are barking away all the time. This old hut trembles at every shot.

We are about six miles from the line. Well I must thank you again for the socks as that is one thing we are all in need of and glad to get them. With kind regards.

Pte. Jack McKenzie,

Christmas on the Road

(By Clara Morris.)

The manager was mad! mad! This familiar, old, optimistic greeting after most bad news of "Oh, that's nothing—keep your hat on—things will work out all right!" was unuttered. For this was the day before Christmas, and we were due that night at Salt Lake City. The telegram between his fingers stated that both to-morrow's houses, matinee and night, were sold out solid. "And here we are," turning sullen eyes toward the landscape outside, "in the loneliest spot in the United States, with an engine cold and still as a run-down clock!"

"Perhaps they may clear away the wreck ahead, and we may move before to-night" and so get in, in time to save the matinee?" I suggested.

"No such luck, I'm afraid! Well, there's nothing for us to do but sit here in the snow and wait. But I say you ought to see the faces of our people in the other car!" And he turned and made his way forward.

George, my cook, in white cap and apron, stood in the kitchen door listening to the discouraging news, while Andrew, porter, waiter and trusted factotum, in the private car I generally used for my far Western trips, came in with his freshly polished lamps, and tried not to look sympathetic, but properly unconscious.

For a moment I sat in dismayed silence, looking forward blankly at a day and a night and perhaps another day, of literal imprisonment. Then up propped a promising idea. Adorers of hospitality, never are actors so jolly at their very best as when amicably feeding together; with the opening of the napkins the spirit of waggery appears, the drollest fancies, the cleverest mots, stories of every vintage and every land, crowd one upon another—and knowing all this, I began to plan a shortening of their dreary wait by inviting the company into my car, to have a little supper with me, on this Christmas eve.

I laid my plan before the tall, white-capped George, who seemed to grow blacker as he listened.

"We're three days behind now," he says, "for the Governor always likes to wait and stock up at Salt Lake. The ice boxes are plumb empty, and I don't see what I'm going to give you during this wait, unless it's bacon and eggs. There's plenty of sugar and coffee—"

"Oh, don't go on, if on can't—you can't!"

I swallowed hard at a lump in my throat, motioned him away, and sat down disconsolately, my bright idea crushed out of recognition.

I stared over the snowy desolation, where not even the moving shadow of a flying crow marked the whiteness. Now and then a wind rushed down from the heights and shook the car, and rattled the ventilators disconsolately, and then deadly silence.

The day before Christmas! — always the most exciting, most delightfully exhausting day of the entire year, day of mystery, secrecy and thrilling hopes to all. And worse than loss to me was my conviction that in this stalled special train the lovely Christmas spirit had gone black out of every breast, and nothing could revive it, and we should all lose one Christmas from our lives. Then suddenly the grim silence was broken by a high, far-carrying voice of a young child — a voice babbling boastfully, "I's goin' to find Sandy Claws, I is! I's goin' to hunt him right now!"

I crossed the car with a rush, and saw crouching down in that snowy desolation a cabin home, whose neat surrounding fence at first provoked to mockery, since in this lone place there was surely noting to fence out. Then recalling that young voice, I understood there was something infinitely precious to fence in. A plume of smoke rose from the chimney, and there was a window full of bright greenness of geraniums, growing sturdily from tin can jardinieres.

"Yes, mama, I's goin' to find him, an' so is dog Jim!"

Looking straight downward, I found the owner of the voice, a bundled-up roguish little fellow. I had to laugh at sight of him. And looking up, he saw me, and laughed too, and "mama," who kept her head turned away from her prancing boy, looking up, and showed cheeks streamed with tears—tears she was hiding from the tiny chap at her side.

I hastened to the car door just as Andrew pulled himself up to the step, and the mite of a boy, looking from under his flaxen blonde hair, asked roguishly, "H[illegible] you got Sandy Claws up in da[illegible] And bat-blind Andrew, not being [illegible] to read even the very immediate fu[illegible]re, answered, "No, Santa Clause is not in this car."

"Den dog Jim an' boy go look for him," and he stamped forth in a very ecstasy of delight.

"No further than the big fallen tree, remember," the woman's muffled voice cautioned, and the two Jims started off to track down Santa Claus, while inside the car Andrew made clear the cause of the tears Jim's mother was shedding.

The little fellow knew about Christmas bliss, his faith and trust in Santa Claus were perfect, and curiosity kept him wildly searching for even his footprints in the snow. And the father, who worked on the road, had got leave to go to the city to buy for the little man his heart's desire, a drum, and a for-true knife. And the same wreck that held us up on this side, held the father up on that, hence the tears of the mother over the sad disappointment coming to her boy.

"Oh," I cried, "something must be done—else the poor little fellow's loving faith will be destroyed forever!" And catching up a shawl, I made my way into the forward car, and with imperative finger drew to me the men and women of my company, not one of whom was reading, writing or playing at any games.

Now, as an actress, I have seen and assisted at many a transformation scene—scenes that have cost tens of thousands of dollars to produce—but never have I seen a transformation so lightning quick as were those faces when with swift words I retold the little story of the child's disappointment; and ere the last syllable was spoken, the transfiguration had been completed, in flushed cheeks and faces, the true Christmas spirit swelling sweet and strong again in every breast, all sympathy and excitement now, because a little child's Christmas was jeopardized, a stranger child, unknown to any of us. For as in the Christ child we see reflected all human infancy, so in all infancy we find some trace of the Divine Babe, and yield it instant, adoring service. At the quiver of a baby's lip the woman's heart blossoms into vicarious motherhood the world over! So now, seized their hand luggage, heaping upon the table anything that inventive genius might possibly turn into a gift for the little boy, Jim—outside there.

When bags snapped shut again, I approached and began to pass judgment, from a Santa Claus standpoint, on the utility of the collected offerings. Just one woman of us all was carrying some Christmas toys, and she had abstracted a small box of letter blocks, which so excited and rejoiced me, that I flung an arm about her neck and kissed her on both cheeks, exclaiming, "Thank you! Oh! thank you!" Then all waited for another success, and the next hit was a two-bladed knife from my liege lord, which produced a cheer.

One thing tried me sorely. It was how to make use of a pretty little rose-pink candle, that the "old woman" had taken from her sealing-wax set. "It's a pity it can't be used," and just then George appeared to ask if any one of the ladies had a pink flower in her bonnet that she could spare? Alas, no; all wore feather or fur trimmed hats. Then arose the leading man, and took from his grip a box holding some fine artificial carnations. "When I'm off the beat of a sure-enough florist," he explained, "I use these for boutonieres."

Every one was watching George, the cook, who had reached for the candle, and taking a pink from the box, excused himself by saying, "You just watch George's gift, madam—in about an hour or so!"

Soon after I noticed an odor of cooking, seemingly a boiling of meat—but that was a bit odd in a car whose larder was empty.

Night shut down upon us early. But the work was all done and the gifts ready. I had the curtains drawn and the lamps lit, a white cover on the table, and the gifts placed so as to give a final view before Andrew smuggled them away. My own little dog's collar bell had been fastened to a bit of shawl strap to fit dog Jim's neck, and George's iced cake, with candle upright in the pink flower, proved a great addition, with two oranges and nuts—why, the thing looked lavish. There was a shout of satisfaction, and everybody shook hands and laughed a bit foolishly, and then we separated, leaving Andrew to get our offerings over to mama at the cabin.

The lights were turned down, save in my own room, where I laid me down to read. The car was still and I must have dozed, for I was awakened by a draft of cold air. Then suddenly the silence was broken by voices, full and sweet, singing, "Oft in the Stilly Night!" I turned my light down, and donned my fur-lined cloak. I recognized the pure high tenor of Beast—so called because he could not be kept away from our Beauty.

I slipped out, and found Andrew at my door. "Do they face this way?" I whispered.

He nodded.

"I want to get behind them."

He answered, "I'll hold up a blanket like I'm folding it, and they'll never see you in the dark.'"

In a moment the trip was cautiously made, and I was behind the huddled singers. After they had sung "I Know a Bank Where the Wild Thyme Grows," a worried voice said, "She can't sleep through all this noise!"

"Lordy, no!" tittered my maid. "She is nervous as a cat, and an awful light sleeper.'"

"Well, then," said the manager, "maybe she doesn't like singing, just barefooted like this, without accompaniment?"

And out of the darkness my voice answered, "She likes it so much she could listen to it all night."

And afterwards I sent the shade whisking up from the wide window, and as we looked out on the moonlight, all gave a simultaneous gasp, and wonder fell upon us! For outside lay a world of purity, without stain of any kind—a land of snow and ice that the flooding moonlight turned to pearl. This monumental splendor made us shrink together, thrilled us by its beauty, and awed us by its chill aloofness.

As our eyes followed the great downward sweep of the hillside, they came upon the cottage crouching in the shadow, lamp and firelight outlining its half-curtained window and door, momentarily ajar. And against the icy loneliness, stretched near and far, that small shell of a house, leaking light and warmth through every crack and crevice, stood to our fancy as a welcoming friend, and suddenly I said low, "Is it not like the first Christmas eve?"

"The first Christmas eve?" murmured a woman's awed voice.

"I mean the picture of it," I explained.

"[illegible] well," came in an even, [illegible] tone from the Beast. "Won't you tell [illegible] it?"

"Yes, do!" urged other voices.

"My picture is the exterior of an inn. 'Tis night, and very dark. I fancy the artist means to symbolize the spiritual darkness of the world before the coming of the Divine Light. The building looms up with a solid and protecting air. From the crowded interior light pours through the windows, promising warmth and food, clean, wholesome beds for weary forms to rest upon, even sacred privacy for women stricken and at the end of their endurance. All unnoted— And yet outside, travel stained and broken, a man and a woman stand knocking, in agonized and desperate need, and about to be turned uncomforted away, on that first Christmas eve—that greatest night since the creation of the world; that night when the air was filled with angels, who spake to simple, trusting men, while in the still fields they watched their flocks.

"Upright, broad shouldered, his bearded face uplifted in listening, Joseph stands upon the wide doorstones, fatigue showing plainly both in face and in the high tense clutch upon the staff supporting him, while clinging to his left arm, her downbent face showing white against his shoulder, leans Mary, the Virgin Mother. Every line of her young body, even the slipping from the hanging hand of that tenderly suggestive small bundle she has carried, spells hopeless weariness; and one feels that not merely the hour, but the very moment of travail has been painted there."

cold, and tired, knocking at that door.

A woman's quavering voice said, "Can't you almost see them out there, where the light is shining?"

"And turned away," I added, "to stumble to the misery of that stable, with only the breath of gentle beasts for warmth."

Then I heard the snap of a watch, a hand held before me, in the moonlight, a big, white dial, with hands close together at twelve — midnight and Christmas! Without thought I hummed "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow!" In an instant every one caught it up, and the car fairly rocked as we roared the fine old Doxology.

Then one cried, "Look! Look!" and another begged, "Sing—do sing again!" and the next instant the quivering voice of our first "old man" was lifted in the old-time Christmas hymn, "While Angels Watched Their Flocks by Night," and four or five voices fell in and sang with him, though they were a bit queer about the words, for out there on this Christmas dawn stood a mother and child — mamma holding tousled, white-gowned Jim in her arms, all wrapped about in a patchwork quilt. He gave one glance our way at the darkened car, then lifted up his little face and stared steadily into the starry sky. When the singing stopped, he threw his short arms about the mother's neck. She spoke to him, and straightway he looked up and waved two chubby hands at the sky.

As the door closed on them, the Beast said, "Ah, he's safe enough—he's got the right kind of mother!"

"Huh!" grunted the low comedian, "so had the rest of us!"

"Speak for yourself!" snapped the Beast, "Mine died when I was born." And in the pained silence that followed, I felt, rather than saw, the hand of our Beauty creeping up to his shoulder.

I rang for Andrew and the lamps. And then he whispered to me, "I done bought a ham of little Jim's mother, and George b'iled it."

Then Beauty drew herself back in her chair, exclaiming, "One thing more, and I should be perfectly happy!" Then laughingly, she pleaded, "Just one little dance!" while turning a suggestive glance toward the small upright piano, that had been placed there for Madame Patti's use, since this had been her car.

"Now, then, Mr. Professor!" I invitingly cried. But alas, no one advanced; and "Oh dear!" I mourned, and vexedly hummed the opening bars of an old, old dance.

The manager jumped as if touched by an electric needle. "Where did you ever hear that?" he sputtered.

"Sir," I answered, "at the tender age of six I danced that schottische with a partner as big as you are!"

"Well," he added grimly, "when I was thirteen my sister alternately slapped and bribed me into playing that music." His fate was sealed.

He blundered and stumbled, and went back, and then suddenly dashed clear through the old schottische.

"Yes, and much good it will do you, for none of you have ever danced the schottische."

And then to our amazement, the "old man" lifted his two-hundred weight and crossing over to the first "old woman" bowed deeply, saying, "You have schottisched, Mrs. Blank?"

"Sir," she replied, with back-thrown head, "when I owned an eighteen-inch waist the schottische was the joy of my life!"

Then the music, with dance and verve in every note, came lilting out. The weighty old couple started diagonally across the car to gain room, and no use denying it, they did make us all up and take notice. To see them swaying in those long side steps to right, then back to left, like a couple of big peonies on one stem, and then hop, hop, hop, on springy old toes, with a movement almost as even as in a waltz!

Applause, hearty, genuine, broke forth. [illegible] curved finger tips just touching [illegible] small—no, there was no small to [illegible] waist—but touching gently the middle of her back, her hand resting lightly on his shoulder, their two arms extended in flexible downward motion to the right, and upward motion to the left, gave them an amazing air of lightness—indeed, they were like two old captive balloons swaying easily and lightly to the extent of tehir tether. Admiration turned to envy, to emulation, and when the old couple left the floor, it was up to me to turn dancing mistress.

So with gray wrapper kilted up, to show my feet, I danced with Beauty, with the Beast, with the heavy man, the soubrette, with the comedian and the ingenue. And when at last I leaned against the piano to rest and catch my breath, I beheld our orchestra still desperately playing that same, same schottische.

And love was there, plainly beaming in Beauty's eyes. Ah, beyond a doubt, I had seen her hand creep up to the Beast's shoulder in the darkened car! Well, it was not the first time love had sprung from pity.

And then in the midst of the fun some one started "After the Opera's Over!" and every one was up, reaching for wraps. Standing as hostess, I received the goodnights of my guests and as alone I turned to enter my room, I stopped and stared, and sat flat down to laugh, for on the handle of the door hung a man's new black sock. It was tied with a mighty bow of ribbon. Never will I reveal the ludicrous contents of that sock, but a placard pinned to it read: "Please excuse the brevity of the receptacle—in the absence of Santa Claus it is all we can fill on this hoodooed road—while if we were to send you all our love and good wishes we'd need a bigger one than ever was made. Signed: Actors Order of Santa Claus."

In the early morning the car lurched and recovered, as it always did when some one climbed to the platform. I awakened to hear voices outside. Andrew appeared clothed in the dark blue that meant movement. "Yes'm," he said, brightly, "we're off!"

"The wreck is cleared, then?" I asked.

"No. They're going to switch us off onto an old spur. It's a bit risky, and the Governor said not to tell the other ladies."

I smiled acquiescence. I had taken chances long before this, but my heart quaked a bit. And then the dear, clear little voice outside rose, boasting happily, "I's dot my Christmas! So's my dog Jim! Hear Jim's bell? Now he can't ever hide from me!"

Nearly every one was up and out. Mamma, with a radiant face, was thanking everybody. And then—any one who has ever seen a flock of chickens dispersed from a doorstep by the casting of a dipper of water should have seen this swifter, more humbled dispersal, when the little voice broke out again, "An' last night, 'cause it was Christmas, I did hear big angels singin'."

Shooting furtive glances at one another, with redding faces they turned and clambered back into their car, those actors, who we supposed to be checked with brass, filed, shamed before the innocent, unintentional flattery of this little child. And I—well, I liked them the better for such shamefacedness.

Riding with watches in our hands, we entered the outskirts of Salt Lake at door-opening time. Every woman was veiled and gloved, as we rolled into the depot, all ready for the word of command—which was it to be, hotel or theatre?

The local manager jumped on the car step and grasped our manager's hand. A hasty word or two, and then came the call: "All to the theatre!" Not a bath, not a meal, and not a complaint. A long line of carriages waited; men like ants in number swarmed into the baggage car.

We raced through the city; tumbled out, and rushed to dressing rooms. Trunks and scenery seemed to arrive magically. The audience hummed like bees. Our arrival was announced, and a cheer responded.

The house was packed—we played our best. The night audience coming in met the matinee's going out. Laughter filled the air. The musicians went out for beer—the actors went nowhere, save to dressing-rooms, to change back to first-act costumes. Bags of crackers broke out everywhere like a benign rash. Milk bottles appeared in strange places. A box of sandwiches from the "Governor" evoked cries of rapture from women in silks and satins, with diamonds at necks and wrists.

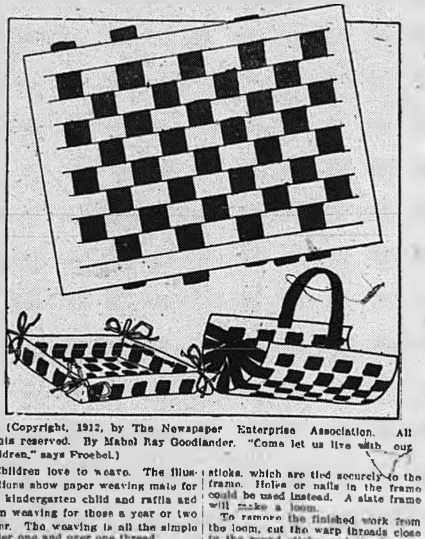
The two great houses had been saved, and when we sat at last, a pale-faced company, at a bountifully-spread table, the manager, all triumph, said: "Here's to Madame Santa Claus, who raised the hoodoo from the road!"

"Not me!" I interrupted, and, rising, proposed instead, "To little boy Jim — the baby who lifted the hoodoo from our party, and gave us all a Merry Christmas!"

LATEST INVENTION! GREAT!!

SMART INVENTOR—"That, sir! is the greatest fly-trap ever invented. You see, you bait the hook and wait until dark. Up comes a fly and climbs the long ladder; when he gets to A he touches a spring and switches on the light, sees the bait and crawls down for it; when he gets to B he touches another spring and out goes the light. He goes back and turns to the right to go down the short ladder, doesn't see the rungs missing, falls on to the block of concrete and breaks his blamed neck.

WEAVING A POPULAR OCCUPATION WITH CHILDREN.



(Copyright, 1912, by The Newspaper Enterprise Association. All rights reserved. By Mabel Ray Goodlander. "Come let us live with our children," says Froebel.)

Children love to weave. The illustrations show paper weaving mats for the kindergarten child and raffia and yarn weaving for those a year or two older. The weaving is all the simple under one and over one thread.

These mats all help to furnish the doll's house; the yarn mats are also good table mats. The paper mats may be made into trays and baskets, and the raffia ones into bags.

To make the paper mat, fold a piece of strong paper into an oblong, cut slashes from the doubled edge up to within half an inch of the opposite edges; open the mat and weave with strips of a contrasting color.

The wooden loom for the yarn was made with carpenter's tools by a child. It is 1 by 12 inches—the wood three quarters of an inch thick and one and a half inches wide. The warp of strong cord is strung back and forth between two round notched sticks, which are tied securely to the frame. Holes or nails in the frame could be used instead. A slate frame will make a loom.

To remove the finished work from the loom, cut the warp threads close to the round sticks, and tie them in couples over the yarn, so it can't travel. Fringe is tied in afterwards.

The raffia mat was made on a piece of cardboard with holes across the ends. The cardboard is cut off when the work is done.

In adding new weaving threads never tie a knot, but lay the ends of old and new threads beside each other for two inches, leaving loose ends on wrong side to be cut off later. Do not work with a weaver more than two or three yards long. The thread is woven with the fingers, with a metal kindergarten weaving needle, a long bodkin, or a foot long weaving needle, whittled from a narrow thin piece of wood.

SNAKES AND VENOM.

Their habits and their deadly powers.

F. W. FitzSimons, director of the Port Elizabeth Museum, says that snakes change their skins several times a year before reaching the adult stage. The main reason why snakes cast their skins is to provide for increased growth. The skin of a snake does not grow with the growth of the body, as is the case with warm blooded animals. So when it begins to get too tight it is discarded.

The hissing of a snake, Mr. FitzSimons explains, according to the Westminster Gazette, is caused by the long saclike lung being filled with air, which is forcibly expelled through the glottis and nostrils. The puff adder makes the loudest and most prolonged hiss of any South African snake. When alarmed snakes hiss with the object of frightening off their enemies. If snakes were not able to make their presence known they would be frequently trodden upon and injured by the various creatures of veld, forest and mountain.

An animal will often manifest the wildest alarm at the sight of a snake, or on hearing one hiss, although it has never before come in contact with one of these reptiles. "This power of transmitting experiences is," remarks Mr. FitzSimons, "a wonderful provision of nature, for if every living creature had to learn entirely by personal experience to avoid its enemies and find out what kinds of food were wholesome or the reverse a great number of species would rapidly become extinct."

Among the snakes described is the African python. The statements in regard to the length of these reptiles are very conflicting. Mr. FitzSimons says he has examined many, and the longest was 20 feet. The average length he puts down at about 16 feet, the circumference at the thickest part being about 18 inches. Pythons are very fond of water and often lie along the branches of trees with their eyes fixed upon the ground below.

If something good comes along the snake simply drops upon it, the end of the tail gripping tight to the branch. Pythons are not venomous, and the tales about them swallowing people have never been thoroughly authenticated. Pythons will show fight when wounded or cornered and at these times it is distinctly dangerous for a man if alone to tackle them.

"I have had much experience with snakes," writes Mr. FitzSimons, "and have made it my business to observe carefully their habits and ways both in their natural condition in the wild state and captivity, and in no instance have I ever known a snake to fascinate a animal in the manner it is alleged to do." He has seen two species, which he mentions, many a time in trees, surrounded by a crowd of fluttering, chattering, excited birds. But the birds were not, he says, fascinated by the snake: they were endeavoring to intimidate it in order to frighten it from their haunts.

According to one authority, about half a drop of Indian cobra venom is sufficient to kill a man. That means, as Mr. FitzSimons states, that a full-sized cobra would be able to eject enough venom at a single full and complete bite to kill about 20 men. The Indian cobra yields as much as 20 drops, and Dr. Hanna mentions having obtained as much as 28 drops.

In experiments with the venom of the Cape cobra, Mr. FitzSimons found that one drop diluted in a little water and injected into the tissues of the leg of a large monkey killed it in half an hour's time. A fraction of a drop was sufficient to kill a rat and a fowl within half an hour. Judging from the effects of cobra venom on the higher animals, Mr. FitzSimons considers that one full drop is a fatal dose for a strong, healthy man.

TROUSERS IN MEXICO.

According to a police ordinance of several weeks ago, from to-day on all persons of the male sex will be forced to wear trousers. Any man found by the police on the streets without these articles of attire will be sent to the police station, where they will be retained until they provide themselves with the necessary garments.

To avoid unnecessary detentions and difficulties which might arise from inability of men to obtain trousers in a short time due to stores being closed or to their inability to pay the prices asked, each police station has been given a supply of trousers which will be sold to needy persons at the rate of 50 centavos a pair. The ban has been placed on the flowing cotton nether garments of pajama cut which are so popular among the truck gardeners of Xochimilco.—Mexican Herald.

Strength of a Spider's Web.

When taking into consideration the materials employed, the size of the insect and the thinness of its thread, the web of a spider is almost incomprehensibly strong. Late experiments have shown that a single thread of a web made by a spider which weighed fifty-four milligrams supported endwise a weight of four grams, or seventy-four times the weight of the spider itself. When a spider spins a web to let himself down from the ceiling or from the branch of a tree we may be certain that he is in no danger of falling, but that he could carry many more of his kind on the same thread. The threads of the web when interwoven and reinforced one by another have a very considerable strength and are able to hold bees and wasps, themselves very powerful in proportion to their size, and to bend without breaking under a weight of dew and rain.

AND NOW FOR SEEDING

Soil Should Be Allowed to Warm Up Before Planting.

SOME FIRST CROPS TO PUT IN

Beans Are a Splendid Food Product to Grow This Year—How to Proceed in Several Lines.

(By S. C. JOHNSTON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Having discussed the methods of preparing the garden soil to receive the seed we now turn to the sowing of the seed itself. There is no need to hurry the sowing of the seed. Better results will be obtained if the amateur gardener will wait until the soil is warm and easily worked. The vegetables discussed are arranged as nearly as possible according to the time they should be planted.

LETTUCE. Lettuce is grown for its leaves, and is our best known salad plant. It is a short-season plant, and is often grown to follow or precede another crop. It is quite hardy and may be planted quite early in the spring, grown to maturity, and followed with a tender crop such as tomatoes, or it may be planted between any plants of the cabbage family. It is a good plan in a small garden to plant only a few feet at one time and follow this with successive plantings made every ten days or two weeks until July 1st. The lettuce seed may be sown in rows comparatively thinly at a depth of a quarter of an inch. The plants should be thinned to stand two inches apart.

If one desires large single heads of lettuce the plants should be thinned to stand from seven to nine inches apart. The thinnings may be transplanted to another part of the garden.

RADISH. The radish plant is grown for its roots, which are eaten raw just as soon as they are large enough to use. It is quite hardy, and may be planted very early in the spring. Radishes are frequently sown with other crops which are not such rapid growers, such as parsnips. They should, however, be pulled out before the parsnips or other crops need the ground. Successive planting is also advised for this crop. Radish seed may be planted in rows, four inches apart or broadcasted, the depth preferred being from a quarter to half an inch only. Radish as a general rule require no thinning, and the soil between the rows should be kept loose with the hoe. A crop of winter radish may be obtained if the seed is sown about the first of August. These should be thinned out to three inches apart.

SPINACH. Spinach is a short season crop which is grown to provide table greens. The plant matures in about six weeks from planting and seed should be sown very early in the spring, as the plants run to seed during the hot summer months. The seeds may be planted in rows or broadcasted, and should be sown at a depth of one half inch. Successive planting may be made if so desired. When the leaves are large enough to use they may be pulled off or the whole plant may be cut from the root.

ONION. The onion is grown for seasoning, pickling, and for eating raw. A large percentage of onions stored for winter use are grown from seed planted in the soil very early in the spring. The soil should be rich, moist and well drained, but fresh manure is not the best to apply. The seeds should be planted at a depth of about one-half inch, and the rows should be from twelve to fourteen inches apart. The seed should be planted very thinly so that there will be no need for extra thinning of the onions. Cultivation should cease when the onion tops are such a size as to prevent easy work. In the fall when the tops are about two-thirds died down the onions should be pulled and laid in windrows so arranged that the bulbs are covered with the tops of the onions. This prevents any sunburn which causes considerable trouble in storage. After they have been kept in this position for five or six days they may be gathered up and placed in a slat box or basket and tied up some way so that the rain will not get at them and the wind will have plenty of chance to circulate around the bulbs. The tops may be removed from the onions at this time if so desired, or they may be left on. Dutch sets may be planted as close together as they will stand in a straight row very early in the season. They should be barely covered with soil, which should be well firmed by tramping on it, and the green onions should be pulled as soon as they are ready for use.

PEAS. Peas may be planted very early in the season, and for the early crop the seed should be sown in a furrow of two inches deep and the seeds placed an inch apart. Some arrangements should be made so that the pea vines will have some support. Limbs of trees or chicken wire may be used for this purpose, as the vines will cling to this for support and will be kept up from the ground. This support should be set preferably at the time of planting. This soil should be drawn up around the vine.

BEANS. Generally speaking, it is not a good practice to add fresh manure to the soil where one expects to grow beans. They prefer a moist, deep loam. The seeds should be planted fairly early in the spring. The rows being at least eighteen inches apart. A furrow two inches deep may be made with the corner of a hoe and the seeds placed from two to three inches apart in the bottom of this furrow. Another way which is sometimes followed in planting beans is to make holes two inches deep twelve inches apart and in each hole three or four seeds be placed. It is always advised not to touch the plant when they are wet.

CROP TO PLANT LATER

Provide for Winter as Well as Immediate Needs.

CABBAGE AND OTHER THINGS

Good Food Products Can Be Secured by the Amateur by a Little Labor and a Small Expenditure.

(By S. C. JOHNSTON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Besides growing many vegetables for immediate use the backyard garden should produce some vegetables which can be stored for consumption during winter months. Some, of course, do not need to be planted as early as the plants which were described last week. Possibly a week should elapse from the time the lettuce is planted before these should be sown.

BEETS, CARROTS, PARSNIPS, AND SALSIFY. These include the most important members of the root vegetables. They are usually grown for winter purposes, though beets and carrots are relished by many in their earlier stages of growth. All these demand practically the same attention. The seeds should be sown in straight rows at a depth of about three-quarters of an inch. When the plants have reached a height of two inches they should be carefully thinned out so that they stand, beets and parsnips three to four inches apart, carrots and salsify two or three inches apart. It will be found that the parsnips are very slow growers, and for this reason it is sometimes advisable to plant a few seeds of lettuce with the parsnip seeds so that they will serve as a marker. The young beet plants may be used as spring greens. It is necessary that the soil be cultivated at intervals during the summer months so that the crops may grow. They do not as a general rule require as heavy watering as some of the other vegetable crops. In the fall the beets should be pulled up and the tops twisted off close to the head, not cut off with a knife as in the case of carrots, parsnips, or salsify, which should have the tops cut about one-half inch from the roots preparatory to storing for winter use.

CORN. In planting corn holes about two or three inches deep should be made with a hoe. Five or six kernels of corn should be dropped in this and covered with soil, which should be gently firmed by tramping on it. When the shoots are about three inches high all excepting the three sturdiest should be pulled out. The soil should be drawn up around the stalks as they grow, to give them support. When the kernels on the cob appear full of milk they are ready to use. It is also a good practice to cultivate the soil often around the corn, for expert growers claim that the crops corn and cabbage faster and better when plenty of cultivation is given.

CABBAGE. Cabbage is one of the most widely grown vegetables. The cabbage plant requires a supply of moisture, and yet if the cabbage soil is too wet the plant will be injured. Cabbage does particularly well on new land, and some growers claim that the cabbage grows without an abundant supply of manure in the soil better than many other vegetables. It is considered a good practice for backyard gardeners to purchase plants which have been grown in hot-beds or hot-houses and transplant them directly into the permanent bed. This saves considerable trouble. It is necessary when setting cabbage plants to set them fairly deep so that they will not be whipped about by the wind. They may be set eighteen inches apart, and there should be quite a good deal of soil around the roots. When they are ready to be set out a hole may be made with a dibber or a sharpened stick. The roots may be watered after they have been set. One of the most important features of growing cabbage consists in the attention given to cultivation of the soil. There may be some occasions when the head will split, this may be stopped or prevented if the head is taken in the hands and turned forcibly from one side to another.

CAULIFLOWER. The cauliflower is treated in much the same way as cabbage, the plants being grown and set out in the same manner outside. They are treated practically the same as cabbage until it is noticed that a little white flower has commenced to grow. The dry leaves of the plant should be brought together at the top and tied with a piece of string so that these little white flowers are protected from the rays of the sun and the rain. All cauliflower heads should be treated in this manner when they are about two inches in diameter.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS. Brussels sprouts are perhaps the most hardy of the cabbage family. If it is impossible to secure brussels sprouts plants a few seeds may be planted about May 15 at a depth of about one inch. These should be transplanted to the permanent bed about the 15th of June. They should be set eighteen inches in the row and two feet between the rows. It is well to keep the patch clean, and the surface soil should be stirred frequently. It is unnecessary to trim off the leaves as the plants grown in the garden.

SWISS CHARD. Swiss chard can be grown easily from seed, in rows twelve inches apart, the young plants being thinned to six or eight inches apart. The advantage of this plant is that the leaves may be pulled off close to the root and new leaves shoot up, which may be consumed during the season. The roots are used for greens and the stem of the leaf as asparagus. A few plants should be sufficient for a small family.

Editorial Comment

The Owen Sound Sun supports the suggestion of one of the councillors of the city that the assessment roll should be published. It points out, and very properly, too, that the ratepayers are partners in maintaining the municipal organization and it is only fair that each "partner" should have the satisfaction of knowing that he is not required to pay more than his share in taxes through any inequality in the assessment.

The New Franchise Act

Women who vote must be 21 years of age, while soldiers may vote no matter what age, according to the new Franchise Act now in force. The act provides for a board of five members and in Bruce county that Board will consist of Judge Klein, Judge Greig, Dr. Clapp, Sheriff Jermyn and Thomas Dixon. This Board will name the registrars who will act as enumerators for each municipality.

The new act has nothing whatever to do with municipal voters. If a man who has property is left off the municipal list he will have only a Parliamentary vote if put on by the Registrar. Part 3 of the Municipal list will disappear. There will be only parts one and two of the Municipal list; part one for voters at Parliamentary and Municipal elections; part 2 for absentees who have votes at Municipal elections only. The lists printed in the local Municipalities will, in consequence, be much smaller than heretofore, as the names of no young men without property will appear thereon.

The only qualification to be put on the list of voters by the registrars is to be 21 and a British subject, excepting with soldiers who will be entered on the lists regardless of their ages.

The chairman of the Board of Five shall give public notice of the date on which registrars shall commence their work, and when completed he sends his lists to one of the board to be known as the Clerk of the Board, and he orders 200 copies to be printed which are to be sent to the same parties as the present municipal lists are sent to, also a notice to be inserted in some newspaper in or near the municipality that the lists have been prepared and one of the Board shall hold sittings in the municipalities for hearing appeals. The decision of this revising officer shall be final.

The entire cost of this list will be borne by the government, and, of course, these lists will be prepared only every four years or whenever a bye-election is held. The polling places will be arranged in every municipality to accommodate the larger vote, and this will have nothing to do with the municipal polling subdivisions which under the new Franchise Bill will not have to be changed.

The Small-Town Club

Brighten-Up! Clean Up!

William Hamby in The Saturday Evening Post has a special article "The Commercial Club in our Town".

He points out that everybody just naturally seems convinced that all their town needs is more factories and then it will grow. Mr. Hamby, through observation, has found that towns that grow are usually towns that are made so attractive that men want to come to it. Among other things Mr. Hamby notes:

First, the town must be a made a good place to live in. And it must look like a good place to live in!

Materialists—and the Commercial Club is usually ninety-eight per cent strong on material results—usually overlook the commercial value of the aesthetic. A man may live in a pigsty and get used to it; but even he notices the difference when he gets out. A town may be so used to dog fennel and ragweed on the streets, and mosquito-breeding ponds along the lower road, and tin cans and rotting rags in back alleys—that it does not have nerves and the blues and chills every time it sees itself. But the stranger who sees it afar off, even from the car window does not stop unless he is compelled to; and then gets away on the first train. Moreover, the looks of a town unquestionably affect the spirit of its people. And a ragged town has a ragged soul.

Instead of sweating to raise a fifty-thousand-dollar bonus to hire some alleged manufacturer to come to town, the Commercial Club had better raise five hundred dollars to clean up the town and make it fit to come to.

It is easy to say that bread is more important than flowers. And it is. The most important things in the world are bread and shelter. But ninety-six per cent of the people in the country towns and small cities are above the bread line. At least ninety per cent of them have some luxuries. The first and most important luxury is a pleasant environment. Practically all the people see the town every day.

If the streets are clean, the lawns well clipped, flowers in the yards, the air sweet, the water clean—one does not require either wealth, taste or culture to enjoy that. Consciously or unconsciously, every person on the streets gets some sort of pleasure from a town of that sort. It makes people want to stay. And when people want to live in a town—when it is so healthy, so attractive, so pleasant that they love to get to it and hate to leave—they are going to invent their own occupations and build their own factories. They will find ways of earning a living.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON VI. May 6, 1917.

Jesus the Servant of all—John 13: 1-18.

COMMENTARY.—I. Jesus washing the disciples' feet (vs. 1-5). 1, 2. The evangelist John does not enter into a discussion of the supper of which Jesus and his disciples partook in an upper room in Jerusalem. This is particularly described by the other evangelists. It was the Passover feast in commemoration of the escape of the Israelites from their Egyptian oppressors. John gives attention to the acts and discourses of Jesus on this occasion. Jesus knew that the hour of his crucifixion was near. It is expressly stated that he "loved his own which were in the world," and he loved them to the uppermost and to the end. While the supper was in progress, Jesus took occasion to give his disciples an impressive and much needed lesson on humility. There was treachery in the heart of Judas and some of the other disciples were possessed of worldly, selfish ambition. The occasion was weighty with responsibility and Jesus went forward with his discourses that his disciples might be prepared for their future labors. 3. Jesus knowing, etc. — Although Jesus knew that the Father had given him all power and authority and that he was the Son of God and had come to earth to fulfill a mission of infinite importance and would return to the Father, he took a most humble position and performed a most lowly task. 4. He riseth from supper—The supper consisted of a lamb prepared according to the directions given by the Lord to the Israelites through Moses (Exod. 12: 3-10). The table was low and around it couches were arranged for the guests, who reclined at full length upon them, resting upon the left elbow, that the right hand might be free to take the food. Jesus rose from his place to teach by example a lesson in humility. Laid aside his garments—He threw off his outer garments that his movements might be free. He was then fully clad with the ordinary tunic. In the east a heavy outer garment is worn as a protection from the cold in winter and from the heat in summer. Girded himself—He passed the towel about his body, as a servant was accustomed to do, that he might use it conveniently in his self-imposed task. 5. Into a basin—Better, "into the basin," which stood there for such purposes, the large copper basin commonly found in Oriental houses. — Cam. Bib. Began to wash the disciples' feet—It is not stated with which one of the disciples Jesus began, but it is evident that he had washed the feet of one or more before he came to Peter. The service of washing feet of guests was usually performed by a menial servant of the host. In this instance that duty would naturally devolve upon one of the disciples. It is possible that the question of precedence (Luke 22: 24) arose in connection with this service. Sandals were worn in that country and those who traveled along the dusty roads would need to have their feet washed upon entering a house. This service had not been performed and Jesus made use of this condition to teach his disciples the duty of humble service to others. The custom of reclining at meals gave easy access to the feet of the disciples. Jesus took the place of a lowly servant. At the feast in Simon's house a few days before this he had been highly honored by Mary, who anointed his head and his feet with precious ointment, and now he is engaging in lowly service for his disciples. He teaches us the great truth that no service which others need to have done for them is beneath us.

II. Peter's objection (vs. 6-11). 6. Then cometh he to Simon Peter—The service that Jesus was performing had not been questioned or opposed up to this point. The other disciples were less ready to speak than Peter. Their attitude toward the task which Jesus had undertaken may have seemed as much out of place to them as to Peter, but they kept still. Lord, dost thou wash my feet—The emphasis is on "thou" and "my." It appeared to Peter utterly inconsistent for the Master, "Son of the living God," to take the place of a slave and wash the feet of his disciples. Even though he had performed this service for others, he could not think of allowing him to do it for him. 7. Jesus answered—The Master noted Peter's question and the spirit that prompted it, and gave him an appropriate answer. thou knowest not now—Peter did not fully comprehend the nature of Christ nor his mission on earth, and in the very nature of the case could not know it yet. thou shalt know hereafter—After the crucifixion, the resurrection and the ascension of Jesus, and after the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, Peter would realize the import of this act of humility, for the baptism of the Holy Spirit would give him a degree of illumination not yet experienced. 8. thou shalt never wash my feet—Peter's natural impulsiveness found expression in this strong language. Never would the time come, Peter declared, when he could consent to the Master's performing this humble service. He meant well, but he did not realize what he was saying. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me—If Peter's language was strong, that of Jesus was equally so, and expressive of an eternity of meaning to Peter. This disciple had assumed an attitude of opposition to Jesus and unless he changed his position, he could have no part in the benefits of the atonement which Jesus was soon to make. Peter could not stand against the will of the Master and have peace and rest of soul. 9. not my feet only—When Peter came to understand what it meant to oppose the Master's plan, he retracted his former statement and went to the opposite extreme. Rather than be separated from his Lord he would willingly have him wash his feet, his hands and his head. He believed that he would permit nothing to keep him from fellowship with Jesus but within a few hours a test would come to him that would show him how weak he was. 10. he that is washed—In a literal sense they were clean, having recently bathed their entire bodies, and needed only to have the dust washed from their feet. In a symbolical sense they were clean, having their sins forgiven, and being followers of Jesus. Ye are clean, but not all—The disciples were true in heart. They were devoted to the Master, having left all to follow him. This was true of the disciples in general, but there was one to whom the words, "not all," applied, and that one knew who it was. 11. for he knew—Jesus understood the treachery of Judas' heart and was aware that he was already bargaining with the Jewish leaders to betray him to them. It was Judas who complained at Mary's act of devotion in anointing Jesus with the costly spikenard, because he desired to handle the money that the sale of the ointment would have brought. Now he is condemned for his base treachery.

III. Serving others (vs. 12-17). 12. After he had washed their feet—He had washed the feet of the twelve disciples, from John the beloved to the base Judas. He had shown them the nature of humility and what is involved in service for others. He had taught the lesson that in the kingdom of God distinction of great and small, high and low, do not exist. He had not lowered himself in the estimation of his disciples, but, in fact, they had a higher conception of his character and mission than ever before. Was set down—"Reclined."—R. V., margin. Know ye—The disciples did not understand the full import of the act, and Jesus was about to give them further information. 13. Master and Lord—These titles were applied to Jesus by the disciples. If he was their Master and Lord, they were his disciples and servants. He recognized the fact that the titles were rightfully applied. 14. Ye also ought to wash one another's feet—Jesus had given a remarkable example of loving, humble service. The circumstance demanded that this service be performed and the disciples were impressed with their duty to serve one another. This act of Jesus is capable of wide application. Christians are constantly in positions where they can follow Christ's example of performing lowly service for others. 15. As I have done to you—The example of serving others which Jesus set is to be followed down to the end of time. 16, 17. The standards which men set up are far different from those which Jesus fixed. Among men the master is vastly superior to the servant, and does not stoop to menial tasks. In Christ's kingdom the Master performed humble service for his disciples. The followers of Jesus are not above performing humble tasks for one another.

Questions.—Name some of the events that occurred between the triumphal entry and the Passover supper. Why was this supper held? Of what did the feast consist? Describe the act performed by the Master during the feast. What objection did Peter offer? What caused Peter to change his attitude? What duty did Jesus enjoin upon his disciples? To whom did Jesus refer when he said his disciples were not all clean?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Love's Service.

I. Reached the depth of human need.

II. Set an example for daily living.

I. Reached the depth of human need. Among all the parting scenes that the world's literature has enshrined, there are none that can be compared with this supreme and unique instance of self-forgetfulness in the life of Jesus. When "His hour" had come, when the shadow of the cross fell athwart His path, when humiliation, suffering and death were immediately before Him, when He was just on the eve of stepping from humiliation to glory, just about to cast aside the veil of His flesh to appear in all His heavenly splendor, it is beautifully instructive and encouraging to see how warmly His heart beat for "His own" and how anxious He was to use the closing days of His ministry for their spiritual profit. Before His departure, when He might have been absorbed in the contemplation of His death, before His exaltation when the vision of coming glory might have filled His mind, to the latest moment of His life, the thought of their feebleness and defenselessness and their sufferings and imperfections was the foremost anxiety of His heart. When the hour was at hand in which the bitter cup was to be lifted to His lips, His own great suffering could not cast a shadow between the loving Master and His trembling disciples. Here at the very close of His earthly life was a most thoughtful, touching instance of His intense desire to do them good. Under the most affecting circumstances, to the utmost extent, He manifested His love, corresponding to their necessities because of the peculiar difficulties and dangers to which they were exposed. Such was His affection for His disciples, that not all the glories of heaven, [illegible] to be possessed, could for a moment [illegible] His compassionate affection toward them. [illegible] the Lord divested Himself consciously of the glory which marked the several trials of His mission. That marvelous consciousness is here set forth as the basis and the reason for a special tenderness as He thought of the impending separation. It was the hour of His supreme and sublime self-consciousness and the hour of His lowly service to His disciples. He, into whose hands the Father had given all things, stooped to employ those hands in washing His disciples' feet. It was voluntary service rendered in the consciousness of divine power. The thought of His divine origin and His divine destination made His act all the more impressive with a force of example that was designed to act irresistibly upon the minds of His disciples through all time. Jesus knelt before each of the twelve in turn. This service was a symbol of inward purification.

II. Set an example for daily living. As a teacher, Jesus adapted His teachings to the state of His hearers. He gave each lesson a special application. "The deity of His person, the divinity of His attributes, His appointment by the Father gave Him a right to teach and govern His people." The disciples were slow to understand His teaching, slow to appreciate His nature and His mission. The fact that at a crisis in His ministry Jesus designed to wash His disciples' feet, with no end in view except to inculcate that in His view there was urgent need for such instruction. This affecting incident occurred after the controversy among the disciples as to which of them should be accounted greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Christ's example called His disciples to personal humility, to loving service, to brotherly forgiveness. They had been the objects of His tenderest regard since the day He had chosen them. His love was stronger than their unbelief and ignorance. He saw more in them to love than other eyes could possibly see. His life was a discipline of love to them, His death a sacrifice of love for them. On Tabor or in Gethsemane, alone or with the multitude, in life or in death, He loved His own. Touched with the feeling of their infirmities He loved them with a tender, prudent affection and sought to train them and educate them that they might be good soldiers of the cross. Jesus taught that true greatness consisted in ministering to the good of others. Peter felt that it was an inversion of all proper relations for Jesus to perform that service for His disciples.

Why Benzol is Not Used.

The reason why benzol is not more largely used as a fuel for motor driven vehicles is pointed out by A. Wayne Clark, of New Brunswick, N. J., in a letter to the Scientific American. He says it is because benzol freezes solid at from 32 to 34 degrees F., and would consequently be useless during about half the year in more than half of this country.—Pittsburgh Press.

SHOULD WE PLANT NEW APPLE ORCHARDS?

There is An Opportunity Now for the Beginner if He Will Care for His Orchard Properly But He Should Plant a Fairly Large Orchard.

(By H. S. Fry, B.S.A.

In the first place, let us preface this discussion of the "Beginner's New Orchard," by an opinion. Opinions are supposed to be less reliable than facts, yet we rely on the opinions of others to direct most of our efforts—besides, opinions are cheaper. The writer therefore ventures an opinion that what is wanted in Ontario fruit growing is not more beginners to plant new orchards, so much as more fruit growers to increase their acreages.

There is, of course, always room for a good beginner, but the apple industry in particular is in need of: First, larger orchards, so that cost of production may be decreased; second, fewer growers, so that marketing methods and like considerations may more easily be placed upon a basis of standardization. There has probably been no time in the history of Ontario apple growing when the necessity for careful planning of new orchards, thorough care of the growing crop, and intelligent handling of the fruit harvest has been more urgent than at present.

There are several things which seem to indicate the truth of this statement. In the first place, nurserymen agree that it is very difficult to sell apple trees at present. One need travel only through the recognized apple district to note the scarcity of young orchards one, two or three years old. There is also an increasing number of poorly cared for orchards in the province. One might conclude that over-production is responsible, and so we believe it is—not over-production in a real sense, but the over-production that must inevitably follow the production of poor-grade fruit from hundreds of small, half-cared-for orchards. In other words, the percentage of poor-grade fruit put on the market is too large, and since the average fruit grower establishes the predominating quality or grade, extra intelligence efforts are required on the part of the really good grower if fair profits are to be secured in years of full crops, in the face of the large quantities of second-grade fruit which will be thrown on the market.

NEGLECTED ORCHARDS ON THE INCREASE.

While we can by no means claim to have solved all or nearly all of the orchard problems as yet, it does seem that with the many different fruit-growers' organizations in the Province, the Experiment Stations and District Representatives, all taking spraying, pruning, thinning, cultivation and fertilization in order to raise the quality of the fruit we market, there ought to be a marked decrease in the number of uncared for orchards. Instead, there are still apple districts in the province where only a very small proportion of the growers spray regularly and with sufficient thoroughness to control even the more important diseases and pests like apple scab, San Jose scale or the codling moth. The number of neglected orchards, too, seems to be increasing, rather than decreasing, especially during the last few years. Of course, in certain parts of the province this neglect has followed an overrapid planting due to high prices secured for fruit and to the efforts of real estate agents. It seems to be true, too, that a large number of growers, particularly of apples, are quite easily induced to neglect their pruning and spraying by one or two years of light crops, such as we have experienced. As was pointed out, also in the Countryman some time ago, this condition is in part due to the small acreage in each orchard. The war itself has contributed its share by creating a serious shortage of labor on the general farms of the province where the small apple orchard is found in such large numbers.

A GOOD TIME NOW TO PLANT.

Apple prices, or perhaps we should say apple profits, have decreased generally since 1910-11, and consequently it is only natural to expect a decrease in planting for fear of over-production. In 1910-11 yields and prices were good and plantings were very heavy, and had been heavy for about five years previous. Since then, however, conditions have gradually been changing as a result of the influence of crop cycles, about which Prof. G. F. Warren says regarding apples: "There is no reason why an average of fifty years of apples should pay better than other crops. Abnormally high profits are the peril of the industry. The only way to tell whether to plant apples is to study the comparative numbers of old and young trees and the present rate of planting. From the figures thus far available, it appears the periods of over and under-production of apples last about twenty to twenty-five years, as it takes this time to get enough trees raised to bearing age to cause over-production, and about another equal period of little planting before prices rise high enough to stimulate another planting wave." Prof. Warren says: "It would appear to be the part of wisdom for a farmer to start planting orchards about the middle of the low price period, when everyone is discouraged, and to stop planting at the time when prices are so high that everyone is planting."

It would seem then that for the next few years apple orchards planted by the right persons would prove good investments, providing they were taken care of and had been thoughtfully planned.

It will probably be a considerable time before nursery stock will again be sold as cheaply as it is being sold in the spring of 1917. The labor situation is affecting the nurseryman as well as the farmer and fruit grower, and an increase in price is inevitable. Of course this is a small consideration really, since an advance in price of five cents per tree would only mean an increase of two dollars and a half in the cost of planting an acre, thirty feet apart each way, or an increase in interest charges of fifteen cents per year.

With regard to the question of varieties there are several varieties which seem to be favorites. A list of the twelve most popular varieties in Ontario would probably include Duchess, Yellow Transparent, Alexander, Wealthy, Fameuse, McIntosh, Wagner, Ontario, Baldwin, Stark, Spy and Ben Davis. The last five are late winter, long keeping sorts, and the remainder vary in season from late summer to early and late winter. The list, arranged in order of quality, would be as follows: Spy, McIntosh, Wagner, Fameuse, Wealthy, Yellow Transparent, Ontario, Baldwin, Duchess, Stark, Alexander and Ben Davis. Not every one would arrange these varieties in this way, since no two person's tastes are alike. Wealthy, Duchess and Wagner are about the earliest bearing varieties, while Baldwin and Spy, especially the latter, are the latest.

BEST VARIETIES FOR ONTARIO.

Many growers and fruit men do not advise planting Northern Spy. It must be admitted that it has three bad faults. It is very slow in reaching maturity, very susceptible to scab, and has a very tender skin. On the other hand, it is extremely long lived, develops great beauty when properly adapted to soil and climate, and possesses a remarkably fine combination of cooking and dessert quality, and is a splendid keeper. Although no figures are available, it probably costs more to produce a barrel of Spies than any other variety mentioned. Notwithstanding the serious objections to Spies, it seems to the writer a very desirable variety for a young orchard, and possibly as much as fifty per cent. of the planting could be of this variety. It should be mentioned, however, that while the Northern Spy is undoubtedly the most popular variety with the consumer, the grower, especially of late years, is discarding it rapidly because of its lateness in coming into bearing.

There are more McIntosh Reds being planted now than any other variety in Ontario. The variety is an earlier bearer, is more easily grown with good color, is hardier and is a nicer tree to handle in the orchard than most other varieties. It, too, is very susceptible to scab, has not the keeping quality nor the cooking quality of a Spy, and is only a fair producer, although perhaps not fairly termed a shy bearer.

Everyone is well acquainted with Fameuse or Snow. It is very productive and hardy, but the apples, although very beautiful and of excellent table quality, scab badly and are small.

Wealthy is a favorite for quick returns. The fruit is of fair dessert quality, and a favorite for cooking. The high yielding power of Wealthy, its early bearing and its attractive color are strong points in its favor. Its hardiness, too, is an important consideration. Wealthy is one of the favorite varieties for use as a filler.

The Wagner is a variety which, while deserving of increased planting, is not as adapted to varying conditions as some other varieties. When well grown the Wagner is a delicious apple, but when lacking in color, size or maturity, it is very ordinary indeed. Like the Wealthy, its productiveness and early maturity make it an excellent variety for a filler among late maturing varieties. The tree is inclined to lack vigor after the bearing stage is reached, and as a result it is not very long lived. It is what might be termed a mid-winter variety and consequently does not equal Spy in keeping quality.

Everyone is acquainted with the Baldwin. That it is profitable will not be denied. It lacks hardiness, however, and should not be planted except in Western Ontario and South of Toronto.

Stark is said to be very profitable as an early and heavy bearer. The tree is vigorous and the fruit possesses good keeping quality. It is, however, only fair in quality and not very attractive.

As regards the Ben Davis the less said the better. This variety is not at its best in any part of Ontario. It is as poor in quality as it is long keeping—which is saying a great deal.

The Ontario is a cross between Wagner and Spy. The quality is good, but lower than either for dessert, although a good cooker. Fruit is large, a good keeper and fairly attractive. The tree, however, is not satisfactory in vigor and consequently Ontario is not being largely planted. The writer is inclined to believe that its value as a commercial variety would be considerably enhanced by double working on Tolman Sweet, McIntosh or Northern Spy. It is said to be very resistant to scab.

The Duchess is a remarkable combination of earliness, productiveness, early bearing, cooking quality, hardiness and scab resistance. Whole orchards planted to this variety in districts best suited for summer and early fall apples have proven very profitable. It is also very valuable as a filler.

Yellow Transparent is an excellent early apple, vigorous, early bearing, productive and hardy, but the fruit is clear yellow when ripe and shows every bruise. Consequently it is only suitable for marketing locally.

"When selecting three or other varieties for planting in the new orchard one should be careful to note the quality of the varieties chosen. Spy, Fameuse and McIntosh, for instance, are dessert varieties, while Baldwin, Stark and Ontario are cooking varieties and go to the general market. With the former it is both possible and desirable to box all well grown specimens, while it is very doubtful if the latter class should even see the inside of a box. Under some conditions it might be advisable to box some cooking varieties on account of the box being a smaller package and the more quickly used, but otherwise the quality is too low to demand boxing."

WHY SPIES SOMETIMES FAIL.

The writer's choice of three standard varieties would be Spy 50 per cent., McIntosh 25 per cent. and probably Baldwin 25 per cent. if it were not too tender, with Duchess, Wagner and Wealthy as fillers.

There is one consideration in choosing the varieties which should be kept in mind. Many varieties are self sterile, at least under certain conditions of climate and soil. In such cases it is necessary to plant other varieties near them in order that the blossoms will be fertilized.

A variety or plant is said to be self sterile when pollen from its own blossoms will not fertilize these blossoms, nor the blossoms of any other plant of the same variety. This lack of fertilization, of course, prevents fruit formation. Spy and McIntosh are two well known examples of self-sterility in apples, and because of this neither variety should be planted alone. They are excellent pollenizers for each other, however, and the two can be planted side by side with safety, even though there may be no other apple trees near by. Baldwin, Blenheim and Ben Davis are good pollenizers for Spy also, since they bloom comparatively late in the season, as does the Spy.

SUNDAY AT HOME

EXAMPLE.

We scatter seeds with careless hand,
  And dream we ne'er shall see them more;
    But for a thousand years,
  Their fruit appears,
In weeds that mar the land,
  Of healthful store.

The deeds we do, the words we say,
  Into still air they seem to fleet,
    We count them ever past,
    But they shall last—
In the dread judgment they
  And we shall meet!

I charge thee by the years gone by,
  For the love's sake of brethren dear,
    Keep thou the one true way,
    In work and play,
Lest in that world their cry
  Of woe thou hear.

I KNOW THAT MY REDEEMER LIVETH.

If, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. This man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

Because I live, ye shall live also. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.

The Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. We have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.

VESUVIUS AND THE CATACOMBS.

In the field of mechanics there are two kinds of power, latent and kinetic. Vesuvius illustrates the latent, the catacombs the kinetic. One is explosive, the other is attractive. Until the year A. D. 79 the volcanic origin of Vesuvius was unsuspected. On the 24th September of last year an eruption began, with the sudden appearance of an immense black cloud, which rose from the mountain, accompanied by an explosion that blew off the top and rained a mass of ashes, lapilli and mud on the towns and cities of that region. Pompeii was buried under twenty feet of ashes, and Herculaneum was covered by a torrent of mud. Three subsequent eruptions have been terrible, and in 472 ashes were carried as far as Constantinople. Vesuvius is always burning, but only occasionally in eruption. In the forties the present writer had the privilege to see it daily for a month—in the day a cloud hung over it—in the night a shaft of fire like a mighty index, pierced the heavens, leaving one to wonder as to the reserve of fire down below.

And now let us take the reader a little further inland, to Rome, the old city of many memories. It may take some searching among the tangled brush to find the mouth of the cave, the rocky 'vestibules' to these silent halls where the Christians hid from the fierce persecution of bloodthirsty men. Here they found cover, they worshiped, they buried their dead. The monuments may be seen, the inscriptions may be read to-day. "She rests in peace." "He sleeps in Jesus." Rest your tired feet and listen: there comes up, not the rumblings, the detonations of Vesuvius, but the throbbings of a mighty heart, which beats to the music of the morning stars. The gunpowder and glory men will scatter your bones, the sweet kinetic, spiritual impulse will put you in contact with the heart of Divinest Fatherhood.

This power is independent of time and numbers and human hostility; independent of principalities and powers and spiritual wickedness in high places. This power is silent, invisible, and constant. It is organic, total, vital, evangelical. It does not always mean the form of symmetry, but it carries the spirit of reconciliation. It transcends the vicissitudes of time, the dislocations of history, the frailties of even prophets, and the infidelity of the chosen race. It is quiet, it means God's word to man, not spoken, but done by a Saviour who spoke very little of it, and less and less as He drew near to the doing of it. It means the

Matchless deed achieved,
Determined, dared, and done.

This power goes forth conquering and to conquer. "Jesus conquers the world not so much by what He said, divine as that is, but by what He was. Others had uttered beforehand almost His teaching, but He exhibited to man a soul greater than all teachers, a soul whose divine sweetness and power have been the main human uplift through all these later ages."

A PUZZLING CASE

"Because who knows what new developments may take place in this case, and throw us out of our calculations. After Ilma Celinski's evidence, I thought it was she who had murdered her mistress, at the instigation of your Mr. Dallas. Now, I know that Dallas had nothing to do with the affair, in spite of the case we have so carefully constructed against him. No, it was Ivan who obtained the black carnation from Lippinton. It was Ivan who obtained the clock work cartridge from Kutusoff, and it was Ivan who was the lover of Ilma Celinski."

"A Russian and a Pole—oh, absurd."

"Love knows no nationalities, my friend; so why should not this Pole love a Russian, even though he belong to a nation hated by her countrymen? Yes, believe me, major, I am right. This girl loves Ivan, and changed those bouquets at his request."

"Then you still believe those bouquets were changed?"

"I do."

"And that the fatal bouquet was thrown by Gilbert?"

"Yes; but I am hesitating as to whether the bouquets were changed at the Hotel Europa or at the theatre, when Tressinger was absent from his seat."

"If they were changed in the theatre, Ilma Celinski could not have done so."

"No! no! You are right. How stupid of me," said Tancred, in a vexed tone, rising to his feet. "I am not infallible. I make mistakes—it is only your detective of romance that is never wrong. But I am convinced that this girl Ilma is mixed up in the affair, else why should she give false evidence against Sir Gilbert?"

"Yes, indeed; and why should Dallas post black carnations from Paris, when he has nothing to do with the commission of the crime?"

"Oh, the deuce! I am completely at sea. You may laugh at me, major, but it's no laughing matter, especially for your friend. I cannot reconcile all these conflicting statements, and whether the crime was committed by Dallas, Ilma, or Ivan, I am at a loss to say."

"Well, how are we to proceed?"

"Ask me something easier."

"You surely don't abandon the case?"

"No, I do not, but I am doubtful for the moment as to what is the best course to pursue."

"Why not ask Melchizedek."

"A good idea. I'll see him to-night, and I will tell him the whole facts of the case, and obtain his opinion. You and I, Major Granby, are only amateur bloodhounds, and liable to error. We require a professional man now."

"Who is also liable to error."

"True! true! Still Melchizedek is used to these perplexities, and may see a way out of this labyrinth where we see none. I think it will be best to give the case into his hands."

"No, Tancred," I said, firmly; "I have taken up this case, and am determined to find out the truth."

"Melchizedek will do that for you."

"I prefer to do it myself."

"Well, well, major, have your own way; but do not forget that this is no trifling task—a man's life is at stake."

"We will ask Melchizedek to assist me," I suggested, willing to meet the lawyer half way, seeing that the case was of so grave a complexion.

"Certainly. I think that would be the wisest plan. I think I can guess what he will suggest."

"Well?"

"That we should interview three people."

"Dallas, Ivan, Ilma."

"Exactly. My dear major, you are truly an admirable detective. We will see Dallas, and find out the reason for his extraordinary proceedings regarding the black carnation."

"But he is out of town."

"No, he isn't. Melchizedek found out that he has returned."

"And Ilma?"

"We must discover her motives also and her connection with Ivan or Dallas."

"By the way, I told you Dallas also had been to Lippinton."

"Yes; perhaps he stole the black carnation."

"In that case, Ivan must be innocent."

"I don't know! They each might have stolen one, and while Dallas sent his bud from Paris to frighten Mazzucata, Ivan might have used his for the infernal bouquet."

"No, that is impossible, and I will tell you why. This carnation plant had twelve blossoms, now there are but eleven, so only one bud could have been stolen."

"In that case, the same bud must have been used for the warning and the bouquet."

"Which suggestion points straight to Ilma's evidence regarding Gilbert taking the black carnation from the Hotel Europa and putting it in the bouquet."

"You are right, but if you recollect, I remarked that Dallas was also in the room, so he also might have taken the carnation from the glass of water and put it in the bouquet, after which the girl changed them."

"Then they could not have been changed at the theatre."

Tancred made no reply, but drummed on the table with his fingers, in a most irritating manner.

"Besides," said I, thoughtfully, "if what you say is correct, it proves the guilt of Dallas, and the innocence of Ivan."

"It does! it does! I am completely bewildered. But there's one thing I wish to find out."

"Yes?"

"What Ivan knows about Miss Maxwell."

"Do you think he knows anything?" I asked, sceptically.

"Well, she hinted to you that he did. When we hear what Ivan has to say about her, it may throw light on the present darkness."

"Ivan may refuse to open his mouth."

"It's not impossible. But seeing how he is mixed up in this affair, in order to clear his own character, it will be wiser for him to speak."

"He may explain everything."

"It's to be hoped he will for his own sake. What's your opinion of the case, major?"

"My dear young friend," I said solemnly, for at the moment, I felt solemn, "I cannot give you my opinion at present, for it changes at every new aspect of the case. I had a theory respecting the guilt of Dallas, then one about a secret society—a third making out that Ilma Celinski was guilty, and my last idea was in favor of Ivan being the criminal, which theory my conversation with you has just upset. Four theories, and as far as I can see, all wrong."

Tancred roused.

"No. I did not specialize any business, so as not to put him on his guard; well, this morning, he sent me a messenger from the Hotel Europa, asking me to call between 2 and 3 o'clock this afternoon."

"Is he staying at the Hotel Europa?"

"Yes. Wanted to be near Mazzucata, I suppose. But what about luncheon?"

"Come with me to the Old Friends," I said, and on his accepting the invitation, we left his chambers, and drove at once to St. James' Street.

Unfortunately, owing to our appointment with Signor Ivan, we were unable to linger over our luncheon as I would have wished, which in itself was sufficient to put me out of temper. If there is one thing of which I am careful, it is my digestion, and a hurried meal is an experience which I am much averse to undergoing, especially as the Old Friends' cook had provided a most delightful repast. As it was, we had to devour our food with the utmost celerity, and then, without time for a soothing smoke, hurry off to the Hotel Europa in order to see Ivan. Truly, detective fever is an unpleasant disease—it upsets the entire system with a constant rush of thought and employment.

On giving our cards, we were taken at once to Signor Ivan, and ascended in the lift to the third floor of the hotel, where the singer had his rooms. The apartment into which we were shown was furnished in a tint of dull red, and the windows looked out on to Northumberland avenue. There was also a grand piano covered with loose sheets of music, and the scores of various operas, numbers of photographs, among which we espied one of Mazzucata, and in one corner of the room a gilded zither with mother of pearl handle, doubtless the sound of some [illegible]. Far below, from the windows we could see the traffic flowing through the street, but the noise of the moving multitude came but faintly to our ears. Neither of us spoke a word, for, being as we thought on the verge of a tremendous discovery, which involved the death of a man, we felt disinclined for conversation, and remained silent, looking out of the window into the abyss below.

Suddenly, we heard a door open, and turned sharply, to see Signor Ivan standing on the threshold, with a conventional smile on his face. This famous tenor, this secret conspirator, this suspected criminal, was a tall, handsome young man, with a mild expression of countenance. His tartar origin was betrayed by his high cheek bones, and also somewhat narrow eyes, but otherwise his features were very good, which led me to suspect, what I afterwards found to be the case, that his mother was of Circassian nationality.

Advancing towards us in silence, he placed his feet close together, and bowed in continental fashion, after which he begged us to be seated, and placing himself on the sofa, awaited our explanation regarding the reason of our visit.

"You speak English, Signor Ivan," said Tancred, noting with a sigh of relief that the singer's first speech was in that tongue.

"Oh, yes," replied Ivan, slowly, but distinctly. "I have spoken English for many years; so, if it shall please you, we will converse in that language, unless," he added, laughing, "you prefer French, Italian, Spanish, Russian, or German."

"I prefer my own language, thank you," answered Tancred, also smiling; for, really, the manners of the young man were very ingratiating; "and so, doubtless, would Major Granby."

As to my knowledge of foreign tongues is entirely confined to French, as rendered by the novels of Gyp, Mendes, Mahe, and Loti, I hastily assented to Tancred's proposition, as the interview was too important to run the risk of my misunderstanding on account of Parisian idioms and colloquialisms.

"Very well, gentlemen, we will speak English," assented Signor Ivan, with another smile, "And now, may I ask your reasons for this interview?"

"We were told to see you by Miss Maxwell," said I, politely.

Ivan started violently, and flushed red under his sallow skin.

"Miss Maxwell!"

"Yes, of Lippinton, where you went to see her about the Black Carnation."

I saw Ivan pressing his hands together with such force that the knuckles grew white, from which I judged that he was striving to suppress some strong emotion, caused by my unexpected remarks.

"Miss Maxwell! Lippinton! Black Carnation!" he stammered, hurriedly. "Really, monsieur, I am at a loss to understand the meaning of these words."

"Signor Ivan," said Tancred, suddenly, "we have come to see you about the murder of Madame Mazzucata."

"My dear major, both of us are poor hands at this sort of business, so I really think we had better leave the case in the hands of our Hebrew friend."

"Melchizedek?"

"Yes. That name means King of Justice, you know, so perhaps in this case, he will prove his right to the name, by bringing this cunning assassin to the gallows."

"It's a most extraordinary case."

"It is a case, which, if written in a book, would cause the reader to say, 'Oh, ridiculous! such a thing never took place,' but then you know, my dear Major Granby, 'truth is stranger than fiction,' as this affair of the opera house proves. When it is all over we will write a book on it, major, and make our fortune out of it as a shilling shocker."

CHAPTER XI.

The next day, I had the pleasure of being introduced by Tancred to Melchizedek, who was an ugly Jew with an intelligent eye. Indeed, he put me very much in mind of the Baron of Cranstoun's goblin-page, owing to his dwarfish looks, and I suspect his nature was not very dissimilar, for there was a malicious look on his wizen face. Notwithstanding this unprepossessing exterior, he was remarkably shrewd, and listened attentively to Tancred's recital of all the evidence we had collected together touching on Mazzucata's death. At the conclusion of this narration both Tancred [illegible] Melchizedek would make there-on, but to our surprise, he held his tongue.

"Well, Melchizedek, what is your opinion?" asked Tancred, impatiently. The Jew twisted his soft hat into a ball in his thin hands, and looked at the lawyer cunningly, with his keen black eyes.

"Have none," he said, briefly, and again shut up like an oyster.

"Will you undertake the case?" demanded Tancred, in no wise disturbed by this reticence.

Melchizedek nodded, being a gentleman who evidently appreciated the value of words, and therefore wasted none.

"You will be paid well!"

Melchizedek nodded again, and smiled in an appreciative manner, after which, evidently deeming the interview to be at an end, he arose from his chair and shuffled towards the door.

"Where are you going?" I asked, curious to know what position this queer creature intended to take up.

"Lippinton," answered Melchizedek, and thereupon vanished, leaving Tancred and myself looking at one another in surprise.

"I cannot congratulate you on his intelligence," said I, shrugging my shoulders; "do you think he'll find out anything at Lippinton?"

"He'll find out all that there is to be discovered," retorted Tancred, rather displeased at my remark; "never judge by appearances, major. That man, dull as you deem him, is one of the sharpest detectives in London."

"Egad, he'll need all his sharpness to find out the truth of this affair."

"Well, he evidently thinks that the truth is to be found at Lippinton, although, I confess I don't see how he has arrived at such a conclusion. However, I am quite content to leave matters in his hands, and wait until he makes his report, which, I am certain, will go a great way towards solving the mystery, if, indeed it does not explain the whole matter."

"And, until he makes his report, I suppose we are to remain quiet."

"By no means. What about your detective fever, major?"

"It is worse than ever."

"Well, I will be your physician today, and cure you for the time being. It is now one o'clock," continued Tancred, glancing at his watch, "so I think we had better have some luncheon, and afterwards call on Ivan."

"Call on Ivan!"

"Yes. After your story last night, I wrote, asking him to make an appointment for to-day, as I wished to see him on business."

"On Mazzucata's business?"

"Indeed," replied Ivan, coolly, having now recovered his nerve. "I told all I knew about that affair to the judge in open court."

"You told all," repeated Tancred, with a marked emphasis on the last word.

"All I was asked by the advocate. Ah!" ejaculated the singer, with a start, "I know you now; you are the advocate of Sir Gilbert."

"Yes."

"Then, why did you not question me in court, Monsieur l'Advocat? Why do you come here to ask me about things of which I know nothing?"

"Are you sure you know nothing?"

"Monsieur!" cried Ivan, in a rage, springing to his feet.

"I beg your pardon, Signor Ivan," said Tancred, suavely; "I do not mean to be personal, but my friend here has seen Miss Maxwell——"

"Who says that you know more of this matter than you revealed in court," I finished, neatly.

The singer reflected for a few moments with a serious face, evidently debating in his own mind as to the best course to be pursued.

"What I do know throws but little light on the crime," he said at length, with marked hesitation.

"If it throws any light at all we shall be grateful," observed Tancred, bluntly. "Come, Signor Ivan, tell us the reason of your visit to Lippinton."

"I do not see that I am called on to do that."

"On the contrary, it is your duty to tell us all."

"And for what reason, Monsieur l'Avocat?"

"For the strongest of all reasons. You may save the life of an innocent man, who is at present in great peril."

"Sir Gilbert Tressinger?"

"Yes. You know he is accused of this crime, and you know he is guiltless."

"How do I know he is guiltless?" demanded Ivan, sharply. "You assume too much, monsieur."

"What is the use of all this fencing?" I broke in, impatiently, for my temper was rising. "Either Signor Ivan will tell all he knows, or he will not."

"Suppose he will not," said Ivan, coolly.

"In that case I will go down again to Lippinton, and ask Miss Maxwell to reveal that which you wish to be kept silent."

"I do not wish it to be kept silent," said the signor, indignantly. "It has nothing to do with me."

"Perhaps not," interposed Tancred, promptly, "but it may have a good deal to do with Kutusoff!"

"Kutusoff!" repeated Ivan, with the most admirable self-possession, though his face turned gray. "And who is Kutusoff?"

"I don't think I need tell you that, Signor Ivan."

"And why not, Monsieur l'Avocat?"

"Because I know all about him and about you," said the lawyer, sharply; "it's no use your pretending ignorance, Signor Ivan, for I know everything."

"If so, why come and ask me for information?"

"Because you may be able to exculpate yourself."

"And from what?"

"Participation in the murder of Mazzucata."

"Monsieur!" cried the singer, in an enraged tone, "you go too far. I am not a good-tempered man, and I will not put up with your insults much longer."

"What will you do, Signor Ivan, call me out. I beg to decline. We are not in France."

"Monsieur!"

IN GALLOWAY.

Trip Through Picturesque Moorland Country of Scotland.

Mile upon mile of moorland, broken only by steep and stony bluffs down whose rugged sides pour rivulets golden brown from their source among the peat mosses, and swelling in times of spate to roaring torrents—this is Galloway. In the distance the Kirkcudbrightshire hills stand out in clear blue masses, varying in tone from moment to moment with the changing lights and shades. You can see the shadows of the clouds chasing the sunlight along the heather, changing its surface from clear amethyst to deep purple, while here and there a clump of bracken already turning to gold, catches and holds the light.

Cairns of stones mark the higher points of the moor, which is intersected with loosely made mortarless walls. Villages are rare, but tiny whitewashed homesteads are dotted about here and there. In the air is an undefinable scent, something acrid and sharp, and you suddenly realize that this is the essence of the moors—bog-myrtle, and burning peat. Something faintly white is moving on the hillside. It is a flock of sheep, and if you make your way nearer through the waist-deep heather you will see the shepherd's dog, small, eager and alert, rounding them up among the rocks. There is a rush and a whirr, and a cock grouse gets up almost under your feet and lumbers heavily away crying, "Go-back, Go-back, Go-back." If he only knew it you are quite as much startled as he at the encounter.

Through it all runs, if you can apply the word to such a progress, the railway. The train stops at numerous little stations. Why not? Since there is plenty of time, and the guard enjoys a "bit crack" with the stationmaster. One is a market town, and the station is crowded with farmers—bearded brown men, with short gray eyes looking curiously light in their bronzed faces, each with his sheep dog at his heels. The conversation ended, the train continues on its way, emerging at length beyond the moors into the cultivating land. Where white farmhouses stand [illegible] over clumps of small round haystacks, and fields of corn are yellowing for the harvest. Here and there villages, each with its broad main street on which face neat cottages with spotless doorsteps, where the women stand knitting when the day's work is over. Flaming banners of scarlet tritoma clothe the [illegible] of the houses, and the children play in the wynds which open out of the main streets. But the true Galloway country is the moorland with its peat-bogs and moss-hags, its quiet lochs frequented by wild duck and teal and its great stretches of heather where the plover and curlew call to one another, and crickets sing for hours among the tussocks of coarse grass. Then, as evening falls, the scent of the bog-myrtle steals more strongly into the air—a good pure fragrance, not easily forgotten, the clear outlines of the hills are blurred by a soft blue haze, the call of the birds grows lower and less frequent and the moorland is quiet.—Christian Science Monitor."

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

CURED BY TONING THE BLOOD AND STRENGTHENING THE NERVES.

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities, after long observation, that nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long winter months, may cause much more trouble than the familiar spring weakness and weariness from which most people suffer as the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and often overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance, epilepsy and other forms of nerve troubles are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood-making, nerve-restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strengthening, while purgatives only gallop through the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine, for they actually make the new, rich, red blood that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cure the many forms of nervous disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weak, tired and depressed men, women and children.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Council meeting

The Reeve and Councillors Eidt, Pattison and McCallum were present at the meeting Friday night.

Communications read by the clerk give figures as to the cost of pumping water for factories in Southampton. The Bell company pay $180 per year to the town for all purposes. The clerk was instructed to write Kincardine.

George Gray, caretaker of cemetery asked for an increase. The present salary is $50 per year. He also asked that the price for grave digging be fixed.

The council set the rate at $3, and gave Mr. Gray an increase of $10 per year.

Mr. Brown asked for an increase for scavenging work. After discussion the council made the rate $18 a month with a bonus of $10 a year, providing he carries out a contract which will be drafted by the clerk.

Tribute to Mr. Currier

At the council meeting Friday night the following resolution was passed, which was sent to the general manager of Bank of Nova Scotia.

"That this council, representing the people of the municipality of Port Elgin deem it within their right to convey to the management of the Bank of Nova Scotia their regret that said management have seen fit to enforce a rule of the bank (under exceptional circumstances) whereby Mr. Cyril Currier (the Bank's representative here for the past six years) has been dismissed from its service and that if no underlying reasons existed other than those stated which are within our knowledge, we feel that a capable official and a most estimable citizen, one who during these trying times has won the esteem of the whole community with which he has come in contact, has been harshly dealt with. While we realize the necessity of thoroughness of system in conducting large corporations, if edicts are to go forth from heads of corporations on so slight provocation with entire disregard for the individual, then it is evident organized tyranny is not wholly existent outside of British institutions."

Miss Jessie Ridout is home from St. Hilda's College Toronto.

N. W. Rowell and T. W. McGarry are addressing recruiting meetings in Owen Sound today.

They decided that the county and local grants, amounting in all to $500, should be extended in grading and gravelling as early in the summer as possible.—Paisley Advocate.

The editor of The Chesley Enterprise says: When in the hydro offices in Toronto last week we saw plans for the Saugeen power to hitch up Paisley, Port Elgin, Southampton, Walkerton and other municipalities to the new power plant. Chesley will also be changed from Eugenia to Saugeen power. Work on the Saugeen development will not begin till after the war.

The marriage was celebrated at King Ont. on April 30, of a prominent young woman, Miss Jean Cairns, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Cairns, of Huntsville, to Mr. Philip Reginald Morris, Barrister, of Hamilton. The bride was a former Port Elgin young lady, having been educated at the high school here. She also graduated at Toronto University and Osgoode Hall. She practiced law in Toronto for some time. Many friends here join with The Times in extending congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Morris. Rev. Dr. Carmichael officiated at the wedding.

The potato growing spirit received a good start at the mass meeting in the Methodist church after last Sunday evening service. Everybody has become enthused and prospects are that we will grow some 30,000 bushels of potatoes in Southampton this season—providing the crop is a good one. It would be a good idea now to have half-holiday one day each week, so that all will have an opportunity to show their ability with the hoe. The weekly half-holiday is becoming more popular each year, and most towns have now inaugurated it. In Port Elgin every place of business is closed Thursday afternoon during the summer months. Let's have the half-holiday.—Southampton Beacon.

Punk Patriotism

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir,—One of the most popular Bank managers Port Elgin ever knew is leaving town with his family this week. Why? Is it any of Port Elgin's business? From a general business viewpoint, No. From a moral and patriotic viewpoint, Yes. No one will soon forget the expressions of loyalty on the part of the banks of this country when the war first broke out. Some of the slogans were: "We replace men by women in our offices." "Those who enlist will have positions kept for their return" "Banks will do all in their power" etc. It stands to the credit of most of these institutions that these avowals have not been violated. We know nothing about the indiscretion of the late manager, but we do know that he is not capable of any serious offence, and we know that he and his wife were second to none in their gifts of money, time and influence, and that their "bit" in connection with war work was a big one, including the loss of a brother while fighting in France for every bank and banker in the Empire. And his employers knew this, too. Is it any wonder that Port Elginites are a unit in their opinion on this summary and unjustifiable dismissal, and that the offence against one is taken here as an offence against all?

Jay H. Doubleyou.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

Miss Lauda McLaren is home from University.

Dr. H. Harwood of Toronto, is a guest of Miss R. McIntosh.

If you are a subscriber to The Times and change your address, don't fail to notify us.

Big crowds took occasion to visit R. C. Crawford's drug store the latter end of the week to get one cent bargains advertised. The scheme was new to this district, but the offers were eagerly taken. The first article was regular price, while the next article of the same nature cost but one cent. For instance a regular box of tooth paste cost one 25 cents, the next box but one cent. Mr. Crawford informed The Times, people came for miles around and the rush was so great the manufacturers had to rush in more goods by express. The coffee part of the sale was handled by Falconer Bros., who offered a pound of coffee for 50c or 2 lbs for 51c. Hundreds of packages were sold.

At North Bruce Presbyterian church Friday the Presbytery Bruce convened at one o'clock, to consider a call to D. C. Soules, a licentiate of Toronto Presbytery to the pastorate of Southampton church. The call was presented by Rev. J. R. Mann and supported by D. Kennedy, elder, Wm. Cameron of the Managers Board and Mr. McVittie. The call was sustained. If Mr. Soules accepts Southampton, he will be ordained and inducted on Tuesday evening May 15th, with the moderator to preside, Dr. MacDougall to preach, Rev. Robinson to counsel the pastor, J. R. Mann to address the congregation.

Petition to Discharge the Overseer

Friday night the council received a petition signed by 23 ratepayers asking the council to discharge Overseer Fisher.

The document was read, but there was no discussion, except to order the paper filed.

Dr. McDougall Inducted

Friday May 4th, 1917, was a day long to be remembered in the history of the Presbyterian church at North Bruce and St. Andrew's, Saugeen. The day was pleasant and a representative congregation gathered to welcome their new Pastor, the Rev. Dr. John McDougall, late of Keady, County of Grey.

Owing to the absence of the moderator of the Presbytery of Bruce, Rev. Mr. McCallum of Tara, who had been appointed to preside at the induction, Rev. Mr. Mann of Port Elgin, was appointed as substitute to his place.

Rev. Mr. Robinson, of Tiverton, preached and conducted the Devotional services. Rev. Mr. McNabb of Underwood addressed the newly-inducted Pastor, and the Rev. Mr. Little of Paisley, addressed the people.

During the Devotional services a quartet rendered by Miss L. Lamont, Mrs. I. McVittie, Chas. Kelso and A. Bell was very much appreciated.

At the close of the induction services the newly inducted pastor was introduced to and received a warm welcome from the members of the congregation.

Lunch was then served and a very pleasant hour spent in a social way.

Dr. McDougall enters this field under very favorable circumstances. His interest in the Rural Problems of the day, leads him to devote his time and talents to the Country charge rather than to the city church. In North Bruce and St. Andrews we have a country congregation successfully struggling against the difficulties of a decreasing rural population. We hope their efforts may be still further crowned with success, and that under the leadership of their new pastor, the Lord's work may prosper even more abundantly.

Corp. Christian's Military Medal on View at Busby's

Corp. Arthur Christian, who won the Military Medal for bravery on the field, sent his medal to his mother here for safe keeping. It arrived last week, and is on view in Busby's window, along with a fine portrait of Arthur.

The medal is of solid silver, bears the King's bust, while on the other side, engraved within a wreath are the words "For bravery on the battlefield."

It will be remembered that last fall in the big offensive, Corp. Christian, held back, single handed with his machine gun, a company of Huns, until further help arrived.

Eldon Dell in the Big Push

In a letter to his parents here Eldon Dell says:

"I am still alive and kicking. Yesterday was pay-day, and I now have the wherewithal to buy writing material. We have moved again and new scenes are interesting. I am with the Canadian Corps Supply Column, and about a mile from where Fred Sees is, so I see him frequently. I saw Roy Parr the other day, and Morris Moulton about a week later. Frank Geddes and Roy Thomson were about four miles from me for some time, but I did not know it until after when Davison, Frank's cousin, told me. I receive The Times regularly. We have it much milder here now, and the country is nice. The roads are getting better and drying rapidly, so that means more work for us, and some rough stuff for the Germans."

Weather Backward in Manitoba

In a letter to The Times, Mr. D. McLaren, who is a prominent farmer and breeder of Clydesdales in Treherne, Man., says:

"Enclosed is money order for my Times to end of 1918. I should have renewed earlier, but it's one of the little things one forgets sometimes. I would not like to be without The Times, as it is the most welcome paper that comes to our house. It keeps us in remembrance of the old pioneers, and reminds us that time is passing.

"It is 25 years ago last March since I left good old Port Elgin, and I have never been back since. But I am promising myself a trip in the near future.

"It might be interesting to our friends to know that we are fairly comfortable here now. We have 1600 acres of good land, 960 of it being in one block. We have two large brick house, and both of them have all modern conveniences. Besides, these, of course, there are large barns to accommodate stock.

"The spring is backward and labor is scarce. Very little seeding done yet. Yesterday (April 24) we had a heavy snowstorm that will delay seeding pretty late for this part of Manitoba.

"Will close by wishing The Times every success, and also extending my best regards to all the old home folk."

(Mr. McLaren should not delay his visit to Port Elgin. All will be glad to see him.—Editor).

BANISH PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS

IN THE SPRING MOST PEOPLE NEED A TONIC MEDICINE

One of the surest signs that the blood is out of order is the pimples, unsightly eruptions and eczema that come frequently with the change from winter to spring. These prove that the long indoor life of winter has had its effect upon the blood, and that a tonic medicine is needed to put it right. Indeed, there are few people who do not need a tonic at this season. Bad blood does not merely show itself in disfiguring eruptions. To this same condition is due attacks of rheumatism and lumbago, the sharp, stabbing pains of sciatica and neuralgia; poor appetite and a desire to avoid exertion. You cannot cure these troubles by the use of purgative medicines—you need a tonic, and a tonic only, and among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their tonic, life-giving, nerve-restoring powers. Every dose of this medicine makes new rich blood, which drives out impurities, stimulates every organ and brings a feeling of new health and energy to weak, tired, ailing men, women and children. If you are out of sorts give this medicine a trial and see how quickly it will restore the appetite, revive drooping spirits, and fill your veins with new, health-giving blood.

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A WARY LLAMA.

Museum Man Tells of Hunting at 18,000 Feet Above Sea.

Hunting the llama in the rarified atmosphere which prevails at an altitude of some 18,000 feet is told about by Alfred M. Collins, of Philadelphia, in a pamphlet issued by Wilfred H. Osgood, assistant curator of mammalogy and ornithology at the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. The expedition of which Mr. Collins was a member with Lee Garnett Day, of New York, and representatives from the American Museum of Natural History, this city, and the Field museum, went direct to Mollendo, on the coast of Peru, and started inland on a steady climb of mountain ranges until they reached Arequipa, 7,500 feet above sea level, in the early part of January, 1915, Mr. Collins says:

"The next day we proceeded on our way, and at a point 12,300 feet above sea level, called Pampa de Arrieros, we left the train, hearing that at this point the animals we were desirous of getting were to be found. Having finally reached our hunting ground, and with a considerable amount of stored-up energy after three weeks' idleness on the steamer, it not being yet noon, we at once made arrangements for mules in order to make a hunt that day.

"After climbing several thousand feet higher, we suddenly came in sight of our game. Dismounting and starting to run after it, we suddenly realized the height at which we had arrived, our hearts beating so rapidly that it became impossible for us to continue. The rest of the day we traveled at a snail's pace after the game, which always kept in a very tantalizing way within sight, but out of range. Finding that it would be impossible for us to come up with it, we decided to return to our mules and go back to camp.

"A sudden downpour drenched us to the skin, and a little later darkness overtaking us, and the chill of night coming on, we suffered intensely from the cold. The great heat of the day, the drenching by the rain, and the sudden chilling of the air brought on all of us attacks of sorochie. It was with great difficulty that we were enabled to get back to our rooms in the railroad station and all night long the whole party suffered intensely from chills and fever.

"The next day, and for several days following, we hunted these wary animals, and each day becoming more and more accustomed to the altitude, we were able to travel not only greater distances, but at a higher altitude. Upon hearing from the Indians that there was a water hole high up on one of the mountains just below the snow line where game was very plentiful, we planned a hunt with the idea of spending a night at this water hole, believing that just before dark or early in the morning might prove to be the best time to get our game. Hour after hour we traveled, and higher and higher we climbed, finding the water hole much farther away than we had supposed and at an altitude which taxed our hearts and lungs to the utmost.

"I will never forget the night spent at this point, 18,000 feet above sea level in a little shelter of stones which had been erected by the Indians where they watched for game. What was known as a water hole consisted simply of damp soil where, even by digging, we could not get enough water to satisfy our own thirst, let alone that of our mules. All night long I was kept awake by the shaking of my companion, who had one chill after another, suffering myself all the time from a most terrific headache and gasping all night for breath. The next morning, as soon as it was light enough for us to see, we hurried down the mountain for several thousand feet, and then, as the sun came up, we fell asleep, exhausted by the experiences of the night. Not only did the altitude affect us, but the air was so dry and the wind on these mountains blew so violently that our faces and hands became badly sunburned. In addition to the entire skin coming off my face four times in ten days, my nose swelled to at least double its size, my lips were badly cracked, and almost constantly bleeding, and my hands were blistered on the palms as well as the backs.

"It is hard to imagine any animals being able to live where there is such a lack of vegetation, but these sure-footed animals grow fat there. They are seldom hunted by the white men, but the Indians are continually after them, making them exceedingly shy and difficult to obtain. While the guanaco and vicugna (llamas) were found on the same mountains, they were never found together. Those we obtained were shot at long range. A small deer, the guemal, was found on these same mountains, but much lower down, its range not exceeding an altitude of from 12,000 to 13,000 feet, while the vicugna and guanaco were found from 14,000 to 18,000 feet.

"Pampa de Arrieros is a small settlement of a couple of dozen mud houses occupied mostly by the workers on the railroad, a church, and a railroad station where we succeeded in obtaining rooms. As it was a meal station we were able to get very good food indeed. We hunted mostly from mule back, but had considerable difficulty in getting fresh mules, as the climbing was exceedingly hard on them, and it seems to be against the principles of the owners to feed them any more than what they were able to pick up for themselves, the consequence being that after a mule had been ridden for a couple of days it became so exhausted it was worthless to us.

"The gait of the guanaco is a canter or easy lope, and by bounds they attain great speed. Reddish brown on back and lighter under parts; cool grey tone of head and ears; head held erect. It has the neigh of a horse, neck of a camel, feet of deer, and swiftness of the devil. The call is a weird, tremulous sound and half idiotic neigh."—New York "Evening Post."

OFT-INVADED ROUMANIA.

Ravaged by Macedonian, Roman, Goth, Hun, Bulgar and Magyar.

"Bravest and most honourable of all the Thracian tribes," old Herodotus called the Getae who inhabited the rich land between the mouth of the Danube and the eastern terminus of the Carpathians, capable men with bows and arrows, daredevil riders, but destined within a few short generations after the historian's death to suffer, once the nations began to dream imperial dreams, the penalties of their position. For in the fourth century before Christ, Philip of Macedon, beginning the career of conquest which was to lead his son, Alexander the Great, to the gates of the day on the borders of the Asia and the Indus, found the fertile Dobrudja a prize worth taking, and the alliance of the Getae kings a prime necessity in his campaign against the Scythians of southern Siberia.

He laid siege to their capital, but the early Roumanians, apparently, gave up without a pitched battle, preferring to die in Philip's battle with the eastern [illegible]. But when Alexander marched eastward the Getae made their first essay in the unhappy policy of neutrality unhappy, because, while they were not forced to yield their independence, Alexander's troops burned their wooden towns, and marched at will through their flourishing countryside.

Like the modern Roumanians, offered at one time the bribe of Bessarabia by the entente, these forefathers of the nation found the sweet as well as the bitter in their cup. In the first century of the Christian era their power under their king, Decebalus, had grown so great that the Emperor Domitian himself, worn with other wars, was willing to pay an annual tribute for their friendship and continued neutrality. Not ten years, however, elapsed before Trajan, needing the civilized kingdom as his outpost against barbaric Asia, swept the land twice with his legions, and rendered it for nearly two centuries to come a Roman province. It was during those years that Roman soldiers, settled on the soil in vast numbers by a government which knew how to gain and keep the loyalty of its veterans and their sons, gave to Roumanian life and language the Roman culture which has characterized them to this day.

Scarcely a full century, however, went by without Roumania's becoming once more the battleground. Quadi and Marcomanni from the Austrian forest rushed the frontier in 212. In 247 at last, finding the Roumian land more of a hindrance than a help in the solution of the increasingly difficult problem of imperial defence, the legions abandoned it, leaving such colonists and natives as cared to remain behind to the mercy of Roumania's first German overlords.

For a thousand years the tide of war between eastern savagery and western barbarism rushed back and forth across the little land by the Black sea. Nomad tribes of Huns, defeated on the Roman borders in 378, devastated the fields of the discouraged peasants for a century. Then the greatest of the Huns, Attila, swept it again with fire and sword, impressed its tribesmen into his cruel service, on his way to the great battle at Chalons, where the Hun power was finally to be broken. Only for Roumania, [illegible] from the protection of Frankish-Roman armies, the exodus of these wild men was quite as horrible as their original invasion.

Avars, Bulgarians, Hungarians in their turn through the dark centuries, laid waste its fertile plains, settled for awhile, and passed on their way. Against almost insuperable obstacles, something of the old Roman language and culture, something of the old Roman fighting spirit, persisted. No foe of honor ever called the Roumanians cowards. Out of the welter of invasions, revolutions, foreign overlordships, palace murders, ignorance, there appeared at last in the latter part of the thirteenth century the two fairly stable principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia—Wallachia comprising the foot of the boot-shaped figure which Roumania makes in the curves of the Danube on the maps of the day, and Moldavia the leg running up to the Russian border.—Exchange.

FAMOUS PASSAGE.

Straits of Messina Identified as Scylla and Charybdis.

The Straits of Messina, through which the German warships Goeben and Breslau are supposed to have slipped, eluding the eagerly pursuing British Mediterranean fleet at the outbreak of the European war, have again found a place in European despatches as the scene of a naval mishap in which warships belonging to England and Italy mistook each other for enemies after a collision in a fog and proceeded to shell one another. Concerning this narrow lane of sea between the rocky passes of Sicily and the "toe" of the Italian peninsula, the National Geographic Society's recent war geography bulletin says:

"The Sicilian and Italian banks which border the Straits of Messina for nearly twenty-five miles to the east and west are among the most luxuriant to be found in a cruise of the Mediterranean. Magnificent golden groves of lemon and orange and orchards of pomegranates with their brilliant red fruit contrast wonderfully with the flowers of the almond trees, which perfume the whole region.

"The straits are entered from the Tyrrhenian Sea on the north at the narrowest point, the distance between Punta del Faro on the Sicilian shore and the mainland lighthouse on Punta Pezzo being not more than two miles. The whole of the Calabrian coast is thickly sown with villages, some clinging to the beach, while others clamber up the sides of well-wooded hills which culminate in the towering Montalto, rising to an elevation of more than a mile above the sea. Beyond the straits to the southwest looms ever-threatening Etna, the highest volcano in Europe.

"The most important city situated on the straits is the once magnificent seaport of Messina, which boasted a population of 150,000 inhabitants before the world's most cruel earthquake of Dec. 28, 1908, tossed nearly 100,000 lives away.

"The harbor of Messina is the largest and safest in the kingdom of Italy, with a depth of more than 30 fathoms. Before the great calamity it was visited annually by more than 5,000 vessels, which brought cargoes of wheat, cotton, wool and hardware, and took away in exchange lemons, oranges, almonds, wines, olive oil and silks. Much of its commerce was and still is carried on with the mainland of the kingdom by means of a ferry line to Villa San Giovanni, only four and a half miles away, while Reggio, the chief seaport on the Italian side of the straits, and also the chief earthquake sufferer next to Messina, is ten miles to the southeast. Ferry boats ply between these points, too. Scilla, Faro, Catona, Pellaro, Scalitta and Gallati are minor towns on the shores of the straits.

"The historical records of Messina and the neighboring settlements contain many accounts of bombardments, raids and piratical descents during the Punic and Roman wars, and ravaging expeditions by Goths, Normans and Saracens, while earthquakes prior to the latest tragedy left their indelible scars from time to time, particularly in 1783. Nor has the plague spared this region. In 1740 Messina alone lost 40,000 of her population by disease, while 114 years later cholera removed 16,000.

"Homer did not accord a definite habitation for his terrible sea creatures Scylla and Charybdis, but mariners familiar with the perils of the rocks on the Italian side of the straits and with the strong eddies near the harbor of Messina saw in the mythical monsters an explanation of such dangers. Scylla was supposed to be a horrible creature with six heads and a dozen feet, who barked like a dog. She dwelt in a lofty cave from which she rushed whenever a ship tried to pass beneath, and she would snatch the unlucky seamen from the rigging or as they stood at the helm endeavoring to guide their vessels through the perilous passages. Charybdis dwelt under a rock only a bowshot away from the opposite shore. The second creature sucked in and blew out seawater three times a day, and woe to the ship caught in the maelstrom of its mouth!

Poets who came after the great Greek bard embroidered the legend to suit their fancy. Ovid, for example, described Scylla as a beautiful daughter of a sea god who incurred the jealousy of one of the immortals and was changed into a sea monster. A second transformation made her a rock perilous to navigators. Some poets described Charybdis as an old woman who seized and devoured cattle of Hercules, and in punishment for this act the demigod's father, all-powerful Zeus, cast her into the sea, where her appetite persisted, but her taste changed from cattle to ships and seamen.

From Emeric to America.

The name America, as you may know, comes from Amerigo, Vespucci's Christian name. And Amerigo comes from Emeric. One would scarcely expect the name of Emeric, the name of a pious Hungarian prince of the eleventh century, who was made a saint, to take the form of Amerigo in Italian, and of Amory and Emery in English. The name in German, says the Indianapolis News, but little changed from the original, is Emmerich. This obscure Hungarian saint has been a person of consequence in this world, for from his name has come that of this great continent. In the Fifteenth century, in the Italian form of Amerigo, it was bestowed upon an Italian navigator, surnamed Vespucci, and this continent, by a still further mutilation of the name, came to be known as America. When King Stephen of Hungary was choosing a name for his son, he could scarcely have imagined that the name chosen was to be the parent of the word America, and that poor old Christopher Columbus was thereby to be despoiled of a recognition that is far from being compensated for by the term Columbia.

Canton's City of the Dead.

In Canton, about eighty miles from Hongkong, there is a place known as the City of the Dead. There are 194 small houses, in each of which a corpse is lodged, at the rate of $25 for the first three months, and then at a reduced rate until the geomancers employed by the relatives of the dead person decide when and where the corpse shall be buried. Silk or paper lanterns and imitation fruit are hung from the roof. There are screens in each room between the door and the coffin. Tea, fruit and any other kind of food which the dead person liked when on earth are placed on an altar before the coffin each morning. There are cardboard servants standing about to wait on him with pipes or cardboard cups of tea. There are also two handsome paper females placed there to guide his spirit on the way to heaven.

HOUSE OF HAPSBURG.

For Centuries Dominant Factor in European History.

Of the greatness of the House of Hapsburg, from a historical point of view, there is no end of. Hapsburgs have been dukes and archdukes of Austria since 1282, kings of Hungary and Bohemia since 1526, and emperors of Austria since 1804. They have also been Roman emperors, kings of Spain, and German kings, and in the reign of the Emperor Charles V., when the house reached the summit of its greatness, the Hapsburg dominions spread themselves over some of the greatest and wealthiest states of Europe.

The history of the House of Hapsburg is contemplated to the last degree; any just consideration of it would involve the writing of a very large part of European history. Nevertheless, complicated as it is, perhaps no other royal house presents such marked characteristics, or has preserved, through the centuries a general policy so unchanged and unchanging. In the early days of their history the Hapsburgs were famous for the way in which they increased their possessions by judicious marriages, and they have been famous for this ever since. It was thus that they first obtained possession of Bohemia, and it was thus also that they first obtained possession of Hungary. It was through his marriage with Mary, the daughter and heiress of Charles the Bold of Burgundy, in the fifteenth century, that Maximilian I. obtained possession of the Netherlands and other rich lands belonging to the famous duke; and in many other directions, by the same means and by other means, they added steadily to their inheritances.

The name Hapsburg, which is a variant of the older name Habichtsburg, or Hawk's Castle, was taken from the Castle of Hapsburg, built on the banks of the Aar, not far from its junction with the Rhine, by the bishop of Strasburg in 1020. The Hapsburgs, however, do not begin to come certainly into history until the closing years of the twelfth century. About that time we find one Albert styling himself Count of Hapsburg, and increasing the area of the Hapsburg lands with all the characteristic Hapsburg astuteness. Some seventy years later, a Hapsburg in the person of Rudolph, was seated on the German throne, and thence onwards they were foremost figures in European history.

Amongst the notable reverses incidental to their history in the Middle Ages must be mentioned the revolt of the Swiss. The Swiss people had chafed for many long years under the rule of the Hapsburgs, and the open struggle continued for nearly two centuries. Duke Leopold I. was defeated at Morgarten in 1315, and Leopold III. at Sempach in 1386, and so it went on, until the signing of the "Perpetual Peace," in 1474, ended the rule of the Hapsburgs in Switzerland.

It was, however, within a comparatively short time of this reverse that the House of Hapsburg had reached the height of its power. Charles V. was Emperor. He had succeeded to all the hereditary lands to the Hapsburgs, and to the power and prestige which flowed to him as head of the Holy Roman Empire was added the wealth and commerce of the Netherlands, of Spain, and of the Spanish colonies in America. In Italy, he ruled over Sardinia, Naples, Sicily and the duchy of Milan, whilst to large inherited possessions in the Netherlands he added Groningen, Gelderland and the bishopric of Utrecht. At the same time his brother Ferdinand was ruler over the Austrian archduchies and Tyrol, Bohemia, with her dependent provinces, and a considerable part of Hungary. Thus the House of Hapsburg had really only one rival in Europe, and that was the House of Valois France, and it was the Valois that the Hapsburgs measured swords so grimly, some two hundred years later, during the war of the Spanish Succession. The Austrian Hapsburgs fought long and bitterly with Louis XIV. of France for the Spanish possessions of the house, but the Grand Monarque was too strong for them, and, by the peace of Rastatt, Spain, passed from the Hapsburgs to the Bourbons.

The next great landmark in the history of the Hapsburgs is, perhaps, afforded by the reign of Maria Therese in the eighteenth century. The story of how her father, Charles VI, tried to secure her possessions; how he issued the famous Pragmatic Sanction, which declared that the Hapsburg monarchy was indivisable, and that, in default of male heirs, a female could succeed to it, how he spared no ingenuity in securing the assent of all the powers to the arrangement; how, immediately on his daughter's succession, many of these powers threw it aside, and clamored to possess themselves of Hapsburg lands, and how Maria Theresa finally triumphed, make up one of the great stories of history.

And so, by way of the treaties of Paris and Vienna after the Napoleonic wars, treaties which were highly favorable to the Hapsburgs, we come to the year 1848 and the accession of Francis Joseph. The rest is the story of yesterday.—Christian Science Monitor.

Somewhere the snipe now taps his tiny drum;
The moth goes fluttering upward from the heath;
And where no lightest foot unmarked may come
The rabbit, tiptoe, tries his shiny teeth
On luscious herbage, and with strident hum
The yellow bees fluttering from flower to flower
Scatter from dew-filled cups a sparkling shower.

The meadowsweet shakes out its feathery mass;
And zephyrs wings that stir the silent eaves,
Bearing abroad faint perfumes as they pass,
Thrill with some wondrous tale the fluttering leaves,
And whisper secretly along the grass
Where gossamers, for day's triumphal march,
Hang out from blade to blade their diamond arch.

Natural Refrigerators.

At Thompson Falls in Western Montana there is a well from which a small current of air constantly flows. In summer the air is at 35 Fahrenheit, which is about that of a scientifically constructed refrigerator.

The owner of the land on which the of tightly fitted lumber over the well well is found has built a small room which is right beside the house. In this room he keeps all the perishable food that his family uses. His store is not far away, and he built a room in the basement of that building that is connected with the well by an underground pipe. In the pipe there is a damper that can be closed or opened by means of a chain that runs up through the floor to the office above. There he keeps all the perishable merchandise that he has for sale.

The current of air is very nearly constant in temperature, says Youth's Companion. In the winter it is warmer than the outside air, and the storeroom can be used to keep articles from freezing.

No satisfactory explanation of the reason for this current of air has been found. No open passage was encountered when the well was dug, but the current seemed to come from every direction through the gravel at the bottom. At the opening in the basement of the store the force is sufficient to blow a handkerchief, held in both hands straight out, and a hat placed in the entrance of the pipe is at once blown out.—Exchange.

MODERN RUSSIA.

The first great military victory of modern Russia was gained on the bloody field of Poltava, when the army of Charles XII. of Sweden was completely defeated by the forces led by Peter the Great.

The ambitious and powerful Swedish monarch began his Russian invasion of 1707 at the head of 45,000 well trained veterans, following almost the same route as was chosen by Napoleon more than a century later.

In the first clashes he was successful, but he pursued the Russians with such haste and recklessness that his army was soon hopelessly involved in swamps and marshes. Peter reorganized his force and made his stand at Poltava, and the battle fought there on July 8, 1709, ranks among the greatest in history.

The Russian bear, often whipped, now fought ferociously. The Russians overpowered the army of Charles XII. by force of numbers. Charles XII. was wounded before the battle commenced and directed the movements of his ragged and half starved troops from a litter, in which he was carried about the field.

The Russian artillery worked havoc in the arms of the Swedish king, but Charles, with a few men, managed to escape and made his way to Turkish soil, where he found refuge from the wrath of the Czar.

A Cause of Drowning.

In swimming under a hot sun the body is submerged at a low temperature, while the full force of the sun beats on the unprotected head. To add to the obvious dangers of such a state of things the blood is forced into the head by the pumping action of the limbs in swimming, thus causing the arteries in other parts of the body to be overfilled. The consequence is often a violent headache, which may be followed by insensibility. The swimmer sinks and unless help is at hand adds another to the long list of the mysteriously drowned.

GERMANS NOW REALIZE THEY CANNOT WIN

Hindenburg Must Prove His Genius or Be Scapegoat —Fleet's Schemes.

HATE FOR BRITAIN

Foe Knows That After the War Her Competitor Will Be There.

London Cable — (Special correspondence of New York Sun)—Advices from Berlin received through neutral sources which are able to get the benefit of observations of travellers in Germany, make it pretty apparent that Von Hindenburg must presently demonstrate his claims to military genius, or else pass into the rather large category of exploded myths which this war has produced.

In Germany nearly everybody still believes that Von Hindenburg is a sort of Teutonic Napoleon. If his policies are successful he will win the renown of both a Bismarck and a Von Moltke; indeed, he is being credited now with controlling the naval as well as the military policy of the country, and with a very large share in framing the civil programme.

On the other hand, in England Von Hindenburg has for a long time been looked upon as a sort of figurehead, and the belief is that the German public is somewhat the victim of a confidence game. Gen. Ludendorff is credited by the best informed people in England with the real thinking power in the whole German military scheme. Certain it is that Ludendorff is highly respected by most British military men and that there is no such sentiment of fear and reverence for Von Hindenburg as was once inspired by Von Moltke and by Napoleon.

Why the Von Hindenburg myth should have been so seriously propagated and built up is explained by men who know most about the political conditions of Germany. They say that Von Hindenburg is to have the responsibility, and that if he fails the failure can be credited to him, while the house of Hohenzollern sidesteps the responsibility.

CHANGE IN VIEW.

The idea of Germany winning a great victory has been pretty rapidly going out of the conception of Germans who are informed about conditions. As they view it now the game from this time on must be one partly military and partly diplomatic; a game of fixing along and utilizing every opportunity of whatever sort, in the hope of getting as satisfactory a peace as may be. The Germans have a [illegible] more confidence in their military than in their diplomatic organization, consequently it has been the part of discretion to put forward a distinctly military man at this time.

Whether the real military brain is that of Von Hindenburg or Ludendorff, it has got the idea that the German armies cannot be expected to conquer Germany's enemies. The latter are too numerous, their resources are too great and they have so long avoided overwhelming disaster that they have been able to pull themselves together and at last overmatch Germany.

It was this consideration that induced the German determination to defy all civilization and inaugurate the unrestricted submarine campaign. The one enemy that Germany particularly feared was Great Britain, whose great wealth and productive power, taken together with the inaccessibility of her territory, made her the mainstay of the Entente Allies. Great Britain could not be invaded, and the Zeppelin raids had been thoroughly tried out in the unsuccessful effort to demoralize her industrial organization.

Ever since the early stages of the war it seemed to have been a sort of German policy always to keep England in fear of a possible invasion. Nobody knew whence the story came, nor how it suddenly got circulation everywhere in London. The story was that a descent on the English east coast was imminent. Everything was prepared for it. A great fleet of transports had been brought together by the Germans and troops had been prepared for the invasion.

SCHEME OF INVASION.

It was alleged that at the proper time a small number of transports outside the shelter of an invading expedition, would put off [illegible]. Covered by the high seas fleet, and surrounded by a great stream of destroyers and submarines, the dash would be made toward the English coast, and, of course, the British Grand Fleet would have to come out of its base in the Orkneys and give battle.

The Germans, to continue describing this alleged plan, counted on their submarines and destroyers and Zeppelins to work havoc with the British fleet and ultimately even if a victory were not secured, to force it or draw it away from the line on which the invasion was to be attempted. Then, when the sea route was cleared, the real transport fleet, numbering perhaps 100 or more vessels, would end [illegible] and make the desperate dash for England.

As most recently circulated in this country this story was so complete as to contain even the approximate date on which the invasion was to be undertaken.

There was no invasion, and probably there was no plan for one. Such canards are commonly attributed to German inspiration, with the motive of keeping England nervous and preventing the transfer of all her available forces to fields of war outside the United Kingdom.

Early in the war this kind of strategy worried a good many people in England but it is no longer very effective. Nevertheless, it is an almost universal belief that if things go bad by sea and land this summer for Germany the war will not be allowed to end without a tremendous effort by the German navy, and very probably an effort based on some such plan as is here suggested.

It is assumed in Entente circles, and seems to be understood by the Germans as a part of the Entente policy, that if Germany is definitely defeated the Allies will take her fleet away from her. The Wilhelmstrasse would rather see the high seas fleet at the bottom of the ocean than in the possession of England and France.

KAISER'S PART IN WAR.

Just how active and important a part the Kaiser is taking nowadays in the direction of naval and military affairs is the subject of much interest and inquiry. There is a good deal of testimony that he has practically turned over all military authority to the General Staff, and by his own desire is less and less consulted. Matters which formerly were required to be referred to him before action should be taken are said now to be determined by the military chiefs without his interposition.

On the other hand the Kaiser is represented as taking a constantly increasing interest in what may be called the social questions of the war. He frequently sends for and interviews nurses, surgeons, physicians, civil officers who have been dealing with problems of food, distribution and supplies, industrial leaders, financiers and captains of enterprise.

One nurse who had served in hospitals in Russia was questioned at great length about conditions in that country, the feelings of the people about the war, whether young men were still employed on the police forces of the city and such lines of investigation. To the men of business and affairs in his own country the Kaiser has devoted much time and consideration to problems of reconstruction after the war.

He seems to have become obsessed with the idea that even if Germany is fated to lose he will be absolved from responsibility which will be shunted off on the shoulders of the military clique.

Then he will be able to appear as the patron saint of industry and enterprise, the advance agent of prosperity, the little father to his afflicted people and build himself up once more in their confidence and affection.

On this side of the water nearly everybody has given up speculating about the strange processes of the German community mind. It is apparently pretty well established now that as long as five or six months ago the Kaiser yielded his assent to the policy of submarine frightfulness, being moved by the argument that this was the only way to break England.

It might prove a desperate measure, but Germany's situation was desperate and would continue so as long as England should be permitted to keep her own soil and people and industries [illegible] from the war, feeding up the resources of her empire to her allies while herself able also to maintain her control of the seas and to contribute five millions of soldiers who could be utilized in whatever way [illegible] needed them.

The Kaiser is depicted as being in complete harmony with the universal sentiment of German hatred toward England. He looks upon her allies as accomplices who have been duped. In his view, the only complete and utterly disastrous conclusion of the war that could now overtake Germany would be to have England emerge unscathed, still in possession of her navy, of her supremacy in merchant marine and able to carry through without bankruptcy.

People who have had the best opportunities to analyze this German state of mind say that the German bureaucracy believes that France never was a dangerous rival to Germany in the industrial and commercial field, and will come out of the war far more weakened than Germany, even though the nominal result should be a French victory and a German defeat.

As to Russia, the Germans treat her with perfectly frank contempt; she cannot possibly be organized into the status of a real rival to Germany in any of the chosen fields of German enterprise.

But with England it is very different. Unless England can be broken the Germans realize that she will come out of the war stronger than ever and that her power will not be used sparingly when it comes to the paying terms from Germany.

257 Guns, 227 Trench Mortars, 470 Machine Guns.

London Cable — "During the Month of April," says the official report from British headquarters in France to-night, "we have taken in the course of our offensive operations 19,343 German prisoners, including 393 officers. In the same period we also captured 257 guns and howitzers, including 98 heavy guns and howitzers, 227 trench mortars and 470 machine guns. In addition to these we captured many of the enemy's guns, howitzers, trench mortars and machine guns have been destroyed by our artillery fire.

"Marked activity in the air continued yesterday and during the night. In the air fighting eight German machines were brought down by our aeroplanes, two of which fell in our lines; nine others were driven down out of control. Another hostile machine was shot down. Nine of our aeroplanes are missing."

The afternoon report said: "We made a successful raid last night north of Ypres, and captured a few prisoners. Elsewhere there was nothing of special importance."

STREET RIOTS IN PETROGRAD

Bombs Thrown, and General Killed On Monday.

May Day, However, Passed Off Quietly.

Petrograd Cable — There were street disorders here yesterday during which bombs were thrown.

Major General Kashtalinski was killed.

The executive committee of the Workmen's and Soldiers' delegates to-day placarded the city with the following proclamation:

"Yesterday many regrettable incidents occurred in the capital, notably an unknown young man killed General Kashtalinski. Shots were fired on a group of political demonstrators and bombs were thrown.

"Some individuals, posing as members of the executive committee, arrested landed proprietor Lodyjenski.

"Only madmen or enemies of national liberty are capable of such revolting acts, which might compromise the Russian revolution. The executive committee condemns them severely, and appeals to all citizens to prevent a repetition of such acts as would provoke anarchy and a disorganization of the forces of the revolution."

QUIET ON MAY DAY.

Petrograd Cable — The Russian capital to-day inaugurated its first great May Day fete without fear of opposition from any reactionary quarter. The weather was beautiful and numberless processions passed along the streets throughout the day.

Everything passed off in perfect order, although 1,000,000 persons participated in the parades. The Government had proclaimed the day a general holiday and all the Government offices, and even the restaurants in the city were closed.

SUBMARINE AS LEVER TO PEACE

Germans Are Relying On U-Boat to Beat Britain.

Down On Austria for Apparent Weakening.

London Cable — A despatch to The Daily Chronicle from Amsterdam says:

Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg's speech, which is expected to define more fully than before the Entente war aims, will be delivered to the Reichstag, according to a telegram from Berlin, on Thursday. It is expected that he will go no little length towards satisfying the demands from nearly every German party that the country's position and attitude should be clearly defined.

Meanwhile the Austrian keenness for peace is introducing considerable friction in the relations between the Central Empires. A well-informed correspondent in Germany of The Amsterdam Tyd has in this connection something interesting to say. His statement is as follows:

"Semi-official utterances in The Vienna Fremdenblatt, which are inspired by Count Czernin regarding the desired peace without annexation, have caused great dissatisfaction in the German Centre and Conservative circles. This dissatisfaction is quite understandable when it is remembered with what firm belief these circles are animated with regard to the submarine war, which, they think, will bring Britain on her knees in a few months. Even if these circles do not believe any longer in complete victory as they did at the beginning of the war, they still regard it as [illegible] to let Vienna [illegible] and so give evidence of a feeling [illegible]."

PREMIER TALKS TO OFFICERS

Tells Wounded of Empire Changes by War.

Praises Spirit of the Canadian Soldiers.

London Cable — Very few people in these islands and very few people in the Dominions beyond the seas realize the revolutionary changes that have taken place in the Government of the Empire, even within the past few weeks. There are at this time two Cabinets in session, each of which counsel the Crown and Canada and acts. The British War Cabinet advises the Crown with regard to measures which have to do with the prosecution of the war, as it more particularly concerns the British Isles. The Imperial War Cabinet advises his Majesty in connection with matters pertaining to the stupendous effort of the whole Empire. The Imperial War Cabinet is not to be confused with the Imperial War Council, which has no executive power."

The above formed part of the most instructive, eloquent address delivered yesterday by Premier Borden to the convalescent Canadian officers at the Perkins Bull hospital. Sir Robert said he was proud to have the privilege of addressing men who had responded to the call of honor and suffered in the cause of liberty. General Smuts had recently mentioned that Canada has already sent overseas a much larger army than the whole Empire sent to South Africa. General Smuts had also stated that what was more important to the army than equipment or resources was the object for which it was fighting.

"The manhood of Canada is going forth to war that the liberties of man be saved and democracy maintained against the assault of autocratic militarism. The spirit of the Canadian soldiers is a beautiful thing. It cannot be that Canada, as a nation, will escape the ennobling influence of this splendid moral force. I do not think we realize the momentous events transpiring or the responsibility that belongs to each and everyone of us to play a noble part."

Continuing, Sir Robert outlined the momentous changes occurring in the administration of the affairs of the Empire, a league of independent nations, each responsible to the same Crown. The British Parliament, in future, will pay attention to matters peculiar to the British Isles, as will the Canadian Parliament to matters Canadian and the Ontario Legislature to Ontario affairs. All these Governments are responsible to the same Crown. A great Imperial Parliament will deal with the affairs of the Empire.

180 PRISONERS IN ROCK CAVE

German Positions Are of Strongest Character.

No Big Fighting On Western Front.

With French Army, Cable — Prisoners were still being brought in to-day as a result of yesterday's French success between Reims and Moronvilliers, and two fierce, though unsuccessful, German counter attacks to the northeast of Mont Haut.

Combatants who have taken part in the recent fighting declare that the German positions are of the strongest character and the resistance most obstinate. A French assaulting wave of infantry found a deep cavern at the foot of a steep cliff in Chivy Ravine, west of Craonne, into which the Grenadiers threw grenades while their comrades continued to advance up the slope.

When they arrived at the top they observed a column of smoke pouring out of a hole on the summit of the plateau, and soon afterwards a crowd of Germans, numbering about 200 in all, came out, having climbed 150 steps through a chimney cut in the solid rock from the cavern below. The French scaled the cliff quick—quicker than the Germans had gone up the stairs and they took all the Germans prisoner.

A German officer was caught while in the act of telephoning to his headquarters. He surrendered, holding his arms up with the telephone receiver in one hand.

BRITISH REPORT.

The official report from British headquarters in France to-night reads:

"An enemy [illegible] party was driven off, with loss, early this morning, north of Atrecourt-en-Gohelle. During the day the artillery was active on both sides, north of the Scarpe and in the neighborhood of Ypres.

"Many air fights occurred again yesterday. Ten German aeroplanes were brought down, one of which fell in our lines. Six other hostile machines were driven down out of control by our aeroplanes. A seventh was shot down in our lines by gunfire. Four of our machines are missing."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable — Wednesday's official statement says:

"The two artilleries were [illegible] particularly in the regions northwest of Rheims and in Champagne, in the sectors of Moronvilliers and Auberive. An isolated operation gained ground for us in the wood west of Mont Cornillet."

HEAVY AIR LOSS DURING APRIL

Enemy Lost 366 Planes, and Allies 348.

Greatest Month Since the War Began.

London Cable — The Times says seven hundred and fourteen aeroplanes were brought down on the western front in April. There has not been a month of such fighting since the war began, and the losses never reached such a tremendous figure. July ranked first when the allied offensive on the Somme began, there were [illegible] British, French and German machines brought down, and the figure was 189 in August. In September, when the losses reached the highest mark, it was [illegible].

This total of 714, which is compiled from the daily communiques of the British, French and German headquarters, is made up as follows:

German machines	366
British	147
French-Belgian (with the necessary qualification that the German claims are trustworthy)	201

ACTIVE ON STRUMA FRONT.

London Cable — The following official report from the Macedonian front was given out here to-day:

"On the Struma front the enemy artillery showed increased activity against our positions at Nevolen and Karajakoi Zir. On the Doiran front an enemy aeroplane was shot down in flames, falling in our lines."

HUN BIG GUNS' EYES ARE GONE

Allied Fliers Have Rendered German Planes Useless.

Foe Machines Rarely Cross Lines Now.

Washington Report — How the British and French are maintaining practical control of the air over the western battle front was graphically described here to-day by Major L. W. B. Rees, of the British Flying Corps, who himself once routed single-handed a squadron of ten German raiders, and is one of the few Englishmen to receive both the Victoria Cross and the Military Cross.

While the Allied operations are conducted almost entirely beyond the German lines, the Major said, the German machines now cross over the Allied lines only rarely in raiding parties. The British fly on three levels, he explained, with three kinds of machines. The lowest are the artillery directors, who circle about in big figure eights about 6,000 feet above the enemy trenches and flash back directions to the British gunners by wireless. Above them at 10,000 feet are the heavy fighters with two men to a machine and able to keep the air for four hours at a speed of 110 miles per hour. At a height of 15,000 feet are the single man light fighters, capable of 130 miles and of ascending the first 10,000 feet in ten minutes.

The Germans, Major Rees said, have given up all attempts to guide their artillery by airplane and seek only to smash up the Allied reconnaissance over their lines. Their machines are largely of one class, therefore, fast heavy fighters, generally biplanes which are continually seeking to sweep down on the British artillery observers and send them to the ground before the British fighting patrols can reach them. Recently, however, he said, the Germans had developed another light fighting machine, which by climbing to 20,000 feet, seeks to overtop the British light fighters and clear them out.

British losses have been running recently as high as thirty to forty machines a day because of the extraordinary chances taken over the enemy's lines, according to the Major. As a rule they go out in squadrons of six, divide into three pairs and prepare to swoop down in unison on any German machine that may come on.

Major Rees gave it as his opinion that the British had defeated the Germans in every way in the air and deprived them of invaluable reconnaissance power. The Zeppelin, he said, is now practically useless as a military weapon. Raids over undefended places in England still continue occasionally, but the defences of fortified towns are so powerful that it is almost certain destruction for a Zeppelin to come near them. They are practically never used near the battle line.

Germany's whole artillery observation, Major Rees declared, is conducted by means of captive balloons. A short time ago the British and French made a combined attack at 4 p.m. and knocked down every captive balloon from the North Sea to Switzerland. Not for three days did another balloon appear in sight, he said.

Major Rees stated that the purpose of his coming to Washington with the war mission was largely to tell the American aviation experts of the results of England's two and a half years of experience in flying. All the patents and designs used in British machines, he said, would be available for the Government, with any other information in the possession of the British Flying Corps.

EMPIRE COUNC L FOR REPRISALS

Backed Up Allies' Late Raid On Freiburg.

No More Unless Hospital Ships Suffer.

London Cable — [illegible] the Government [illegible] the question of the recent bombing of Freiburg by French [illegible] of retaliation for [illegible] by the German [illegible]. The [illegible] declared there was a strong feeling throughout the entire country against such reprisals.

Earl Curzon of Kedleston, member of the War Council, replying for the Government, said that after the [illegible] outrage against the hospital ship Asturias the War Cabinet had decided to execute the threat of reprisals made in January.

"We consulted the French upon the matter," Earl Curzon continued, "and they heartily approved of the step, and expressed a desire to co-operate. [illegible] was then decided to carry out the bombing raid on Freiburg. The Government, moreover, consulted the Imperial War Conference, which also concurred, and it was also decided that no reprisals would be undertaken after this, if the Germans spared their attacks on hospital ships.

It was too early, Earl Curzon added, to say whether the reprisal had been successful, but there was evidence that it had a salutary effect. He said the French had announced they would take back German prisoners on their hospital ships.

An official British Admiralty statement issued recently said in consequence of German submarine attacks on British hospital ships, a large squadron of British aeroplanes had carried out a reprisal bombardment the previous Saturday on the German town of Freiburg, and that many bombs had been dropped, with good results.

The following day the Berlin War Office said eleven persons had been killed and 27 injured in the air raid.

TOLL OF SUBS. FOR ONE WEEK WAS 51 SHIPS

British Admiralty Believes Maximum Reached—Hope for U. S. Aid.

AMERICA WARNED

Conference of Governors to Take Message to States—Working On Defence.

London, May [illegible] — Commenting on the weekly submarine return which is much the same as last week, the Admiralty officials said that while the situation was undoubtedly serious, they considered that the Germans had probably reached their maximum of destructiveness. It is reckoned they can turn out from two to three new submarines a week and for a time the navy had been able with its counter-measures to keep pace with that. Great importance is attached to the co-operation of the United States navy in the submarine [illegible] and all the experience of the British Admiralty is being put freely at the disposal of Admiral Sims. It is hoped that American ingenuity will throw fresh light on the difficult problem. One trouble lies in getting shipmasters to follow the Admiralty instructions, and some losses are ascribed to their refusal to sail without lights at night. Naval officials have also received with gratitude splendid catches of deep-sea fish killed by mine explosions.

The announcement says:

"Arrivals of all nationalities, over 100 tons, 2,716; sailings, 2,690.

"British merchantmen sunk by submarines or mines, over 1,600 tons, including three not previously recorded, 38; under 1,600 tons, including one not previously reported, 13.

"British vessels unsuccessfully attacked, including two not previously recorded, 24.

"British fishing vessels sunk, including two not previously recorded, 8."

WASHINGTON ALIVE TO MENACE.

Washington, May 2 — The enormous inroads on the world's shipping made by German submarines within the last few weeks has brought to American Government officials a full realization of the disaster that faces the United States and the allies if the undersea warfare is not checked.

Governors and state representatives—here to-day for the national defence conference—will take home to their people a message from the Government emphasizing the menace to America and urging that there must be the fullest co-ordination by the states in war preparation if Germany is to be defeated.

Secretary Lane told the conference that the great destruction of ships was threatening the existence of Great Britain and France and menacing the United States. No one, he said, knew the exact number of ships lost recently but estimates put last week's submarine toll at 400,000 tons. Later he explained that his estimate probably was too high.

Secretary Lansing in a statement during the day declared the seriousness of the submarine situation could not be exaggerated, and that it was time the country awoke to the facts. Reports to the State Department give a total of eighty vessels lost in one week, figures much higher than any contained in recent British announcements.

The British mission [illegible] that the rate of destruction in recent weeks had continued unchanged and that it showed no alarming increases. All members agree the situation is critical, however, and that the combined shipbuilding facilities of the world can [illegible] the [illegible] if their output is [illegible].

[illegible] the Government's [illegible] a more direct [illegible] the country's shipping and shipbuilding facilities. Chairman Denman of the Shipping Board [illegible] estimates had reached the board [illegible] of shipping sunk in one week.

The present world's ship tonnage is estimated at less than 30,000,000 tons. [illegible] the entire loss in tonnage due [illegible] was put at a little more than [illegible] tons, or some 162,000 tons a month.

Experts in the Federal department [illegible] are working night and day on electrical devices with which it is hoped to combat the submarine.

Ottawa Cable — A return tabled in the Commons to-day by the Minister of Militia shows that there are now 2,018 temporary and permanent employees in the Militia Department. In 1911 the number was only 103. War business accounts for the increase. Some of the new branches include the following: Separation allowance and record office 642, [illegible] branch 21.

Sunday is Mother's Day. Wear a carnation in honor of her.

The Dominion Minister of Agriculture says the Provincial Minister is responsible for the potato shortage, but this won't relieve the former from responsibility. Why not fix the price of potatoes, since he knows there are still a million bushels being held for the long price?

Southampton is leading the smaller towns in the way of production. The council there has ordered the plowing up of the park, which consists of five acres, and plots are being allotted to any who will plant and hoe Mr C. M. Bowman showed a fine spirit, when he purchased 125 bushels of seed potatoes, and is offering them to the townspeople they to be paid for in the fall. The bushel for bushel idea is catching on And won't it be a good thing when it catches on in many more places?

Produce! Produce! Of course produce! But the men who are swinging their arms and shouting these commands to the people of the country, might figure out how they also can do a little service which will help the Empire. The Times notes that whiskey is still being made in this country. Can our legislators who are shouting their lungs out about what the farmers should do, give us any good reason why wheat or potatoes should be used for making whiskey, and we are informed that much of these things are being used. We do not need liquor at all, and the people have practically proved that since last September. Produce! of course. Produce all we can. But we submit that the governments, both Provincial and Federal might occupy a little time in endeavoring to conserve the foodstuffs after they have been raised.

Hilton R. Campbell M. A., B. D., as their minister in succession to the Rev. D. M. Matheson, called last October to Stellarton, N. S. Mr. Johnston of Shallow Lake presided. Mr. Jones, of Arran, led the devotions and preached a very appropriate sermon from Isa' 6: 1—3. Mr. Thompson, of Wiarton, gave a most impressive address to the new minister and Mr. Pilkey to the congregation, after which Mr. Campbell was cordially greeted and welcomed by all present, personally; and a substantial reception provided by the hospitality of the ladies of the congregations was partaken of and much enjoyed. Allenford and Elsinore are to be congratulated on securing as their minister one so well qualified and who has already had three years successful experience in the ministry. Mr. Campbell's former charge was in Emporium, Pennsylvania, and he is a graduate in theology of Princeton Seminary in the U. S. A.

It is notable that many of our farmers are purchasing autos this year. The days are fast passing when farmers can afford to take a day or half day to do the shopping. This is also making a problem for storekeepers. With the use of a car the average farmer is doing business more rapidly, gives his orders quickly and expects prompt service.

Mother

Every day is Mother's Day. We never knew a day without mother, and thank God we never shall. Back as far as memory carries us we find her. She was the first person we came to know. Her face bent over the cradle was the first we heard in the morning and the last we heard at night. As we grew through boyhood and girlhood, she was always there; there to wipe away the tears, to pick the thorns from our fingers, to kiss the bruises, to mend our torn garments, to cook for us wash for us, pray for us.

When we left the old home, hers was the last face we saw as we turned the bend in the road. She stood shading her tear-dimmed eyes with her hand, looking, looking and still praying.

We came back home and went again she was always mother.

No words exist that can define her. It were sacrilege to attempt it. We can liken her to nobody and to nothing. She stands alone. There is but one greater—God.

Is she still there as we have always known her? Then happy son, happy daughter! Is she only a memory! Then blessed possession for still she is ours! Death cannot take her from us the years are powerless to blot out her image. As we sink into our long sleep her dear face will look into ours.

So like unto God is she that we tremble with awe at possession of her almost all the terms of our Christian vocabulary are interpreted in that blessed word, Mother. Do you ask me what hope is? I think of mother. Do you ask me what faith is? I think of Mother. Do you ask me what love is? I answer Mother.

Her presence and her memory are so interwoven with all the best that we think and feel and purpose that to lose her would be to reduce her whole life to to ruin.

O woman, how sublime is your mission of motherhood!

No throne is so lofty as the throne of motherhood. No government wields so great a power as does the magic sceptre of motherhood. No kingdom is so secure as is the kingdom of motherhood

States change, governments perish. nations migrate, all things ebb and flow but Mother is Mother from the beginning to the end of time. She changes not. Her day is yesterday, to day and forever.—George Edward Jackson in The Continent

Think a Little

Mr. Pettypiece, the editor of the Forest Free Press, in a discussion on the Knowles bill, which is designed to prohibit the fixing and enforcement of resale prices, points out that the bill aims at something even more important. He says:

"The man who purchases a quantity of wheat, corn or oats, and pan dries or shreds it, and puts it up in packages, is not a manufacturer in the accepted sense of the term; and the idea that he should in any way control the prices at which dealers may sell these products is preposterous.

The results of such arbitrary powers, so far as these so called manufacturers have been able to exercise them, proves this. A bushel of oats, put up in 25 cent packages, costs the consumers $2.50; a bushel of wheat, in shredded form, in 12½-cent packages, costs the consumers $10; a bushel of corn, flaked in 10 cent packages, costs the consumers $11.20 At these prices the merchant has a profit of from 15 to 25 per cent, to cover all his costs of handling the goods The farmers who produced the wheat, corn, and oats probably had to sell them at a loss—more likely than at a profit The cost of putting them up in form of cereals is not more than 50 per cent, yet under the cover of a prohibitive tariff of 27 cents per package, these so called manufacturers' are enabled to charge from 200 to 600 per cent, for their little work. If 85 pounds of bread (the product of one bushel of wheat), were to cost $10, there would be a bread riot every day, and yet that is the price charged for a bushel of wheat in shredded form."

The facts are made very plain by Mr. Pettypiece. Of course, the people have it in their own control whether they buy these goods or not, but when constant complaint is heard of the high price of foodstuffs surely it is time people considered whether they were getting value for their money. We make an awful fuss if bread or milk rises a cent or two per loaf or quart, and yet we overlook the values we get for money in other lines.

For the June Weddings

What the Bride, the Groom and the Best Man Should Know.

Several June weddings are now in course of preparation here, and these are busy times, indeed, for the embryo brides and their people. Bridesmaids, flower girls, etc., are in the throes of anxiety regarding apparel and other detail. In some cases even the grooms are worrying, and prospective best men are looking upon life with a solemn eye. The issuers of marriage licenses and the clergymen are the only persons complacently rubbing their hands over it all. Hamilton's June wedding crop will be larger than ever before in the history of the city; in fact, Cupid has been exceptionally busy all over Canada.

No matter how cute we all are, there is always a time when some one else can tell us a thing or two, and such a time is when we have a wedding on our hands, regardless of how important or unimportant the part we have to play in it. Everybody we have nerve enough to appeal to gives up a different prescription, to say nothing of all the pointers we get without asking.

It was with a view to straightening these things out a bit that a good-natured representative of the Times moved around among people he thought ought to know, the sole object being a Samaritan's desire to acquire information for the needy, and present it, regardless of the trouble, time and space involved. But he found that if there are any standard dyed-in-the-wool rules covering the whole business, somebody has them hidden away.

Recognized authorities all have rules of their own, and they include many forms and ceremonies which precede, attend and follow the wedding, but they apply them on the principle of making the punishment fit the crime. Most of their forms and observances are not obligatory, and may be modified to accord with taste, social position and the attitude of the contracting parties on the question as to whether the wedding shall be a big noise or just an ordinary "quiet but pretty."

These authorities will tell you that the simplest wedding may be an exquisite affair, while the most ostentatious one may be a marked example of social ignorance, and they treat inquiries as to rules with the unsatisfying answer that it all depends upon what kind of a wedding it is to be.

Anxiety, combined with happiness, is as hard on the nerves as the other kind, and it worries the common people as much as it does others. The few pointers obtained by the Times are calculated to relieve some of these anxieties. An effort has been made to get at the procedure for church weddings. It doesn't matter if you do make a break or so at a house wedding, but you would not like to do the same before strangers.

A few rules for guiding in church weddings accompanies this article. It is prominently brought out so that no sufferer may miss it. It might be advisable to rehearse it before going to the church. In any event it will be best for all concerned to keep an eye on the clergyman all the time. He knows his business, and will guide you right by pantomime if you are attentive and not too much excited.

In the wedding ceremony itself there is really not much for anybody to do excepting the clergyman, but it seems a lot. If the accompanying directions are followed as carefully as the circumstances will permit it will be fine.

THE BEST MAN.

The "best man" must recollect that he has something else to do besides feeling nervous and uncomfortable. It is up to him to look after most of the things the groom is liable to forget. These are always numerous and unexpected and he must be prepared at any moment for a "C.Q.D." and ready with first aid. It is impossible to say what the trouble is likely to be as a bridegroom is prone to do something original at any time in the course of the ceremony. Being so busy getting married, he doesn't usually know that he is doing anything else.

But the best man has specific duties and any fellow upon whom the job is likely to be afflicted should paste the following pointers in his hat.

At the church he is to stand by his friend, who is taking the serious step, awaiting the bride. When the clergyman reaches the part of the service where the ring is mentioned, it is the duty of the best man to hand it over neatly just at that moment. This sounds simple enough, but it is simpler if care has been taken to have the charmed circle handy. Don't carry it in a pocket or you are bound to forget which pocket you put it in and will get rattled during the fumble to find it. Better hold it in the hand until the time comes to part with it. At the close of the service be ready to hand the husband his hat at the church door.

The best man is the business manager of the attraction, as far as the church end of it is concerned. He must attend to the minister's fee. Then it is up to him to see that the arrangements for the young couple's departure are smooth and that their baggage goes away on the same train that they go on. He is also expected to frown upon signs bearing the words "Yum, Yum," "We're Just Married," etc., being fastened at the rear of the carriage.

Then he must see that the happy event is properly announced in the newspapers. These few duties, combined with impromptu demands upon his services, will prove enough to constitute a busy day even for a young man who is accustomed to considerable activity.

The above few hints are not penned to scare the prospective best man, but are submitted in a Christian spirit as a help to one who is in need of some kind counsel for use on an extraordinary occasion.

It may be added that there is no established rule to prevent a benedict acting as best man, but it is not customary. It is usual for the groom to provide his best man with funds in advance for the necessary expenditures. It's better, too, that way, for, in many cases the bridegroom never has so much money afterwards.

The groom himself had best be satisfied to follow the simple instructions given in the directions "What to Do in Church." The bride is, as a rule, fairly posted on her part, and gets along well after she just gets started.

BRIDE'S FRIENDS ON LEFT.

There seems to be an unwritten law that the bride's friends should be seated on the left of the middle aisle, facing the chancel, and the bridegroom's friends on the right. This choice of position is reasonable when you come to figure it out, being occasioned by the fact that the bride walks on the left side of the aisle, both as she enters and leaves the church. She walks up the aisle on the left of the father or the gentleman who is giving her away, and descends the aisle on the bridegroom's right, and during the ordeal it is doubtless comforting to the nervous one's friends, particularly while the friends are in their most admiring and systematic frame of mind.

WHAT MEN SHOULD WEAR.

It is of no use trying to tell the bride what her gown should be like. She has likely known it for years. The groom and the best man will, however, be glad to learn that the orthodox glad rags for this kind of pastime in the morning or afternoon consist of trousers of dark grey striped material, a black Prince Albert frock coat with waistcoat to match, or of white pique or duck, a white silk or pearl grey scarf, kid gloves to match and a high silk hat. There is, however, no law compelling a man to follow this out literally, but that is what they all do in the first families. At a morning wedding a cutaway coat is sometimes worn, but the rest is the same.

For evening weddings the regulation swallow tail outfit is the correct thing.

Bridegrooms should get the ring a day or two before the wedding, and thus be sure of avoiding the unpleasantness of having no ring when the time comes. His best man should help him to look after this important detail, for their mutual benefit. The groom should also get the marriage license a day or so ahead. He will have to visit an official issuer of marriage licenses. There are lots of them. The license costs two dollars, and has a big seal on it.

As to the gifts to the bride and the happy young ladies who are helping the good work along, the groom should take his intended into his confidence. She can do it better than he can.

BE READY IN TIME.

The bride's friends should let the minister know in plenty of time when it is going to be, and in order to avoid waiting at the church and possibly delaying another wedding, should see that the young lady is properly fixed up on the day of the wedding some time before the appointed time for leaving for the church. This is said to be one of the most difficult things in connection with a wedding. Excitement and many cares come into the family of a prospective bride for weeks before the ceremony, but the climax is in that last awful hour. The bride should be allowed to cry a little if she wants to. That will keep her from fretting about anything else.

THE INVITATIONS.

The girls should see to the sending out of invitations at least a couple of weeks ahead of the ceremony. This will give invited ladies a chance to change their minds a few times as to what they had better wear and to worry people in regard to the choice of a present.

As to the wording of the invitation, tell the printer candidly that you are not used to getting married, and ask him to put you next to the real thing. He will have just what you need in his samples, and will be tickled to death to oblige you.

The reception at the house after the ceremony can generally look pretty well after itself until the happy couple are on their way. There are established forms, but they are rarely followed, and directions would be futile.

WHAT TO DO IN CHURCH.

Bridegroom and best man go to the church together.

Bridesmaid, flower girl, etc., go in carriages ahead of that of the bride and await her arrival in the church vestibule.

Bride goes in a carriage with the relative who is to give her away.

This is about the right way for the bridal procession to enter:

Clergyman comes first from the vestry and is immediately followed by the bridegroom and best man.

Bridegroom stands towards the left of the clergyman, a little in advance of the best man, facing the guests, awaiting the bride.

Bridesmaids then enter at once and approach by centre aisle in advance of the bride.

Bride follows, leaning on the arm of her nearest male relative.

Bridesmaid takes her place at chancel steps to the left of where bride will stand.

Bridegroom meets the bride and leads her forward to the place before the clergyman.

Best man takes position at right of bridegroom a few steps back.

Father of bride, or person acting in his stead, stands back and awaits the moment when he is to give away the bride, when he advances, takes her right hand, places it in that of the clergyman, who places it in the right hand of the bridegroom.

Best man gives ring to the bridegroom, who passes it to the bride, and she gives it to the clergyman, who returns it to the bridegroom to place on the third finger of the bride's left hand.

Bride's father or other relative may then retire to a front pew.

The ceremony over, the newly married, after signing the register, lead the way down the aisle, the bride taking the right arm of her husband.

Best man must not overlook attending to the minister's fee.

Organist should play while guests are assembling, softly during responses, and the wedding march after the blessing.

THE BEST WAY

To Attend to a Few Little Household Problems.

To cure feet blistered from long walking, rub them with spirits mixed with tallow on going to bed.

A delightful deodorizing disinfectant for a sick room is made by putting ground coffee in a saucer with a small piece of gum camphor in the middle. Light the camphor with a match and as it burns the coffee will be consumed, at the same time throwing off an agreeable odor.

An old embroidery hoop with a square of cheese cloth makes a very handy and sanitary strainer. The cheese cloth can be washed immediately after use and replaced in the hoop so that it forms a bag without trouble.

Old silk gloves kept on hand are exceedingly useful when mending silk stockings. A square cut from the [illegible] and neatly sewn in the heel saves that portion which is usually first to wear out.

A clean, damp sponge is quite useful to have near the ironing board on ironing day. Nothing is better for sponging thin articles.

To preserve their flavor and keep your hands from being stained, boil parsnips, oyster plant and like vegetables with their skins on.

The simple remedy for dandruff and falling hair is salt water; the scalp should merely be moistened with it by applying it with the finger tips.

SEEN IN THE SHOPS OF PARIS

A lace band is used in the hair in place of the more common ribbon one.

Taffetas, crepes, satins and Turkish towelling are equally in the foremost march of fashion.

Mechlin lace is much worn just now and appears on many of the smartest evening gowns.

Accordion pleating has been revived, and many of the newest skirts are treated in this manner.

The panier gown is being vigorously exploited, but its ultimate success is by no means certain.

Many hats are trimmed with a color which is repeated in the hose worn with the smartest suits.

Nearly all the new parasols have a nineteenth century air about them and are flounced or fringed.

Stockings are frequently inlet with real lace, and this again even embroidered with beads or jewels.

Touches of wool and silk embroidered are seen on some of the new girdles.

The linen of this summer is soft and drapes as well as the new woollen materials, making exceedingly pretty models.

It is a fad nowadays to make the sleeve begin low down on the shoulder, the actual shoulder seam being still missing.

Scalloped edges are a feature of the season, and are met with on taffeta frocks, lingerie, laces and embroidery.

Suits are almost invariably relieved with lace or lingerie, but lace plays the greatest role in the season's fashions.

The Byron collar is now in vogue, and the Byron cascade of lace is now a delightful variation of the old-fashioned fichu.

Some gowns feature the leg o' mutton sleeve. They fit the arm snugly and have a frill of lace falling over the hands.

In general, it may be said that sleeves are becoming larger.

Sheer linen and cotton fabrics, having small motifs or fancy borders in open English eyelet embroidery, are charming.

Although richly colored gowns are popular, large numbers of smart women are adopting the black gown in serge or silk.

Strictly tailored street suits of brocaded taffeta are shown among the newest models.

Hats with pancake crowns and double brims and little or no trimming are featured.

Belts of patent leather, soft morocco and suede are all modish. They are rather narrow.

An entirely new fabric is a fine, thin white wool with a border of khaki-colored ratine.

The long sprays of osprey, which form the only ornament of the pearl and gold caps for evening coiffures, are worn discreetly in front instead of at the side.

NO OPERATION WAS EVER NEEDED HERE

Because Mrs. Goodine Used Dodd's Kidney Pills

Doctor Said She Would Have to Undergo Operation, but Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

Central Kingsclear, York Co., N. B., May 27.—(Special.)—"The doctor said I would have to undergo an operation." So said Mrs. J. V. Goodine, of this place. But she smiled as she made the remark, for all need of the dreaded operation had vanished. Mrs. Goodine used Dodd's Kidney Pills and is a well woman. Given in brief and in her own words, Mrs. Goodine's experience is as follows:

"I was very miserable with Kidney Disease and unable to do my own work. The doctor said I would have to undergo an operation. After using three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills I was all better and able to do my work. This statement is true, as you can easily prove by inquiring among my neighbors."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys; cured kidneys strain all the poisons and other causes of disease out of the blood. Thus Dodd's Kidney Pills are a natural cure for all Kidney diseases and all the ills caused by diseased kidneys.

BEAR WITH A THIRST.

There are probably a number of men in Maine who remember the tame bear that used to live in Bellington in days when lumbering was booming in that section. This bear was a 300 pounder, kind and docile, but the possessor of one bad habit. That was the penchant for intoxicating liquor.

Now and then the lumbermen would get the bear drunk, which was an exceedingly easy thing to do. Bruin preferred rum, but would drink whiskey if nothing better was at hand. In the morning after a night's debauch he frequently had a fearful "morning after thirst," which he learned to quench by turning the faucet outside the main cabin, when he would lap the water very eagerly from that spilt from the main camp.

No attempts were made at reformation, although it was not stated that the animal filled a drunkard's grave. As a matter of fact he lived at the camps for a number of years without harming a person, although some of the men were often on antagonistic terms at times.—From the Maine Woods.

Man wants but little here below, but he wants it right away.

THIRD DEGREE.

New Ways of Securing an Admission of Guilt From Criminals.

What is believed to have been the first demonstration in a court of justice of the Munsterberg theory of criminal detection by heart pulsations took place not long ago in a Californian court. The demonstration ended in the discharge of Arthur Smith, a metal worker, who had been arrested as a suspicious character.

The officials believed that the man, who when arrested gave the name of James Smithers, was an ex-convict. Failing in their efforts to identify him through the regular channels, says Case and Comment, they decided to apply the Munsterberg theory.

The theory and the proposed test were explained to the prisoner, who readily consented to be a party to the experiment. The stethoscope was adjusted and his normal pulse was tested and found to be seventy-nine beats a minute.

Certain words were then spoken to the prisoner, who was asked to reply to each with a word suggested by the one asked. This was done for the purpose of testing the claim of Prof. Munsterberg that words spoken to men under arrest, especially those pertaining to the crime with which they might be charged, would cause them embarrassment in answering and would produce accelerated action of the heart.

The word San Quentin, where the prisoner was suspected of having served a term, caused no acceleration of the heart and demonstrated his innocence according to the theory.

When interrogated as to his assumed name of James Smithers his heart action increased to ninety-one beats a minute. On being charged with not having told the truth in this particular the prisoner gave his correct name and address.

If an actual photograph of the heart action is desired it may be obtained by the aid of a machine which Dr. E. A. Newton, a German scientist, is said to have invented. It portrays accurately the pulsations of the heart muscles and the action of the valves and discloses all irregularities, however slight. Accelerated action of the heart resulting from the emotion of fear arising from guilt would be disclosed in a characteristic series of leaps and bounds which are quite diverse from the pulsations due to the influence of love or joy.

A New York dentist advocates laughing gas as a substitute for the police third degree. He believes that this, the least dangerous of anaesthetics, lays open what already is in the mind, unconscious of the search for its secrets. He believes that if a man who has committed a serious crime should be questioned about it during a certain stage of recovery from nitrous oxide, or laughing gas anaesthesia, he would not only reply and truthfully, but half a minute later he would realize fully what he had said.

An interesting experiment upon a prizefighter of international reputation, who was one of his patients, was made by the physician administering the nitrous oxide. As the patient was recovering from the anaesthetic and had reached the point where he began to break away from complete unconsciousness the physician began counting distinctly, "One, two, three," and then the patient took up the numbers, saying, "Four, five, six—I'm all right and ready," acting upon the impression that he had been knocked down in the ring and must show that he nevertheless was qualified to meet the requirements of the situation. When he had recovered he said the experience was most vivid.

It is claimed that this method can be used to extract the truth from persons charged with serious crimes, that they will make a confession under the nitrous oxide partial anaesthesia, and on recovering full control of the senses will realize what they have done and will give the full details. But no "confession" will be made if there is not guilt.

CARE OF OLD GLASS.

Sawdust as a Polisher—Potato Skins to Clean Decanters.

Antique glass which does not require mending but is dim and lustreless may be made to shine and sparkle once more if it is washed in water to which a little ammonia has been added.

Soapsuds spell ruin to crystal ware, while drying it with a linen only serves to dim it still more. After having rinsed and left to soak in ammonia water, using a soft brush if the glass is cut into facets and the dirt is caught in the squares, the article should be placed into a box and covered with sawdust. After an hour it will be found that the wood dust has dried the glass and given it a bright lustre.

The old fashioned cut crystal decanters which are so rarely used nowadays, become almost hopelessly discolored when they have held old port or any wine which leaves a deposit. To clean them an old fashioned remedy is that of finely chopped potato skins with which the decanter should be filled and a cork inserted in the mouth in place of the stopper. They should be left for three days for the skins to ferment, when it should be well shaken, emptied and rinsed with clear water. The decanter should either be inverted and left to drain for a day or two or may be dried more expeditiously at the side of the stove.—From the London Evening Standard.

Famine and World-Hunger Are On Our Threshold

ONTARIO

"——in the nation's honour, heed! Acquit yourselves like men. As workers on the land, do your duty with all your strength!"
—Lloyd George.

THE CRISIS

France, England and Italy in peace times did not depend upon America but on Russia, Roumania and Bulgaria for most of their breadstuffs. With these sources closed the crisis of the hour demands that we see that our soldiers and the Motherland are fed.

Everyone in Great Britain has been put on limited rations: meat is prohibited one day a week and the making of cakes and pastry has been stopped. Further restrictions are anticipated.

Bread has gone to 28c per four-pound loaf in England, for the first time since the Crimean War.

Lord Devonport, British Food Comptroller, proposes taking authority to search the houses of Great Britain to prevent food hoarding.

Forty million men, less the casualties, are now on active service.

Twenty million men and women are supporting them by service in other war activities.

In the last analysis, the land is bearing this burden.

One million tons of food-carrying ships have been torpedoed since February 1st, 1917.

Germany's hope for victory is in the starvation of Britain through the submarine.

Canada's sons will have died in vain if hunger compels the Motherland's surrender.

The land is waiting—the plough is ready—will we make the plough mightier than the sword?

Will we help the acres to save the flag?

World-Hunger Stares Us in the Face

David Lubin, representative of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture—maintained by forty Governments—reports officially to Washington that the food grains of the world on March 31st, 1917, showed a shortage of 150,000,000 bushels below the amount necessary to feed the world until August, 1917. He declares it is beyond question that unless a greater acreage is put to crop in 1917 there will be WORLD-HUNGER before the 1918 crop is harvested.

The failure of the grain crop in the Argentine Republic, which is ordinarily a great grain-exporting nation, resulted in an embargo being placed, in March, 1917, upon the export of grains from that country to avert local famine.

The United States Department of Agriculture, in its official report, announces the condition of the fall wheat crop (which is two-thirds of their total wheat crop) on April 1st, 1917, to be the poorest ever recorded and predicts a yield of 244,000,000 bushels below the crop of 1915. The 1916 crop was poor. Even with favorable weather, the wheat crop of the United States is likely to be the smallest in thirty-five years, not more than 64% of the normal crop.

Under date of April 10th, Ogden Armour, executive head of Armour & Company, one of the world's largest dealers in food products, stated that unless the United States wishes to walk deliberately into a catastrophe, the best brains of the country, under Government supervision, must immediately devise means of increasing and conserving food supplies. Armour urged the cultivation of every available acre. The food shortage, he said, is world-wide. European production is cut in half, the Argentine Republic has suffered droughts. Canada and the United States must wake up!

Hunger Tightening His Grip

People are starving to-day in Belgium, in Serbia, in Poland, in Armenia, in many quarters of the globe.

Famine conditions are becoming more wide-spread every day.

On these alarming food conditions becoming known, President Wilson immediately appointed a Food Comptroller for the United States. He selected Herbert C. Hoover, to whom the world is indebted as Chairman of the International Belgium Relief Commission for his personal direction of the distribution of food among the starving Belgians.

Mr. Hoover is already urging sacrifice and food restrictions, for, as he states, "The war will probably last another year and we shall have all we can do to supply the necessary food to carry our Allies through with their full fighting stamina."

The Problem for Ontario

The land under cultivation in Ontario in 1916 was 365,000 acres less than in 1915.

Consider how much LESS Ontario produced in 1916 than she raised in 1915:

Other crops show as critical decline.

Reports from Ontario on the condition of fall wheat for 1917 are decidedly discouraging.

As there is an average of not more than one man on each hundred acres of farm land in Ontario, the prospects indicate even a still smaller acreage under cultivation in 1917 unless extra labor is supplied.

Food Production is the Greatest Problem the World Faces To-day

Owing to destruction by submarines, ocean ships are scarce.

It is much easier to protect shipping between Canada and England than on the longer voyages from India or Australia.

One vessel can make twice as many trips from Canada to Britain as from India, and four times as many as from Australia.

Therefore, every ton of food stuffs grown in Canada is worth to the Motherland two tons grown in India or four tons grown in Australia.

Why the Call to Canada is So Urgent

If this country does not raise a big crop this year, not only will the people of Canada suffer but the Motherland and her Allies will suffer and their military power will be weakened if not paralyzed. Therefore, the right solution of the present war problem comes back to the farm, as to a foundation upon which our whole national and international structure must be built and maintained.

The Second-Line Trenches

—McCay in The New York American.

Copyrighted by the International News Service, New York.

The farmers know that they are the last reserve, and that the soil on which crops are grown is the strategic ground on which wars are decided. To their care is entrusted the base of supplies.

To enable the farm to do the work two factors are essential. The first is Time. Whatever we are to do must be done at once. Nature waits for no man. The second is Labor. Many farmers cannot plant the acres they would because they cannot get the necessary help. Many are afraid to increase their acreage because they fear they would not be able to cultivate and harvest an unusual crop after they have raised it. If they are to do the work that is essential for them to do, the last man in each city, town and village must be mobilized at once.

Every man not on Active Service can help. In every city, town and village are men who, by their training on the farm, or by their present occupation, can readily adapt themselves to farm work. These can render no greater service to the Empire at the present time than by answering the call of the farm. Capable men and boys willing to learn should not allow their lack of farm experience to stand in the way.

Can the employer render a more signal service in this crisis than by encouraging these men to help the farmer to cultivate every available acre, and by making it easy for them to go?

Ontario's farm lands are waiting—the implements are ready—the equipment is complete—the farmer is willing—all he needs is labor.

So short is the world's food supply that without increased production many in Canada must go hungry, and even with enormously increased production we cannot expect cheap food. The world is waiting for our harvest.

If peace should be declared within a year, the food conditions will be no better, for the accumulated hunger of the Central Empires must be met. This will absorb a large part of the world's supply.

We do not know when this war shall cease. It is endless—its lengthening out has paralyzed the thought and conception of all men who thought about it and its possible time of conclusion. Three months—six months, we said; nine months, a year, we said; and yet two years and eight months have passed their long dreary and sanguinary length and there is no man who can tell how long this gigantic struggle may yet last.

Lloyd George, in a letter addressed to farmers throughout the Empire, said:

> "The line which the British Empire holds "against the Germans is held by those who WORK "ON THE LAND as well as by those who fight "on land and sea. If it breaks at any point it "breaks everywhere. In the face of the enemy the "seamen of our Royal naval and mercantile marine "and the soldiers gathered from every part of our "Empire hold our line firstly. You workers on land "must hold your part of our line as strongly. Every "full day's labor you do helps to shorten the struggle and brings us nearer victory. Every idle day, "all loitering, lengthens the struggle and makes defeat more possible. Therefore, in the nation's "honour, heed! Acquit yourselves like men, and as "workers on land do your duty with all your "strength!"

So, for the honor of Canada's soldiers in France—and for the glory of our New-born Nationhood—let it be said of Ontario's citizens that, in the hour of our greatest need, their response was worthy of their sons.

We owe a great debt to those who are fighting for us.

We Must Produce More Food

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON VII.
May 13, 1917.

Jesus the True Vine.—John 15: 1-16.

Commentary.—I. The vine and the branches (vs. 1-3). 1. I am the true vine—The grape was regarded as the king of fruits in Palestine. The vine grew luxuriantly and produced abundantly, and was a familiar object to those whom Jesus was addressing. In contrast to the vine which abounded in that country, Jesus declared that he was the true vine, the ideal vine. "The material creations of God are only inferior examples of that finer spiritual life and organism in which the creature is raised up to partake of the divine nature."—Alford. my Father is the husbandman—Jesus was constantly submissive to the Father and always honored Him. He acknowledged the Father's right to plant the vine where he would and to exercise full control. The "husbandman" is the Lord who owns the soil, cares for the vine and attends to the branches and the fruit. 2. every branch in me that beareth not fruit—It is possible for all to be vitally connected to the Vine, but not all who profess to be branches of the Vine are such in reality. Many are externally joined to Christ by baptism and profession of faith, who are not vitally joined to him. Fruitfulness is the test of this union. The branches of the Vine bear the fruits of the Spirit, some of which are love, joy, peace, meekness, goodness, temperance and faith. he taketh away—The false professor of religion will not long be suffered to deceive the world and bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. that beareth fruit—The fruit mentioned in Gal. 5: 22, 23. he purgeth it—"He cleanseth it."—R. V. The "husbandman" takes away from the branch that which is superfluous and not conducive to the highest fruitfulness. The process of pruning may seem like a process of destruction, but it results in the production of more and better fruit. He would not have their vitality wasted on trifles. 3. now ye are clean—Carrying out the figure of the vine and its branches, Jesus told the disciples that they were purged or pruned. The had been undergoing the process of pruning during the three years or more that they had been following him. They were capable of bearing fruit, but they were to be further purged and made capable of bearing more and better fruit. because of the word which I have spoken unto you (R.V.)—Jesus had given his disciples careful and full instructions with respect to their character and conduct, and his words had been effective in bringing illumination, conviction and transformation. They had been pruned through the searching, spiritual truths which he had uttered.

II. Conditions of fruitfulness (vs. 4-9). 4. Abide in me—This exhortation presupposes the fact that the disciples were in Christ as branches are in the vine. The relation is a vital one, and the responsibility for the continuance of that relation rests upon the disciples. They have power to break the connection and they have power to assume such an attitude that the relation will continue. And I in you—The branch is in the vine and the vine is also in the branch. The nature and sustenance of the vine pass into the branch, so Christians are in Christ and Christ is in them. If they abide in Him, He will abide in them. The word abide denotes permanence. It is a blessed truth that it is God's will that His people shall dwell permanently in Him. Except it abide in the vine—The connection must be vital between the branch and the vine or there is no fruit. If the branch is separated by the smallest fraction of an inch from the Vine, its fruitfulness is at an end. No more can ye. Separated from the true Vine, His life cannot flow into us and we are unfruitful. 5. He that abideth in me—To abide in Christ there must be an earnest desire for that relation, a full surrender to Him, a hearty obedience to His requirements and a constant faith in Him. Much fruit. Not only is there fruit as a product of this relation, but there is much fruit. Christ dwells within and the outward conduct, the fruit, is in full harmony with His nature. Without Me. Apart from Me.—R. V. As the branch which is severed from the vine bears no fruit, he who is separated from Christ does not produce the fruits of the Spirit. 6. If a man abide not in Me—A voluntary act. A vast responsibility is resting upon each of us. The penalty of not abiding in Christ is not simply to become unfruitful, but to be "cast forth," to become "withered," to be gathered and cast into the fire and to be burned.

7. Ye shall ask what ye will—Those who abide in Christ, keeping His commandments and constantly partaking of His nature, desire nothing which is not in His will to bestow, and their asking is always in full submission to His will. It shall be done unto you—Thus abiding in Christ, they have the assurance of answered prayer. 8. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit. The earthly husbandman rejoices when his vineyard produces good fruit in abundance and he naturally feels that his skill and labor are being rewarded. The Lord is glorified in the abundant spiritual fruit which Christians bear. He manifests His pleasure by giving His approval to them. So shall ye be my disciples—Abiding in Christ and bearing much fruit are conditions of discipleship. These conditions are not to be thought of as hard. They are not. The natural result of being vitally joined to Christ is the bringing forth of much fruit. An infinite honor is conferred upon us when Jesus accepts us as His disciples. 9. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you—This is a marvelous statement of the measure and the quality of Christ's love for us. It is true, warm, personal, seeking our best good, unfailing. When we wish to know how much Jesus loves us, let us remember how much the Father loves His only begotten Son.—Peloubet. There can be no stronger expression of Christ's love for His followers than this. This should be a constant comfort to us, whatever may be the trial or perplexity from which we suffer. Continue ye in My love—Abide ye in My love.—R. V. The same Greek word is used here as in v. 7.

III. Kinds of fruit (vs. 10-16). 10. If ye keep my commandments—This is a condition of continuing in Christ's love. Jesus continues to use the relation which exists between the Father and himself to illustrate the relation existing between himself and his disciples. Jesus was submissive to the Father. It was his meat and drink to do his will. It must be the first duty of the disciples to be fully and constantly obedient to Christ's commands. 11. These things have I spoken—Jesus had a definite purpose in using the illustration of the vine and the branches and enlarging upon it. This verse is the conclusion of the illustration. That my joy might remain in you—He desired that his disciples should have constantly the same joy in doing his will that he himself had in doing his Father's will. Although within a few hours of the cross, yet Jesus speaks of his joy. His was the joy that came as a result of complete self-abandonment for the good of others. It was the joy of perfect faith in God and loving communion with him, and the disciples were to have the same kind of joy. Might be full—Outward circumstances would not favor the fulness of joy, but the joy was to abide in them. This joy was to increase with the years. This was to be a blessed fruit of abiding in Jesus. No earthly joy is at all comparable with it. 12. That ye love one another, as I have loved you—Jesus loves his followers as the Father loves him, and they are to love one another in the same manner, up to the measure of their ability to love. 13. Greater love hath no man than this, etc.—In rare instances men have laid down their lives for the sake of their friends and out of love for them. The value of the thing sacrificed is the measure of the love. Jesus laid down his life for his enemies. 14-16. The friends of Jesus are they who keep his commandments. He is taking his disciples into the intimate relations of friends, exalting them from the condition of servants.

Questions.—On what occasion did Jesus give the discourse upon the vine and the branches? Who are represented by the vine? Who by the branches? What is the purpose of pruning? How does this process apply to Christ's disciples? What are the conditions of fruitfulness? What course is taken with those who do not abide in Christ? What fruits do Christians bear? What is the measure of Christ's love for his followers?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Christian Identity.

I. Obtained by union with Christ.
II. Distinguished by Christlikeness.

I. Obtained by union with Christ. The Master's discourse had relation to the new position of the disciples which would be caused by his departure. They were in danger of unfaithfulness and apostasy. Jesus sought to fortify them. He set forth clearly by illustration the genuineness of the permanent spiritual union between himself and them which could be severed only by their failure to comply with the conditions as he taught them. One of the fruits of this union with Christ would be in their lives, patience under discipline; another, the spirit of dependence upon Christ. That sense of dependence would in no way paralyze human energy, but rather become the source of its power. Apart from Christ they would be like unto dead branches. "I am the vine" was a general truth. "Ye are the branches" brought each individual disciple into connection with that truth. Any attempt to rely upon themselves meant total failure. Union with Christ was the animating principle of all true obedience, giving spiritual life and vigor to the soul, and quickening all its powers into activity for the glory of God. Jesus declared himself to be the object of his Father's love and to be able to love as God loves. In that affection he exhorted his disciples to abide. Jesus existed as man to reveal the full glory of eternal love. It was his commandment to his disciples to imitate his love. He stamped it with his authority. It was an appeal to their gratitude and affection, this last and great commandment. He had treated them as friends, by unfolding to them, so far as they were capable of apprehending it, the whole truth respecting the wonderful communication which he had come from heaven to make and the wonderful work he had come to earth to perform in the economy of salvation. Jesus had selected and appointed them to a great, important, salutary work, their success in which was secured in answer to believing prayer. In the singular blending of friendship and command there were involved absolute submission and closest friendship. As the season of separation drew near, Jesus sought to set before his disciples the responsibilities and opportunities of friendship. He pointed out to them the source of happiness and revealed to them by precept and example the path of duty and the only path of real joy. His own joy was fulfilled in that of his disciples as theirs must be in their Master's. The perfection of their joy was Jesus' chief concern. Their greatest good was inseparably connected with his highest glory.

II. Distinguished by Christlikeness. The Christian type of character is one rooted in the divine love. Leaving his little flock in the world, Jesus gave them no other instructions for their mutual relationship than to love one another as he had loved them. Brotherly love has the highest service, realizes the highest good. It unites Christ's disciples, honors him and blesses the world with the most beneficent influences. Communion with Christ secures Christian conduct. His words must abide as principles of life and action. When Jesus said to his disciples, "Go and bear fruit," or, "Go and reproduce your Master's life in your own," he laid hold of two great forces that mould all human society, influence and example. A Christlike life is the strongest manifestation of God to the world. It is the greatest human influence to bring men near to God. Not by discipling others so much as developing in themselves more and more the distinctively Christian qualities, could the disciples bear fruit and thereby glorify God. The sight of the highest form of manhood is the instrument by which the world shall be converted, by the grace, beauty, variety and ripeness of Christ's character. Fruitfulness in their lives was to consist in a holy character and life and in benevolent and Christlike labors for the welfare of their fellow men. Pruning is one of the methods of culture for all fruitful disciples. It includes all the means that are necessary for development.—T. R. A.

START THE SPRING DRIVE AGAINST THE WEEDS—NOW

A Proper Crop Rotation Should be the Starting Point of Heed Eradication—Early Spring Cultivation Will Save Labor Later—Spraying With Iron Sulphate Effective Against Mustard

Before one can intelligently set about getting rid of weeds it is necessary to know something about their nature and manner of growth. The methods that would be effective in combating one class of weeds would not be effective in combatting another class of weeds.

Annual weeds complete their whole life-history in one year or less. The seed germinates sometimes in the fall, but more often in the spring, the plant grows rapidly, produces flowers, ripens and scatters its seeds, and then dies before winter. Wild mustard and wild oats are annuals.

Biennial weeds during the first season of growth produce a tuft of leaves close to the surface of the ground; during the second season a tall stem is produced which bears flowers and ripens seeds, and then the whole plant dies. The life-history is thus comprised inside two years. Biennial wormwood and burdock are examples.

Perennial weeds produce flowers and seeds, but after ripening the seeds only those parts of the plant above ground die down, while the underground parts live on for many years. Three types of perennial weeds may be distinguished.

Spot bound—Weeds of this class do not spread readily in the ground beyond the spot where they first take root. Their seeds may, of course be distributed over a wide area. Examples are dock and dandelion.

Creeping on the surface—The parent sends out runners in all directions along the surface of the ground, which eventually take root. Examples are silverweed and orange hawkweed.

Creeping below the surface—The parent plant sends out shoots or, in some cases, roots, which travel horizontally at a considerable depth below the surface of the ground. New shoots grow up from these above the surface of the soil and eventually become plants. Likewise, a small piece of the underground shoot an inch or two long is capable of producing a new plant. Field Bindweed and Canada Thistle are examples.

HOW WEEDS SPREAD.

Weeds may gain entrance to the farm, or, if already there, may be dispersed over a wider area in one of the following ways:

As Impurities in the Seed Sown—Most samples of agricultural seeds contain weed seeds in greater or less amount, which are sown with the useful seeds and thus the weeds may, quite unknown to the farmer, gain an entrance onto his land. The seed sown should be absolutely free from weeds of all kinds—a condition of things which is seldom realized.

By the Agency of Threshing Machines—The threshing machine should be thoroughly cleaned before it is allowed to begin operations on the farm.

In Stable Manure and Feeding Stuffs—Hay and feeding stuffs often contain weed seeds, some of which are liable to find their way into the manure heap and eventually onto the land.

By the Action of Wind.—Many seeds, such as those of Dandelion and thistle, are furnished with a tuft of hairs which enables them to float in the air for long distances. In other cases the seeds, or even the whole plant, may be blown over the frozen surface of the snow.

By the Agency of Animals—The seeds or adjacent parts of some plants such as blue bur and burdock, are provided with hooks by means of which they become attached to the wool of sheep or the clothing of workers on the farm, and in this way may be carried into fields weher formerly they did not exist.

By Cultivation—In some plants, especially those with creeping, underground stems, the broken pieces may be carried all over the field by farm implements and thus dispersed over a much wider area than the parent plants originally occupied.

Where the ground has been badly polluted with weed seeds through neglect in former years the surface should be disturbed to a depth of a few inches and the seeds encouraged to germinate either after harvest or in spring. If the land is then plowed deeply the seedlings will be buried and the fresh supply of weed seeds brought up should be encouraged to grow in the same manner and should then be destroyed. A hoed crop should be planted and the spaces between the rows ought to be cultivated regularly throughout the season. When the ground has been badly polluted with weed seeds, some of them may lie dormant for several years and germinate when the soil is again disturbed.

The formation of seeds can be prevented in various ways, such as mowing several times during the season, or cutting the roots with a hoe or spud, or frequent cultivation of the land by horse labor, or by pasturing the ground closely with sheep. Annuals and biennials will eventually die out if the production of seeds is prevented.

Prevention of seed formation will serve somewhat to check the spread of perennial plants, but as they can live for many years and even continue to occupy new ground by the growth of underground shoots, etc., some more thorough methods are required to get rid of them. The implements employed for this purpose should be such as will loosen the soil to such an extent that the weeds can be readily pulled out and collected into heaps, after which they should be burned when dry. It is very important that the underground parts of such weeds as field bindweed should not be broken into small pieces difficult to collect and liable to be scattered over a wider area. But, however carefully the work of collecting and burning may be done, some of the weeds are sure to be left in the soil and, if undisturbed will grow again. Consequently ground that is badly infested with such weeds will require to have the surface disturbed by frequent cultivation. This can only be done if the land is left without a crop (summer fallowed) or bears a crop of such a nature that it can be planted in rows with sufficient space between the rows to admit of ready cultivation without injury to the plants. The cultivation should be done sufficiently often to destroy all green parts as quickly as they appear, and the implement used should be of such a nature that they will cut all underground stems and roots in the area covered by them without letting any escape. One of the weed-knife type of implements should be used. The underground parts of a plant are nourished by the green parts above ground, and if the green stems and leaves are destroyed as quickly as they appear, the parts below the surface will be starved out and the whole plant will eventually die. This is the only way to eradicate finally such weeds as Canada thistle and field bindweed.

A vigorous growth of some other crop, such as alfalfa, tends to crowd out some of the weeds, and the cutting of the crop several times during the season prevents the weed from ripening its seeds.

SPRAYING TO DESTROY WEEDS.

Spraying is effective in destroying some weeds. The substances most commonly used are iron sulphate (copperas or green vitriol), copper sulphate (blue vitriol), common salt and sodium arsenite. Iron sulphate can be used to destroy wild mustard when growing in a grain crop without doing any material damage to the crop. For this purpose a 20 per cent. solution is employed, and 100 pounds of the sulphate dissolved in 50 gallons of water will spray one acre. Copper sulphate can be used for the same purpose, a 2 per cent. solution being employed (10 pounds in 50 gallons of water per acre). Both these sulphates are poisonous. Sodium arsenite, if applied at the rate of two pounds to 40 gallons of water, will blacken the leaves of Canadian thistle but it is very poisonous and cannot be applied to the thistles when growing among hay or other crop, as it will damage the useful plants as well.

Common salt is a useful weed killer to employ in the case of weeds growing on paths or roadsides or waste ground. It should be applied in dry weather at the rate of 125 pounds in 50 gallons of water per acre. Strong solutions of the other foregoing chemicals may be used for the same purpose.

The control of weeds on the farm requires in a marked degree the two virtues of thoroughness and perseverance. If a farmer goes about it in a halfhearted way, he will never accomplish their eradication. Constant watchfulness is necessary if progress is to be made. If bare fallow is resorted to, it should be possible to get rid of the worst weeds in a single year. But the practice of bare fallow is not a paying game. It is in most cases better to graze the land or take off a crop of hay or grain early in the season and then leave the land bare for the rest of the year. Shallow plowing should be followed by continuous cultivation for the rest of the season, and a hoed crop planted the following year.

It is safe to say that weeds can be held in check only where a suitable rotation of crops is followed. Where the same land is sown with wheat year after year, or where the land is pastured indefinitely, the weed problem is liable to become worse every year. In the former case bare fallow every few years will be necessary, and it is very doubtful whether the return from the land will be equal to that where rotation of crops is followed.—The Canadian Countryman.

SUNDAY AT HOME

A PRAYER.

God send to thee
That bright and blest, holy [illegible] day may be;
So bright as He sees well
Who seeth best;
So blest as thou canst dwell
In earthly nest;
So bright that earth may almost heaven be;
So blest that heaven shall still be best to thee;
His gentler guidance bring thee on thy way;
His song of sunshine greet thee every day;
Himself in everything thy strength and stay.

Mark Guy Pearse.

TAKE HEED HOW YE HEAR.

Take heed therefore how ye hear.—Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom. Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

Great peace have they which love thy law; and nothing shall offend them. How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth! Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way.

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. I have more understanding than all my teachers; for thy testimonies are my meditation.

Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.—But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

VALUE

This is the inspiration, the nerve, the crown of life. Men are ever fixing standards of value. Silver took rank over gold in the days of old. "Silver and gold have I none," said Peter in the Temple porch. Some values are fixed; there is only a hundred cents in the dollar. Some values are unfixed, such as place, and power, and favors of the men in office. To the victors belong the spoils. Some values are limited by time, and health, and life. Some are unlimited; purity, honour and truth. Rise on the wings of love, and how far will you go, and what shall stop you in your flight? Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens and shades.

Call the hydrographer to make a chart of love, and can he do it? He can draw continents, bays and harbors. But love is like the skylark; it sings above the clouds. It goes down to the depths which no sounding line has fathomed. Love goes to the furthest [illegible] and then takes down the bars and explores an unknown universe. Men may come and men may go, but love goes on forever.

I have seen an Egyptian picture where they are trying to ascertain the value of a soul, in a delicate balance. The soul is in one scale and in the other a compound of values which puzzled the magicians of that land. It makes the brain reel as it tries to answer the question of the Master of Magicians. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? What shall a man give in exchange?"

I walked into the Royal Exchange, London, and looked into anxious faces. The business of the world was concentrated here. I did no business; I went in poor and I came out poor. This is what we all do as to this life—we are born without a shirt, and our hands hold not a farthing when we depart. Oh, the pain of getting, the care of keeping, the fear of losing, and the agony of cutting the tow-rope! It seems so curious to build only to tumble down. "But this their way is their folly, yet posterity approve their sayings." Each man is a microcosm, that is a small world; he is independent of, but connected with, other world, and held by an invisible wire to the central throne. He was fashioned in the sempiternal fire. He is a spark from the Everlasting Light. His value is beyond computation, and if you want to come near the estimate, try and count the coin paid down for his redemption. The greatest blot and stain on the brow of man is that he has blemished his beauty and sullied the purity of his origin by acting like a beast. The greatest dignity is not manhood or womanhood, but self-hood; here's the hidden life, here uncounted gold, sacred, unacknowledged and most frequently unexpressed. Reach down to the depths of selfhood and be a man.

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful is man!
Distinguished link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A worm! a god! I tremble at myself,
And in myself am lost!

EXERCISING THE MIND.

Time and Solitude Essential in Learning to Think Easily.

An important element in easy thinking is [illegible] opportunity for thought in time and in solitude.

Many of us are "too busy," but with far less productive talents, to really live up to [illegible] things, they should make time, make solitude for thought. People are often too much continuously together, especially young people. Each individual is separate and requires individual separate thought.

One in general should room by oneself [illegible] to spend considerable [illegible] the shadows or brook side or in some [illegible] the greater part of a stroll or of a slow bicycle ride requiring little attention [illegible] and [illegible] for thinking [illegible].

Parents are oftentimes too crowded to allow their students to think, they can afford as a matter of dollars and cents to take an extra year in school if one can learn to think by doing so. The time so used is a rich and certain investment.

In default of better than a half hour after walking or before rising is a good time to think, and many people have their most productive and original thoughts come to them once in the morning and early after a good night's rest.—Dr. G. Van N. [illegible] in Scientific American.

Piling It On.

It probably is best never to give in in the first place. Grey Wattles proudly stated his record that in three years of married life he has never neglected to mail a letter. Now, Mrs. Wattles says he can write them, too.—Kansas City Star.

Agnes—No. I would never marry a man to reform him. Ethel—Well, I don't think myself that harsh measures are the best.—Boston Transcript.

Extra Fine Piecrust

One cupful of lard, two cupfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, three-quarters of a teaspoonful of salt, one egg and sufficient cold water to hold the mixture together. Sift the flour and salt in a basin. [illegible] the blade of a knife and chop the lard into the flour, being careful to keep the flour between the blade and the knife and the shortening. When the mixture looks like meal add gradually the egg, well beaten, and mixed with the lemon juice. Roll the pastry into a ball with the knife. It may be used at once, but it will be improved if allowed to stand in a cool place for one hour. This paste should be rolled out once and handled as lightly as possible. Bake in a hot oven. Lemon juice makes gluten of flour more elastic, so that dough stretches rather than breaks as paste is rolled out.

Building castles in the air doesn't necessarily make a man the architect of his own fortune.

A PUZZLING CASE

"Gentlemen! gentlemen!" I said, stepping quickly between the two men who were now standing opposite to one another, in anything but friendly attitudes; "do not behave like children. Tancred, keep your temper, as all men in your profession should. Signor Ivan will, I am sure, supply us with all information about that cartridge."

"What cartridge, monsieur?"

"That with which Mazzucata was killed?"

"I know nothing about it."

"Do you not?" said Tancred, who had resumed his seat, "then perhaps Kutusoff does."

"I tell you, monsieur, I know no gentleman of that name."

"He tells a very different story."

"Why! what did he say about me?"

"Humph! that doesn't sound as if you didn't know him," said Tancred, delighted at having caught Ivan in a trap; "come, sir, it is of no use your pretending ignorance in this way. You are an intimate friend of Kutusoff, who made that clockwork cartridge, which you placed in the bouquet, with the Black Carnation."

"I didn't, monsieur. I lost that cartridge."

"Oh!" I cried, before Tancred could speak, "then you admit having had that cartridge from Kutusoff."

Ivan stamped with rage at having made this mistake, and tried to nullify his admission in a very clumsy manner, quite unworthy of a presumably acute conspirator.

"I received a cartridge, certainly, from Kutusoff, but I did not receive the cartridge which killed Mazzucata."

"I thought you did not know Kutusoff," said Tancred, ironically. The singer was nonplussed for a moment, and then burst out laughing, in nowise ashamed at having been caught tripping.

"Monsieur l' Avocat, you are an excellent antagonist," he said, good-humoredly; "pray sit down—you also M. Granby, we will talk over this matter, and I will tell you all I know about it; but I warn you, that it will not assist you in any way."

"Well, let us hear your story first," said Tancred, delighted at this unexpected surrender; "we can then judge for ourselves."

"I suppose you know I am a Nihilist, monsieur," remarked Ivan, airily, "at least, I assume you do, seeing you know I am a friend of Kutusoff."

"Who is a Nihilist, pure and simple."

"Who is a Nihilist, without being either pure or simple," retorted Ivan, dryly, "he is a man who advocates reform in Russia by violent means, such as bombs and assassinations. I, on the other hand, trust to Time and the advancement of civilization."

"If so, why do you meddle with conspiracies?"

"Because I wish to see reform in Russia within a reasonable time. I am not what you would call a Nihilist, though I get the name of being one of those people who desire the upset of anything. All I wish is to see my dear country with a civilized constitution, and not dependent on the caprices of a despot."

"A very modest desire, truly," said I, ironically, being perfectly well acquainted with this cant of Anarchists, "yet one which cost you dear."

"It cost me exile from my native land," sighed Ivan, regretfully, "and had it not been that I was a singer, I should have been exiled to Siberia."

"Well, you don't seem to appreciate the clemency of the Czar, seeing you now conspire against him."

"Clemency! clemency!" cried the Russian, his eyes flashing at the word, "why call it clemency? The Czar has enough sins to answer for without having my death on his shoulders. But it is no use talking to you comfortable English about our troubles—only experience would teach you what tyranny we groan under in Russia. I will say no more on the subject, save that I am desirous of gaining a constitution for the Muscovite Empire, but not by foul means. Kutusoff would stick at nothing to gain what we desire for our native land. I draw the line at secret assassination by means of infernal machines."

"Yet, you are a friend of Kutusoff," hinted Tancred, with a grim smile.

"As you say, I am a friend of Kutusoff," replied Ivan, with cold dignity; "yes, because I know that however misguided he may be, he is a good man who has suffered for the sake of his patriotic principles. Yes, I am a friend of Kutusoff. I honor him. He is a man who ought to occupy a great position."

"Which he certainly will, some day on the gallows."

"You don't understand, Major Granby," said Ivan impatiently, "how can you understand, you that have lived in peace and security all your life. But this is not to the point. As you say—as I say, Kutusoff is my friend, and I frequently call on him to discuss the position of Russian politics."

"We are all attention," murmured Tancred, seeing the singer hesitate.

"Well," resumed Ivan, after a pause, "some weeks ago when I called on him, he showed me a new infernal machine, a dynamite cartridge, which looks innocent enough, but on touching a spring, it explodes. But stay, I will show you one."

He went to his desk, and taking from thence what looked like a roll of white paper bound with brass at either end, held it up for our inspection. I stretched out my hand to take it, but Ivan drew it back with a slight smile.

"Excuse me, monsieur, but I dare not place it in your hands. You might touch the spring by chance and then we would meet with the same fate as the unhappy singer."

"Ugh!" cried Tancred, pushing back his chair, "what a horrible idea."

"You see this," resumed the singer, pointing to a tiny brass point at the side of the cartridge. "That, if touched, explodes the machine. Therefore, if a careless person grasped the whole cartridge, a catastrophe is bound to ensue. Such was the fate of Mazzucata."

"Then she was killed by one of these devilish machines?"

"Yes, I believe she was."

"Then you know who killed her."

"No, I do not, but I will tell you all, and you can draw your own conclusions from what I say. Kutusoff gave me one of these cartridges to take home and examine. I placed it carefully in a cardboard box to render it innocuous, and put it in my pocket. Then I lost it."

"But where?"

"I haven't the slightest idea. But my impression is that some one picked it up and placed it in that fatal bouquet."

"You have no idea who could have picked it up?"

"Not the slightest."

Tancred and I looked at each other sceptically, at which Ivan became agitated.

"I swear on my honor, Messieurs, that I do not know what became of that cartridge. I lost it; but when or where, I know not. I had nothing to do with the death of Mazzucata."

"If you had, I do not suppose you would speak so openly," replied Tancred, soothingly; "but you must admit circumstances are strong against you. Look here, Signor Ivan, you admit having this cartridge; you say it must have caused the death of Madame Mazzucata; and it was you who presented her with the fatal bouquet; all this looks bad."

"I admit it, Monsieur l'Avocat, I admit it," said Ivan quickly; "but I can explain. I did possess that cartridge, but I lost it, and know not who picked it up. As to my choosing that bouquet on the stage, to give to Madame Mazzucata, I did so at the request of a friend."

"And that friend?"

Ivan paused for a moment, and then turned away his head.

"Can you bear a shock, Messieurs?"

"Yes, yes."

"The friend who asked me to choose the bouquet was Sir Gilbert Tressinger."

CHAPTER XII.

There was a dead silence, lasting at least a minute, during which time I looked at Tancred, who looked at me, and then, by mutual consent, we looked at the man who had made this startling statement.

"I cannot believe that Sir Gilbert is guilty," I said, at length, in a voice which I acknowledge was a trifle tremulous.

"I did not say he was, monsieur," responded Ivan, delicately: "I merely stated that he asked me to pick up the bouquet when it was thrown, and present it to madame."

"How did you know which bouquet to select out of all those lying on the stage?" asked Tancred, reflectively.

"Sir Gilbert sent a note round to me shortly before the opera began, saying he had failed to give Madame Mazzucata a bouquet at her hotel, and would, therefore, throw it to her at the end of the great scene in the third act. He, therefore, requested me to pick up his bouquet and present it to madame, saying, I would recognize it by its white flowers and single black rose."

"Black carnation, you mean," said I, diabolically.

"No; a black rose."

"Have you the note, Signor Ivan?" demanded Tancred.

"I regret to say that I have not. I tore it up after reading it, and now, all trace of it is lost. But I distinctly recollect the description of the bouquet as being white flowers, with a black rose."

"That, then," said the lawyer, deliberately, "proves Sir Gilbert to be innocent; for all that story of his failing to give Mazzucata the bouquet at the hotel is perfectly true. His bouquet, as described by Phillis & Co., was of the kind you describe. Oh, yes; those flowers he asked you to pick up were perfectly harmless."

"Yet they killed Mazzucata, monsieur."

"Sir Gilbert's flowers did not kill Mazzucata. Those you picked up contained a Black Carnation—not a black rose; and, in the hurry of the moment, you did not notice the difference. All you saw was that the bouquet was white with a black centre, and picked up the fatal bunch which caused the death of the prima donna."

"Then Sir Gilbert did not throw those flowers?" said Ivan, in great perplexity.

"Ah! that I cannot say. But if he did, without doubt, the bouquet was changed, either at the Hotel Europa or at the theatre."

"But who possessed a similar bouquet?"

"A man you do not know, Signor Ivan—Mr. Dallas."

Ivan started, and looked toward Tancred, with an expression of surprise.

"Was that the man who loved madame?"

"Yes," said Tancred.

"Who went down to Lippinton in search of a black carnation?"

"Yes," I said, quickly; "but I did not know he went down there for that flower, though he must have done so, in order to send Mazzucata the bud from Paris."

"Did Mr. Dallas send her a black carnation from Paris?"

"He did."

"Then Maxwell was right," muttered Ivan, under his breath.

"Maxwell!" I cried, with lively interest. "What! did he accuse Dallas of killing Mazzucata?"

"I did not say that," responded Ivan, deliberately, "but he certainly mentioned the name of Dallas in connection with the affair."

"Tell us all about it, signor."

"One moment," cried Tancred, raising his hand to enforce silence. "Signor Ivan, may I ask if you suspected Sir Gilbert to be guilty?"

"Yes," replied Ivan, firmly, "I did. I thought the bouquet I picked up was his—by the explosion of that bouquet madame was killed, and I knew nothing of the substitution of black carnation for black rose as described by Ilma Celinski."

"All that evidence was false, as I can prove," said the barrister coolly; "but if you thought Sir Gilbert was guilty, why did you not denounce him?"

Signor Ivan looked down at the floor and blushed deeply.

"He was to be married to Mazzucata," he said, in a voice of emotion. "I also loved her. I was his rival. Would you have me believe in a mean fashion, and denounce him to the law because he was more successful than myself in gaining the woman we both loved? No! I could not do that; I held my peace."

"Those sentiments do you credit, M. Ivan," said Tancred, dryly, "still they are a trifle weak to account for your silence. It was your duty to bring this criminal to justice if you believed him guilty."

"Others could swear away his life and punish him for his crime, Monsieur l'Avocat, so why should I interfere? Had he not been arrested, I might have suppressed what you call sentiment, and brought him to justice, but, as it was, I preferred to keep silence."

"Do you believe him guilty?"

"I do! most firmly."

"Then you are wrong. He is perfectly innocent. How could he have found your cartridge, with which alone the crime could have been committed?"

"Ah, that I do not know."

"You see, therefore, Monsieur Ivan, that there is something in his favor. Besides, you suspect another person."

"I suspect another person!" echoed Ivan, in surprise, "no, you are wrong."

"I am not wrong. You hinted at Mr. Dallas."

"Pardon me, I said nothing about my own suspicions; I referred to those of M. Maxwell."

"What on earth has he to do with it?" I asked, quickly, being somewhat weary of this protracted conversation.

"A great deal, monsieur, and as I promised to tell you all, I will do so, but you will be much astonished."

"I have lost the faculty of being astonished of late, Signor Ivan. Every moment brings a fresh surprise."

"Doubtless, but this is the greatest surprise of all."

"What is it?"

"Pray be silent, Major," said Tancred, a trifle rudely, I thought, but these lawyers have no manners. "Signor Ivan will, I am sure, prefer to tell his story in his own way."

Thus abjured, I held my peace, though sorely against my will, for I would have preferred to come to the point at once by questioning, without enduring the purgatory of this interminable narration which Ivan now proceeded to inflict upon us both.

"In order to make things perfectly clear," he said, slowly, "I have, to a certain extent, violated my own instinct of delicacy, by telling you of my love for this dead woman. I loved her ardently, not as you cold English love with caution and calculation, with an eye to surrounding circumstances, and a dread of gossip. No, I was devoted to her, I adored her, I worshipped her ardently, and would have laid down my life at her feet had she so desired. Alas! I was unfortunate, and your countryman won her heart. In Paris, I saw a great deal of her, but while accepting my attentions, she contrived to keep me at a distance, by a certain reserve which I failed to break down. At last, on the eve of our departure for England, to fulfil our engagements, I told her of my love, how ardently I desired to make her my wife—how her face was constantly before me, and how she filled my life. She heard me to the end, and then, in cold, calm words told me she was engaged to marry Sir Gilbert Tressinger. Those words broke my heart, and she said them."

He struck his hand passionately against the piano, near which he was seated and affected by emotion, was for some moments unable to proceed. We kept silence out of sympathy for his misfortune, and after a pause of a few minutes' duration, he resumed his story.

"How cruel women are! She refused me as a lover, she desired me as a friend, and treated me with a frank cordiality which I found sufficiently painful—so much so, in fact, that I ceased to see her save when our professional duties brought us together on the stage. I knew that Sir Gilbert was constantly with her, and I could not bear to stand calmly by, contemplating that bliss in which I had no share, so I stayed away from her presence, and strove to crush in my heart this foolish love which was never to bring me happiness or peace of mind. Dante described Hell, but he omitted the worst Hell of all—the Hell of despised desire."

While speaking thus passionately, his eyes blazed as with consuming fire, and great drops of sweat stood on his flushed brow, betraying the agony he felt in thus coldly dissecting the passion which had wrecked his life. Taking out his handkerchief he wiped his forehead, and passed it rapidly over his dry lips, then hastily pursued his narration.

"I heard by chance that Sir Gilbert had gone to Paris, and that night, between the acts of the opera, she sent for me to her dressing room. I was loth to go, but had not strength of mind to refuse. When I came face to face with her, I found it difficult to control my emotion, but she pretended not to notice my agitation, so cruel was she towards one whom she had rejected. At last I grew sufficiently calm to ask her what she desired, and then she told me that she wanted me to go at once to Lippinton."

"To Lippinton!" ejaculated both Tancred and myself, with breathless interest.

"Lippinton, she informed me," resumed Ivan, without noticing our interruption, "is a little village near your town of Harrow, and she gave me instructions how to go down there, which she wished me to do the next day."

"And her reason?" asked Tancred, quickly.

"To see a gardener called Maxwell."

"Great heavens!" I murmured, a suspicion entering my mind, which I strove to banish as absurd, "can it be possible?"

"Can what be possible?" demanded Ivan, his quick ears catching my remark.

"Nothing! nothing! a mere idea. Pray, go on with your story."

"When I saw this gardener, I was to say, 'Why have you sent me the Black Carnation,' and await his reply."

"Which was—" I asked, breathlessly.

"Softly, softly, monsieur, let me tell the story in my own way."

I was forced to assent, though I was burning with curiosity, for this new description of the sender of the Black Carnation seemed to draw Maxwell—a rough, uncultured Irishman—into the affair. It was ridiculous, for there could be no connection between a famous prima-donna and an obscure gardener, celebrated though he might be in his own circle as the grower of that curious plant, which was so prominent in the tragedy. Then I remembered Miss Maxwell; her emotion on hearing the name of Mazzucata; her extraordinary resemblance to Mazzucata, and felt that we were on the verge of a great discovery, which would either solve the mystery or deepen it still more. As for Tancred, he preserved a rigid silence, but his eager eyes, the twitching of his nervous fingers, showed that he was as eager as myself.

Tommies Got the Hun Plane

(By Patrick Macgill, Author of "The Great Push.")

"Well, 'twas like this," said McCrossan, the big Irishman, leaning back in his chair and putting a cloud of smoke up to the roof of the estaminet. "We were in the trinches wan mornin, an' there was German aeryplane overhead, slitherin' about through the sky wid all our Archies payin' it no ind o' attention. We were all lookin' up wid our gas masks on, and ye know that a white face can be seen as aisy as winkin' by thim that's up in the air, an' it's never wise to let the Boche know where ye are.

"Well, anyway, there was the aeryplane like a big dragonfly wingin' about and inspectin' us, and no ind of shells burstin' about it. Prisintly I could see that somethin' had happened to the machine. A shell burst right under it, and the aeryplane heeled a bit, thin wint up, and thin it comes rushin' down like a stone flung by a joyant. It was comin' right for us. Leastaways so it semed, and we all made for our dugouts scuttlin' like bliss. Nobody likes to get dunted on the head with an aeryplane; it wouldn't do much good to one's cranium. For meself, a man wid a wife and two childer, I had common sense enough to git out o' the way.

"While the danger was over out we comes out o' our funk holes and has a look round. The aeryplane had come down shure enough, and there it was lyin' out on No Man's Land as paceful as a lamb that had been worried to death be a dog. We wor very near the Boche at this point, for 'twas up be the brick fields at Cambrin that we wor at the time, and the inimy was not more than eighty yards away from us; and out there half way between us and thim was the aeryplane lyin' on the ground.

"Well, it was somethin' to think about for the rest o' the day, and we all wondered what was goin' to be done about it. We did want an aeryplane, particularly a German aeryplane, as a souvenier, or, at laist, as a regimental pet. We had a pet once upon a time, but it was a dog that had no since in its head, and it went nosin' out on No Man's Land one day and got a bullet through itself. But an aeryplane! That was something to think about.

"Be the time night came on we saw that there was somethin' goin' to be done. From nowhere in particular things were comin' our way. Coils o' ropes and wire cutters were handed round to a few of us and we got orders to hold ourselves in readiness to crawl over the top when darkness fell. And what for? What but to cut our own wire and make a roadway for the aeryplane, and thin to crawl out and tie a couple of lines of rope to the machine. Then when we got back the men in the trinch would pull the aeryplane in.

"So we went and further, for we went out, cut a way through the wire and knotted the ropes to the aeryplane. Havin' been at sea, and knowing a little about sailing ships, I done the knottin' secure agin' any pull. Thin we comes back, crawlin' along the rope that lay between the aeryplane and our trinch, and we got ready for the pull. Some got out in front of the parapet, others got behind the trench and some thirty min of us or more put our hands to the job.

"An officer stud up on the sandbags and says in a loud whisper: 'Hiddy, Hiddy, laddy! Heave away now!' We pulled and we could feel it comin' [illegible] officer. 'Now pull away!'

"But we didn't pull that time, for the rope was almost tugged out of our hands. The Boche was pullin' on the other side, and as far as we could judge he had got a rope tied to the machine just the same as we had.

"'Well, what's to be done now?' said the officer.

"'Only one thing can be done, sir,' says I.

"'What will that be, McCrossan?' says the officer.

"'Seein' that our opponents are such dirty beggars, sir,' says I, 'I wouldn't demean myself by havin' a tug o' war with them on principles fair, square and above board. I think that it would be better for us to go out and cut their rope, sir,' says I.

"[illegible] the officer. 'Who'll volunteer to go out with me on the job?' says he.

"That almost started a row, for everybody volunteered and only three would have to go. Of course the officer was one and I was the other, bein' the suggester of that plan. The rest cast lots and we got a little Cockney fellow, who made up in pluck what he never possessed in inches, to be one of the party.

"So out the three of us goes and reaches the aeryplane. 'Twas a funny thing that the Germans should have the same idea in their head as we had, for we just got out in time to find the Boches tryin' to open my knots. Of course we had a bit of a ruction and we conducted operations with the bayonet, it being the quietest weapon for work of that description. It doesn't do to kick up too much of a row and you only forty yards away from the inimy's trenches. There were three of thim and we disposed of thim all with nothin' to show for it but a scratch on my leg.

"Well, to cut a long story short, we loosened the German rope, tied it to a stump of a tree, lifted up one of the dead men, put him in the aeryplane and got back to our trinch. Thin the pullin' began again, and this time it was much the easier job than it was before. No doubt the Germans were havin' a bit of a pull thimselves at the rope tied to the tree stump, just in the same way that a simple kind of a child contints itself by pullin' at a dummy teat and gettin' nothin' in return for its work barrin' the labor of pullin'. * * * We got the machine in, it and the dead German, whom we three who went out on the job could hold up as circumstantial evidence in support of our story.

"And that was how a line regiment captured a German aeryplane," said Pte. McCrossan, fumbling in his pocket and bringing out a scrap of metal, which he showed to his listeners.

"The only souvenier I've got," he said. "'Tis a bit from the rib of the aeryplane's wings."

A SPLENDID RECORD

No department of the C. P. R. has more care or thought devoted to it than the handling of baggage, as the traveller owes so much of his good temper and comfort to the knowledge that his trunks are handled carefully and delivered on time. The amount of baggage handled on so large a system is phenomenal—no less than [illegible] individual pieces being forwarded during the year 1916. There must have been quite a number of families on the move, for the list includes [illegible] baby carriages. Milk cans form an important element in the work of the baggage department, as in order to ensure the rapid delivery of milk from the farm to the city dweller, express trains are used. The total number of milk cans forwarded during the year 1916 was 1,162,472.

The most convincing proof of the care with which baggage is handled on the C. P. R. is given in the figures of claims paid on loss, damage, pilferage. Out of nearly eight million pieces of baggage handled, the amount paid on loss was only [illegible] on damage only $1,669.08, and on pilferage only $371.07, the cost to the company in these respects being only [illegible] per hundred parcels.

This is a record of which Mr. [illegible] Ames, the popular general baggage agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, may well be proud, and is sufficient to show that the so-called "baggage smasher" has been entirely eliminated, if indeed he ever existed between [illegible]

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Last Thursday night the Burgoyne Literary meeting took the form of a social. After a short program of music and readings, Mr. E. R. Sayles, who had very kindly consented to address the society on that date, gave a very interesting and instructive talk on "Citizenship." There were about forty present and after the program, pie and sandwiches were passed around. Since the society organized for the winter under the following officers:—President, Arthur Burgess; Vice President, Beulah Stewart; Secretary, Nora Cunningham; Programme committee, Irving Grieve, Coral MacIvor, Maggie MacAndrew, the meetings have been held regularly on Thursday evening of each week when at all possible. There have been four debates—1. Do we learn more from reading or from observation, Aff. won. 2. Can the U. S. do more for the allies by entering the war or remaining neutral, won by the negative. 3. Which is the most useful, wood or iron. Aff. winning. 4. Which is the most useful to man, the automobile or the horse. The affirmative won. There were three speakers on each side in every case so that in the four months twenty four different ones debated. Two mock trials afforded considerable amusement, being "Arson" and "Breach of Promise," the other meetings usually took the form of programmes or minute speeches, etc. Almost without exception all have willingly taken part in some way when called on. Much of society's progress and success is due to the president who so ably made arrangements for all the debates and took such a deep interest in each meeting

If Bruce County is fully supplied with potatoes as reported by government officials, they must be held up somewhere for there are dozens of farmers and others in the surrounding district who can't get enough for seed anywhere any at price. Some farmers who had a few bushels to spare showed their patriotism by refusing to ask immoderate prices. Others taking advantage of the scarcity hold up for still higher prices though they have already risen beyond all reason, at least those who have to buy and are asked to pay four, five or even six dollars a bag are inclined to think so. If part of that million bushel supplies of the Dominion talked about in the Press were dumped off at Port Elgin it would be very acceptable and find ready purchasers

Sunday School commenced last Sunday morning. The attendance was good for a beginning.

The congregation had an agreeable surprise Sunday morning when Rev. Mr. Hilts, of Chesley, took the services. It seemed that a candidate who was expected to preach was unable to come and Mr. Hilts motored over to take his place.

WONDERFUL STUFF! LIFT OUT YOUR CORNS

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether hard, soft or between the toes, will loosen right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is a compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus

Put a few drops directly upon any tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them without even irritating the surrounding skin. Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it or afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

2nd—Reginald Mann, Port Elgin. His line was:

Since cured, calls the Port "health's retriever".

Apparently old lady Cleaver still lives, and no doubt the judges' awards will be satisfactory.

The Missing Line contest created a splendid interest. Over 70 contestants were entered.

Only three men were at the Dominion Day meeting Monday night. The next meeting is on May 28th., at 7.30.

The marriage took place at Portland, Oregon, on May 2nd., of Miss Edith Amelia Nelson, to Mr. Donald Allison, Jr. The contracting parties are known here. The groom was a high school student here.

Messrs Wm George and J. J. George were called to Sarnia last week owing to the death of T. H. George. Deceased gentleman was a former resident of Port Elgin, but for a number of years has been in Sarnia. He was 50 years of age, and death was caused through rheumatism and kidney trouble. Besides a wife he leaves a son Roy, and daughter Phyllis, at home, also a married daughter, Mrs. McCann, of Detroit. Many friends here will extend sympathy to the bereaved ones in their great loss

Assessor's Returns Show Decrease in Population

Assessor Chapman has returned the roll to the clerk and it is noted there is a slight decrease in population this year.

The return made shows 1321 as against 1350 or a decrease of 29.

The figures of the assessment for last year and this are:

	1916	1917
Lands	$ 77,630	$ 79,040
Buildings	388,235	389,715
Exemptions	53,555	55,255
Taxable property	412,310	409,755
Business assessment	35,369	30,647
Taxable income	26,638	33,414

Population—1321
Dogs—64
Bitches—3

From the above it will be seen that there are increases in lands and buildings and a considerable increase in the income tax to be received.

It is noticeable that there are only 66 dogs in the whole town.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Straw hats are still in the woodshed.

Grain seeding got a big boost last week. The land was in splendid shape to receive the seed and now it all depends on the weather. We hear about many strikes these days but what if the weather man, so called, should go on strike and refuse to give the suitable warmth and moisture which nature requires to spring the grain and carry the plants through the summer to ripen into a bountiful harvest. Guess we, government and all, would begin to feel how very small and puny were all our labor and fightings to stave off starvation and that some mighty power beyond us should have larger credit and a big half share in all the proceeds. Now that farmers have done seeding the flood of irritating ads may cease and those responsible for them might now do some writing on the clouds urging the upper spheres to greater activities in providing abundance of suitable weather elements, lest the allied nations suffer starvation and lose the fight.

Mrs. McTaggart, another of our old residents passed away suddenly Sunday morning. Deceased had been a sufferer from spells of heart trouble for many years but otherwise enjoyed comparatively good health. The funeral is on Friday at 2 p. m. An obituary will appear next week.

Rev. Mr. Ross, from Strachane, preached Sunday morning and evening. He commented on the large attendance and hearty singing. That's one for Burgoyne. Flowers have been in evidence on the platform for a few Sundays, the only garden produce so far, except a slight vision of rhubarb.

Mr. John Cobean is gradually growing helpless. His daughter, Mrs. Ross Munro, is waiting on him at present

Meet me at the Red Cross tea rooms Saturday afternoon and evening.

Mrs. J. J. George is in London, her mother being very ill.

Geo Jamieson shipped a load of fine fat cattle Tuesday.

Mr. Montgomery and family of Paisley, are taking up residence in Miss Janet McKay's house.

Mr. John Scott shipped a couple of fine pure bred shorthorns to Thos. Mercer, a breeder at Markdale.

The County Representative

Work of the Office of the Bruce County Representative of the Department of Agricultural—The office a Clearing House for Agricultural Information

Who's the Busiest Man in the County of Bruce?

The editor of The Times, in a trip to Walkerton, found that the Ontario Government's Agricultural Representative, Mr. Norman MacKay, was that man.

When The Times representative called on him the other day, he found a well-kept office, taking up the first floor of the public library, and at the same time Mr. MacKay was dispensing advice to a farmer who had called regarding seed oats. We waited our turn, and when the farmer had departed told Mr. MacKay we wanted some particulars regarding his work in the county

Now, those who know Mr. MacKay, also know that he is not a man to talk about himself very much and he seldom uses the personal pronoun "I". He is a man of few words, although a genial chap, and of a very sunny disposition. He has made good in this county, and he is appreciated by the farmers all over. We don't know whether it's the government's practice to change these representatives from one county to another, but we do know this, there will considerable good hard kicking coming from the big fellows from Bruce if any attempt is made to locate our representative elsewhere. All the government needs to do is to see that they pay this young man something worth while. He is making this county progress from an Agricultural standpoint and that's what is wanted. Read this article closely, and notice the branches which are looked after by Mr. MacKay.

We had the privilege of going over some of the reports made to the department, and therein is contained a brief history of the work of the Representatives office since it was opened up in 1912. We have tabulated some of the office work of the past four years which shows:

Callers at the office for information on seed, crops, live stock, drainage, poultry etc.

1913	650
1914	720
1915	680
1916	700

An average of almost 700 per year. Correspondence in connection with the subjects mentioned:

1913, 650 letters; 1914, 720 letters; 1915 680 letters; 1916, 700 letters.

Persons coming in contact with the office through visits, meetings, demonstrations, calls, etc., were 8,000 in 1916.

Drainage work has always taken up a good deal of time and in the four years about 4000 acres have been surveyed for under-drainage and plans and profiles prepared.

SCHOOL FAIRS—The first School Fair was held in 1913 when 325 pupils took part and 1700 people were in attendance at the Fair. The next year this was increased to three Fairs with 662 pupils and in 1916 six were held with 1300 pupils taking part and there was an attendance at the Fairs of 6300. The result of the Fairs are seen in fields of grain, potatoes, etc. that are found all over the country, the seed for which has been obtained originally from the pound that was distributed to the pupils in Rural Schools.

NORMAN MACKAY

Poultry have also been improved by the introduction of a better strain of Bredto lay Barred Rocks.

HOME GARDEN COMPETITION—After the pupils have left the schools and are at home for their first year, an attempt is being made to interest them in farming by means of the Home Garden Competitions. This year this is being conducted for the first time.

4 WEEKS SHORT COURSES—During the months of January and February, a 4 weeks Course in Agriculture is held at different points throughout the County. Boys 14 years of age and upwards are in attendance. In all 5 Courses have been held and about 260 boys have taken advantage of this. The first two were held at Walkerton in 1913 and 1914, one at Dobbinton in 1915, Teeswater, 1916, Underwood 1917. The training the boys receive during this four weeks is of a very practical nature and has always been appreciated by those in attendance. At the conclusion of the Short Courses, the boys organize into a "Junior Farmers Association" and hold meetings during the year, compete in competitions, etc. The winners in these various events receive a free Two Weeks Course at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph. In the grain crops, roots or potatoes, the competitors grow one acre, keeping accurate account of the cost of production and the winner is the one who can show the greatest profit. Feeding Hogs for profit is also another popular competition. Accurate weights are kept of the feed consumed and the hogs are weighed up at the end of 22 weeks.

Baby Beef Competition is also another contest considered by some of the boys. The animals winning out in this are shown at the Guelph Winter Fair, and Bruce County in 1916 was second place competing against all the other counties in western Ontario. Besides the valuable information gathered by the boys from these competitions, the Course which they receive as a prize at Guelph is very valuable. In the four years the Contest has been running, nine boys have received a free Two Weeks Course at Guelph.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE COURSE FOR GIRLS. The girls on the farms are not neglected. for in 1916 a two weeks course in Domestic Science was held at Teeswater in conjunction with the Course for the boys and a similar one at Underwood in 1917. Through the co-operation of the Provincial Women's Institute, a demonstrater was secured and her services were much appreciated by those in attendance. Average attendance Teeswater 1916, 55; Underwood, 65.

SEED TESTING—A great deal of attention is devoted to the question of Seed Testing. Samples of clovers, grasses, grains, etc. are continually being received at the office. 25 to 75 farmers avail themselves of this opportunity each year and many of them would otherwise sow seed totally unfit to be used, and by this means shown what it contains and secure satisfactory seed. Information is also given to farmers regarding securing the newer varieties better adapted to the district. When O. A. C. No 72 Oats was first introduced, a number of farmers were induced to try this with the result that it is proving very popular and a great many of the Bruce County farmers are now growing it only. Alfalfa growing has also been given a good deal of attention and we have secured for a considerable number of farmers, a variety of home-grown seed from Haldimand County which has proven far superior to any other variety. Farmers having any seed to dispose of are also put in touch with parties securing the same

FARMERS CLUB—A number of Farmers Clubs were in operation when the office was opened, but a number of new ones have been organized. These Clubs are all visited from time to time and any subjects taken up that the farmers require information on, or an address is given on some subject such as fertilizers, sweet clover, live stock, feeding, etc.

LIVE STOCK—Bruce County contains a large number of small pure bred Live Stock breeders. A list of these has been prepared and printed in the form of a Directory which contains the breeders name, post office, kind of stock kept, the number of animals in his herd. The breeders in the south of the County are also organized into a "Stock Breeders Club" and a consignment auction sale was held under their auspices in 1916, and plans are under way for making this an annual event.

A Stock Judging Team from Bruce was in competition against the other counties in Western Ontario at the last two Winter Fairs. These boys were selected from those who have attended the Short Courses during the winter. The first year one of the boys won first over all the Counties in Dairy cattle and last year the Team stood 10th in 22 counties with one of the boys third in horses.

Very little new work will be undertaken in 1917, excepting the Home Garden Contest. All the other lines will be continued. The office has been made a Farm Labor Bureau. An Auto trip to some of the best Stock Farms in the southern part of the Province is also being arranged for.

It will be readily seen that Mr. MacKay is a very busy man, and we wonder how he keeps record of so much detail, but he has an able assistance at his office, in the person of Miss LaFrance who takes equal pride and interest in being connected with one of the biggest games in the country—that of progressive agricultural.

News in General

Pte. J. G. Giles, of Tiverton, is reported wounded.

Ralph Geddes has been made a lieutenant in a regiment in France.

Mr. Peter Thomson, of 2nd of Saugeen was in town last week driving his fine new Gray Dort.

Bread will go higher than 12 cents. In some places a move is being made toward 15 cents.

Chesley waterworks pumping station is now run by hydro power. This is fortunate for Chesley with coal scarce and expensive.

Mr. J. G. Scott Lake Range, reports five sheep killed by dogs last week and two late last fall. Some hounds are running loose just now in that district and the owners should look after them.

An ex-warden of Bruce, James Anderson of Chesley, dropped dead of heart failure last Friday. He was 69 years of age. He was a Liberal in politics and a Presbyterian.

Mr. Harold Geddes enlisted with Toronto University overseas Training Co. Monday. This makes three, and all, of the sons of Mr. and Mrs. David Geddes.

Rev. Mr. South, of Illinois, a former pastor of the U. B. church here, will preach Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Many will take the opportunity to hear this very popular preacher. It will be remembered that he was "Ebenezer" in The Times when the Reciprocity Campaign was on in 1911. No doubt "Ole Ebenezer" will have some interesting things for the people who hear him.

Mr. H. A. McGillivray, of Edmonton, says: "I notice by The Times that many of the older people are gradually passing away, and I suppose I would find a marked difference around the old town now. I was glad to see that Bruce held up her end splendidly in sending a battalion overseas to take part in the great struggle for King and country. I endeavored to enlist, but to my surprise was turned down, because of a slight physical defect. I am with the Revillon Bros., wholesale, and business on the whole is very good. Much better than last. Hope things are keeping up to the standard in the town. Kind regards to all the old friends."

Judge and Mrs. Klein, Beatrice and Betty, arrived home Thursday night after a three months' sojourn in Florida. The Judge is somewhat improved in health but is not entirely recovered. Judge Klein says he found the climate of Florida superior to that of California, but in other respects he preferred the Pacific State. Florida is largely populated by a poor class of people and as tourist traffic there is a comparatively new development, accommodation is mostly of a primitive kind. Grape fruit and potatoes grow in large quantities but the soil requires a great deal of fertilizer. Prices of everything are very high and since the frost that partly destroyed the fruit crop, even oranges cost as much at Miami as they do at Walkerton.—Walkerton Telescope.

GOOD SOUP FOR HEALTH, WEALTH

Turn Your Daily Waste Into Nourishment.

Some Good Recipes That Will Help.

There are three obvious ways to reduce the cost of living. We can so increase the production of the necessaries of life as to bring supply into nearer balance with demand, thus insuring normal prices, or we can cut down consumption of what we eat and wear by the practice of simple economy; or we can eliminate waste.

To increase production takes time, but there is instant relief to be obtained through the practice of economy and the stoppage of waste.

Our housewives have no adequate idea of how greatly they may contribute to the general welfare by the stoppage of waste. What we throw into the garbage can or feed to the pigs the French woman puts in her soup kettle. In that depository she finds it possible by judicious admixture and proper seasoning and simmering to extract the full measure of remaining nutritive substance and place it upon her dinner table in various and enticing forms of relishing soup. If meats are not always available there are hundreds of ways of preparing meatless soups of fine flavor. It is not an exaggeration to say that the housewives of the country might do much to float it back into the haven of cheaper living by a generous outpour of savory soups.

The following soup suggestions are made by Elizabeth Lee, a practiced writer on the subject of domestic economy:

In these days of high cost of living meatless soups will be a means of saving and really better than the heavier kinds.

GREEN PEA SOUP.

Green pea soup is made by cooking a quarter of shelled peas in three pints of water, then rubbing them through a sieve.

The peas are put back into the water in which they have been boiled. One tablespoonful of flour is beaten into two tablespoonfuls of butter and then added to the peas. Salt and pepper to taste come next, and finally one quart of boiling hot milk is gradually stirred in. The mixture should be cooked about 10 minutes. If the flavor of onion is liked one should be boiled with the peas.

This is one of Mrs. Parloa's recipes and is a most delicious soup.

CORN CHOWDER.

Corn chowder, though quite an inexpensive dish, is very appetizing. A cupful of corn is boiled soft and then rubbed smooth. In the meantime cut two ounces of fat pork into small pieces and fry with a sliced onion. Cut up four large potatoes into cubes and scald one quart of milk. Put corn, pork fat strained, potatoes, milk and seasoning into a saucepan and bring to a boil.

Rub a couple of tablespoonfuls of butter into a little flour and add to the chowder to thicken.

Dried herbs are a great boon to housekeepers who live far from a store, in fact, city residents find them a very great convenience, too. They come in compact form, and the process of drying is so complete, even the fresh herbs are not found to be superior to them. They are an economy, also. One tablespoonful of powdered mixed herbs is equal to a handful of soup greens.

ONION SOUP.

A good onion soup is made by boiling onions gently until cooked through. They should then be chopped and put into a saucepan containing one quart or more of water. A large cupful of potatoes cut up is added with salt and pepper to taste, also a level dessertspoonful of dried herbs. The soup can be thickened with the butter and flour rubbed together, as before directed.

VEGETABLE SOUP.

A good substantial soup can be made from any soup bone and vegetables. Almost any kind of the latter will do except tomatoes.

Meat bone and vegetables are boiled together and then, when thoroughly cooked, are strained. One quart of potatoes finely mashed are added to the liquid, and lastly a cupful of boiling milk. Seasoning should be added and, if liked, a tablespoonful of butter rubbed up with a little flour, but the potatoes will serve to thicken. Serve with chopped parsley.

CREAM OF CORN.

Cream of corn soup makes a nourishing dish and a soup of this kind may be very inexpensive as well as quickly prepared.

The corn should be cooked and then scraped from the cob. One cup of the scraped corn is rubbed through a sieve and put into a saucepan.

To this is added one cup of boiling water, a little onion juice and salt and pepper to taste.

In a double boiler heat one cup of milk, and, when boiling, stir into it a tablespoonful or so of cornstarch and the same quantity of butter. When thickened put in the corn and boil together for about five minutes.

A couple of tablespoonfuls of whipped cream stirred in just before serving is an improvement to the soup, but is not a necessity.

Why Lightning Rods Are Pointed.

The reason a lightning rod has a sharp point is because a fine point offers no resistance to the discharge of electricity and in order that a cloud may be emptied of it noiselessly and harmlessly. The degree of resistance is in proportion to the surface of the object. If the rod were surmounted by a knob, for instance, the discharge would be violent. But many a lightning rod has received an electrical discharge when the people in the building below were calmly unconscious of the fact. Noncorrosive metal is used for the point of the rod, for corrosion makes resistance. The difference between a point and a ball is shown in discharging a battery. The full charge from a large battery would be received quietly on a metal point, while a moderate charge from a small one would explode violently on a ball. It is said that a full charge may be passed harmlessly through a person's body if received on the point of a needle, whereas the same charge received on a discharger with a ball or knob on the end, would mean instant death.

STRAITS OF OTRANTO.

Sailed by Many Great History-Making Expeditions.

"Across the Straits of Otranto, where an Austrian cruiser is reported to have sunk several armored British patrol boats recently, have sailed some of the greatest history-making expeditions of ancient and medieval times," says the National Geographic Society. "This fifty-mile expense of water, which joins the Adriatic and Ionian seas, separates the southeastern extremity or heel of the Italian peninsula from that part of Albania which was known in ancient times as Epirus.

"It is sixty miles from Otranto, the beautifully situated Italian fishing village, which gives its name to the Straits, to Avlona, the nearest port in Albania. Four hundred miles to the northwest are Venice and Trieste, at the head of the Adriatic, while 350 miles to the southwest, beyond the Ionian sea, is the British possession, Malta.

"At the beginning of the war Otranto was a town of scarcely more than 2,000 inhabitants, but of some importance as an Italian terminus of the cable and telegraph line to Constantinople, via Avlona. It also had cable connection with the Island of Corfu. The town's historical associations date back to Graeco-Roman times, for it occupies the site of the ancient Hydrus, and was one of Rome's ports of embarkation for Apollonia, the famous centre of culture and city in which the future emperor, Augustus, was completing his education at the time that he was summoned to the capital following the assassination of Julius Caesar.

"Otranto was one of the Calabrian towns captured in 1068 by Robert Guiscard (the sly), that resourceful Norman adventurer who, at the high tide of his career, gave promise of duplicating in Southern Italy and in Greece the triumphs won by his fellow-countryman, William the Conqueror, who during the same decade was subduing England. Four hundred years later the seaport was again raided, and this time was completely destroyed by the Turks. From this setback it never recovered. Among the points of interest in the village to-day are the castle, built by Alphonso of Aragon, and the cathedral, which dates back to the eleventh century and in which are to be found some of the columns that once graced the temple of Minerva at San Nicola, near by.

"South of Otranto is an extremely fertile and populous section of the Apulian peninsula, which terminates thirty miles below the town in the promontory of Maria di Leuca, with its white limestone cliffs marking the southeastern extremity of Italy. To the northwest of Otranto, fifty-three miles by rail, is Brindisi, the famous Brundusium of the ancients, which has taken life in recent years owing to its advantageous position as a gateway for the freight coming from beyond the Alps through the St. Gothard and the Mount Cenis tunnels, destined for the Far East through Suez.

"Avlona, also called Valona, on the eastern shores of the Otranto Straits, has the best harbor on the Albanian coast, being protected by the Island of Saseno and the lofty Cape Glossa. Like Otranto, it suffered pillage at the hands of the Turks in the fifteenth century, but it recovered from this misfortune more readily than its Italian sister city, for it is now a town of 6,000 people, and enjoys a considerable trade in hides, olives, cottons, cattle and bitumen, while it is famous for valonia, made from the acorn cups gathered in adjacent oak groves. This 'flour,' which derives its name from the town, is used extensively in the tanning industry.

"It was across the Straits of Otranto that the valiant Pyrrhus, cousin of Alexander the Great, and professed descendant of Pyrrhus, son of Achilles, sailed in the third century before the Christian era. Espousing the cause of the people of Tarantum, he fought those desperate battles against Rome which gave rise to the familiar phrase, 'a pyrrhic victory,' used to-day to describe a conflict the successful issue of which is so costly to the victory as ultimately to prove disastrous. It was after Heraclea, where for the first time in history Greeks and Romans were the opposing forces, that Pyrrhus, surveying the field where thousands of his bravest troops lay dead, exclaimed: 'Another such victory and I must return to Epirus alone.' It was on the same occasion that, observing the wounds of all the Roumans killed in action to be in front, he mused, 'Had I such soldiers I should soon be master of the world.'"

THE WALRUS.

Grotesque Creature Has Strongly Developed Maternal Instincts.

The walruses or "sea horses" of the old navigators are the strangest and most grotesque of all sea animals, says National Georgraphic Magazine. Their large, rugged heads, armed with two long ivory tusks, and their huge swollen bodies, covered with hairless, wrinkled, and warty skin, give them a formidable appearance unlike that of any other animal. They are much larger than most seals, the old males weighing from 2000 to 3000 pounds and the females about two-thirds as much.

Walruses have a strongly developed maternal instinct and show great devotion and disregard of their own safety in defending the young. The Eskimos at Cape Vancouver-Bearing Sea, hunt them in frail skin-covered kyaks, using ivory or bone-pointed spears and sealskin floats. Several hunters told me of exciting and dangerous encounters they had experienced with mother walruses. If the young are attacked, or even approached, mother does not hesitate to charge furiously. The hunters confess that on such occasion there is no option but to paddle for one's life. Occasionally an old walrus is unusually vindictive and, after forcing a hunter to take refuge on the ice, will remain patrolling the vicinity for a long time, roaring and menacing the object of her anger.

Liberator of Roumania.

"Michael the Brave," before whose statue of Bucharest the Roumanians are displaying their war trophies, is the national hero of our brave allies. Born in 1558, the son of a Wallachian chieftain, he became Divan of the province in 1593, partly through the influence of the English ambassador at Constantinople, Edward Barton, but quickly rebelled against the Sultan, and, after two overwhelming victories in 1595 and 1597, freed the Roumanian people for a while from the Turkish yoke. His ambition led to assaults on neighboring provinces, which brought the whole Roumanian race under one rule for the first and only time in modern history, but his career was ended by an assassin's blade in September, 1601.

There is a Message In This Lady's Story

SHE TELLS WHAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS DO FOR WOMEN.

She Was Troubled With Weakness And Her Daughter Had Nervous Trouble. Dodd's Kidney Pills Proved the Remedy They Both Needed.

Hamilton, Ont., May 17.—(Special.) The story told by Mrs. H. Dickens, of 70 Tom street, this city, carries a message of hope to every suffering woman in Canada.

"After my baby was born," Mrs. Dickens states, "I used to suffer with my back and had no heart to do my work around the home. But I read about Dodd's Kidney Pills and what they have done for others, so I thought I would get a box and see what they would do for me.

"I am pleased to say that after taking two boxes I found such great relief I would not be without them in the house.

"My daughter, too, had been very sick on and off for a long time. Her nerves got so bad we were afraid we would see her in the hospital. But I am pleased to say she is better through taking Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I never thought Dodd's Kidney Pills could have done such good work and I am telling all my friends about them."

Women's troubles, or nearly all of them, come from sick kidneys. The cure for them is the old established remedy for sick kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

ANTICS OF PURE GLYCERIN.

This Queer Substance is Endowed With Peculiar Properties.

One of the great advantages of glycerin in its chemical employment is the fact that it neither freezes nor evaporates under any ordinary temperature.

No perceptible loss by evaporation has been detected at a temperature less than 2,000 degrees F., but if heated intensely it decomposed with a smell that few perhaps find themselves able to endure. It burns with a pale flame, similar to that from alcohol, if heated to about 300 degrees and then ignited.

Its non-evaporative qualities make the compound of much use as a vehicle for holding pigments and colors, as in stamping and typewriter ribbons, carbon papers and the like.

If the pure glycerin be exposed a long time to a freezing temperature it crystallizes with the appearance of sugar candy, but these crystals begin once melted it is almost an impossibility to get them again into the congealed state.

If a little water be added to the glycerin no crystallization will take place though under a sufficient degree of cold the water will separate and form crystals, amid which the glycerin will remain in its natural state of fluidity. If suddenly subjected to intense cold pure glycerin will form a gummy mass which cannot be entirely hardened or crystallized.

Altogether it is quite a peculiar substance.

Big Telephone Pole.

The highest telephone or telegraph pole in the world has recently been installed to carry wires over a river in the State of Washington. The old pole at this point was 90 feet high, but the increasing size of the steamers using the river made it necessary to raise the wires. The new pole is 130 feet high, a single stick of Oregon fir. It took a crew of 12 men and a donkey engine to set it, and it is further secured by a double set of guys and braces, running from a point half way to the top to nearby trees.

Bother With Brake Bands.

Many cars are fitted with rear wheel metal emergency brake bands and quite often the bands rub against the wheel drums and cause a characteristic scraping sound. The scraping is not only annoying, but it wears brake band and consumes power. To cure the drag and remove the trouble remove the wheel and examine the band. Very often it will be found that there is a bright spot at the point of friction. This point is out of true and should be removed. Where the brake band is malleable it may be struck with a hammer enough to spring the band slightly and remove the high spot. Replace the wheel and spin it to determine whether the trouble has been eliminated; if not continue the operation until the band assumes the proper shape.

THE AGE OF THE EARTH.

Radioactive Evidence Now Brought Forward.

Estimates of the age of the earth based on radioactive and ordinary geological phenomena differ greatly from each other. In a recent discussion of this subject Arthur Holmes points out that estimates of the former category have all been based on the assumption that the radioactive "constants" of uranium and its daughter elements have not varied with time. On this assumption it is calculated that something like 1,250,000,000 years represent the time that has elapsed since the crystalization of the oldest plutonic rocks of the earth's crust. Since there is geological evidence that these rocks are intrusive into a pre-existing sedimentary or volcanic series, the actual age of the earth would be much greater than this. On the other hand, geological estimates, founded on sedimentation and salt accumulation, point to decidedly lower figures; any 100,000,000 to 400,000,000 years. Professor Joly has suggested that the discrepancy between the radioactive and geological estimates would disappear in favor of the former if it could be shown that the rate of decay of uranium has decreased with the lapse of time. Readers of the novels of H. G. Wells, who is rapidly attaining the reputation of a Mother Shipton on the strength of the things in his stories which have later come to pass, will recall that in describing the death-period half its initial substances for that dealing "atomic-bomb" he introduced a concept similar to this—that of a disintegrating element which in any period of a certain fixed length dissipates exactly half its initial substance for that period. More rapid decay would, however, have been attended by a more rapid generation of heat of radioactive origin, and this would have prolonged or even reversed the secular cooling of the crust, against indicating an excessively great age for the earth. The escape from the dilemma would appear to be to deny that the earth's surface was formerly in a molten condition. The whole subject is of course, largely speculative in the present state of science. It will, however, help greatly to elucidate the problem of the earth's age if it can be determined whether the rate of decay of uranium is dependent upon time, pressure and temperature.—"Scientific American."

"Twelve years," replied the newcomer.

CHANCELLOR BONAR LAW ON THE WAR

Vastly More Results, at Vastly Less Loss, Than at the Somme.

EXPENSES RISE

But U. S. Aid More Than Outbalances—Germany's Error.

London Cable.—In the House of Commons to-day Right Hon. Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, referring to the west front, said the rapidity of the attack had forestalled the enemy, who had to fight in the open, with heavy losses, because he had not had time to prepare trenches. Since April 1 we had taken 20,000 prisoners, 257 guns, 227 trench mortars. While in the first 24 days of the Somme drive we advanced three and one-half miles on a six-mile front, we had now advanced from two to five miles on a 20-mile front, where there were twice as many German divisions against us as on the Somme, and half of them had to be withdrawn.

Our casualties in the present offensive were from 50 to 75 per cent. less than on the Somme. Our success was largely due to our distinct artillery superiority, in connection with which the Chancellor paid a warm tribute to the flying corps.

FATAL GERMAN MISTAKE.

Referring to the entry of the United States, the speaker said the Germans had shown an energy in organization, power and resourcefulness of every kind which in a better cause could not have failed to win the admiration of the world. But they had made many mistakes, mainly in failing to understand human nature. He thought they had made a mistake in deciding to start the ruthless campaign on the sea, not against their enemies, but against mankind. They must have had in view the possibility and probability of America's being forced into the war, yet despite this calculation and the success which attended the submarine warfare, which he certainly was not going to minimize, and which might compel the people of Britain to show staying power and suffer hardships hitherto unknown in this war—despite all this, he at least did not doubt that on the balance the Germans had lost, namely by adding one of the greatest nations of the world to the number of their enemies.

"All the information we have received," he continued, "bears out what we could have expected in advance, that the American people are not likely to do anything by half, that the United States have already shown not only that they are prepared to organize to the full strength of the nation, but that they realize to the full the value of immediate assistance. The assistance which they have already given, in addition to financial assistance, which is of the greatest value, will become increasingly important as the weeks advance."

Referring to the British mission to the United States, Mr. Law said he did not believe in saying anything in praise of his colleagues, but he was going to make an exception. Mr. Balfour, as every one who worked with him knew, had from the beginning of the war regarded himself as a soldier whose duty it was to undertake any task he was called upon to fulfill. It was in that spirit that the Premier had asked him, without a moment's hesitation, to agree to undertake this mission, and the speaker ventured to say that no service in his public life had been greater to the State than that rendered by him in connection with this mission.

SUPERIORITY OF AIRMEN.

"The desire of the enemy," said Mr. Law, "to [illegible] the feeling of necessity on his part to prevent our advance was shown in the extreme violence of his counter-attacks. One of these last night resulted in our losing a position we had taken, but regrettable as that was, it was only an incident in the kind of fighting that was now going on. When we consider the original enemy artillery superiority and how absolutely destitute we were of munitions, we have a right to be proud of our present distinct superiority over the enemy in those respects.

"That superiority is also shown by our airmen, who are the eyes of our long-range guns. I have been told more than once in France that it is not uncommon to find regiments show their admiration of our airmen by cheering them as they fly over the lines. That is not surprising. These men are all young, many mere boys, but from the beginning of the war they have shown dash, gallantry, nerve and resource enabling us to say that a more glorious fighting force never existed in the world.

LOSSES OF GERMANS.

"If we wish to realize what has been done on the western front, let us compare our feelings if in the same period as the battle of Arras we had lost twenty thousand prisoners, and the number of guns the Germans have lost."

Explaining the apparent increase in the cost of the war, the Chancellor said it was the sum of thirty million pounds sterling during the period under review, which couldn't be regarded as a real expenditure. The expenses of the Dominion Governments were paid here, and reimbursed by the Dominions' Governments. In April we paid out, but did not receive. There was, therefore, no reason to suppose that the budget estimate of expenditure for the coming year would not be approximately correct.

MESOPOTAMIAN SUCCESS.

Dealing with the Mesopotamian success, Bonar Law said that no small part of the credit was due to the work of the general staff at home, which had made the arrangements. Part of the credit was due also to the splendid courage and ardor of the troops. But much of the credit was due to Gen. Maude, who had shown military ability of the highest order.

Reverting to the operations on the west front, the Chancellor said it was inevitable that progress must be slow. One of the most encouraging features of the battle, however, was the almost hysterical German communiques about imaginary victories in order to keep up the courage of their people. The extent of the German failure, he said, was well illustrated by the figures he had quoted.

MOVES VOTE OF CREDIT.

In moving a vote of credit for £500,000,000, Bonar Law said that the alarming feature of the figures was that they represented a total daily expenditure of £7,450,000.

The vote of credit moved by the Chancellor brings the total since the outbreak of the war to £4,642,000,000. With the exception of the credit of £550,000,000 voted in February, the credit asked to-day was the largest single amount during the war.

The expenditure, said the Chancellor, had recently exceeded the estimate. Of the expenditure for the first thirty-five days of the financial year, £2,000,000 a day had gone to the allies and the dominions. The budget estimate for this use was about £1,000,000 a day, so the estimate was exceeded by £1,000,000 daily. America, however, continued the Chancellor, had acted with promptitude, for which the nation could not be too grateful. She had not only promised, but had actually afforded financial assistance to Great Britain's allies, and he therefore hoped that the budget estimate of expenditure under this head would be realized.

For the first period of the vote of credit last year the daily expenditure was £4,820,000, and for the corresponding period this year £7,450,000. The present vote would carry the Government on until about August 1.

76 HUNS PLANES LOST IN WEEK

French Aviators Have Been Doing Great Work.

Berlin Makes Big Claims to Success.

Paris Cable.—An official report tonight says:

"During the period of May 1 to 7 our pilots had numerous combats with enemy aviators. In the course of which twenty-five German machines were brought down, the destruction of which was absolutely established. In addition thirty-one German machines, seriously hit, fell within their own lines, the greater part of them being probably destroyed.

"Our pilots in that period added to the number of their exploits. Captain Guynemer gained his 37th and 38th victories. Sub-Lieutenant Nungesser brought down three machines, which brought his total of enemy machines destroyed up to 24. Sub-Lieut. Dorme brought down his twenty-first, Lieut. Pinsard his eleventh and twelfth and Adjutant Madon his tenth."

GERMANS MAKE BIG CLAIMS.

Berlin Cable.—An official statement tonight says:

"During the month of April the enemy lost 382 airplanes and 29 captive balloons. Of the former 289 were brought down in aerial battles. We lost 74 airplanes and ten captive balloons.

"The past month has shown the German aerial fighting forces at the zenith of their capacity, while our defensive forces were successfully engaged in warding off ruthless enemy bomb attacks on the fatherland.

"The heavy April fighting made the highest demands on our aviators, captive balloons and anti-aircraft guns in the field. In co-operation, which daily grew more intimate, they showed themselves equal to their tasks, and our bombing squadrons destroyed important military establishments and our aerial reconnoitring operations brought valuable information to the headquarters. The self-sacrificing co-operation of our aviators has been rewarded in an exemplary manner by heavy infantry and artillery [illegible]"

BEER VS. FOOD

Discussed in British House of Commons.

London Cable.—The question of food waste was lengthily discussed in the House of Commons to-day. Many of the speakers severely criticized the Government for still permitting the brewers to destroy valuable food in the production of alcoholic liquors. The debate elicited no statement on the Government policy with respect to the rumored State purchase of public houses.

Dr. Christopher Addison, Minister of Munitions, speaking on behalf of the Government, said the reason that all the distilleries were not closed down was the necessity of providing spirit for the manufacture of munitions. He further explained that until a substitute for yeast could be found it was impossible, having regard for the needs of bread production, to stop brewing. The Government had tried to cut down the production of beer to the bed-rock minimum. There was a demand by the munition workers for beer, and the Government felt that it had already cut the supply to an amount which would raise in the near future some serious problems.

Mrs. Newlywed—The butcher assured me this was spring lamb, but I can scarcely cut it. Mr. Newlywed—Yes, it's tough to die young.

U-BOAT TOLL WAS MUCH LESS THE LAST WEEK

Submarine Campaign is Apparently Being Mastered by the Navy.

U.S. PLANS ARE REAL

Secretary Daniels Declares Scheme to End Trouble No Dream.

London Cable.—A substantial decrease in the number of sinkings by submarines in the past week will be shown in the forthcoming weekly report of shipping losses. In fact, it is stated, the report will show the smallest losses in the past three weeks.

No reason for this is given out by official sources, but it is plainly intimated that considerable progress has been made in the anti-submarine campaign. There is no guarantee that the weekly losses will not again assume alarming proportions, but the fact that they have been substantially reduced is very encouraging to those in charge of the campaign, and it is believed that the new measures to combat the under-water craft are already showing gratifying results.

PLANS ARE NO DREAM.

Washington, May —Hope is brightening that American inventive genius has found the road that may lead to freedom of the seas from German submarines.

A conference of unusual importance was held to-night at the home of Secretary Daniels. It was called in order that high officials of the navy might go over with members of the Naval Consulting Board the experiments already tried and those that are in prospect.

Many officials declared the scientists were coming down to "brass tacks," that the period of [illegible] out after every suggestion was passing, and that definite crystallization of the work upon which the foremost American experts have concentrated was certain to come soon.

W. L. Saunders, chairman of the consulting board, headed the representation of scientists, which included the following members of the board's committee on special naval problems: Lawrence Addicks, chairman; Thomas Robbins, Elmer A. Sperry and Benjamin B. Thayer.

Reports were also available to-night from Thomas A. Edison, who is at work on a somewhat different line of investigation.

After the conference to-night Secretary Daniels said:

"We have gone over all the problems connected with combatting the submarines, and experts of the consulting board will continue their experiments with inventions designed to eliminate the menace. I can only say this concerning their work—that their plans are no dream. They are very important and very far-reaching."

CROP OUTLOOK IS VERY FAIR

Good Reports ~~of~~ Acreage Under Cultivation.

Bad Growing Weather—Stock Healthy, Lean.

Toronto Report.—According to the weekly report of the various agricultural representatives of the Department of Agriculture, poor growing conditions prevailed throughout the province generally for the week ending May 7, although more optimistic accounts are given regarding the [illegible] under crop. In most districts about two-thirds of the [illegible] already in and a York correspondent reports that the acreage under crop already this year is equal in volume to the total amount put under cultivation last season.

Large acreages of early potatoes have been planted, and the report indicates that the area to be put into beans and corn will be well above the average. The boom in vegetable growing continues in both town and country, displaying a good response to the appeals for greater production now being made by the Provincial Government through the Organization of Resources Committee and the various local associations affiliated with it.

Livestock are reported as healthy but on the lean side, [illegible] hold firm for these and pork. Fodder is getting scarce [illegible], but there seems to be sufficient in store to carry all stock [illegible] on the grass.

The labor problem is far from being settled, although reports regarding the work of High School boys indicate that the lads are giving satisfaction and the [illegible] is being engaged through the Boards of Trade and other town organizations is helping to relieve the situation.

GERMAN REDISTRICTING.

Amsterdam, via London Cable.—During the discussion on redistricting in the Reichstag main committee last Tuesday, Dr. Lewald, director of a department in the Home Office, said that the Government had been considering the question for some time. He added that the Federated Governments would be consulted and an effort made, with due regard to all political and economic factors, to prepare an electoral law which would adjust present disparities.

HIGH PRAISE OF VALOR OF CANADIANS

Correspondent Tells of Heroic Work of Troops in Recent Drive.

FRESNOY FIGHT

One French-Canadian Held Up Two Hun Officers, 72 Men.

(By Philip Gibbs.)

War Correspondents' Headquarters, Cable.—The bombardment I described yesterday was the preliminary of a strong attack against our position in and around Fresnoy. Upon this village and the neighboring ground the enemy concentrated everything he has in artillery, which can be directed on the sector of the front, and in addition to ordinary high explosives and shrapnel flung a storm of gas shells wherever he thought we had battery positions. Fresnoy itself had been a difficult place to hold since the Canadians took it so gallantly on May 3rd. Having Acheville to the north of it and Oppy to the south, it jutted out like a square-walled bastion with exposed sides, along which at the time of capture the Canadians had to form defensive flanks. The enemy had marked it down for an attack, and for several days made strong counter-thrusts on each side of it in order to prevent our troops from getting forward to straighten out the line.

ENGLISH BEAR THE BRUNT.

It was the English troops who had to bear the brunt of their concentrated fury, timed for yesterday's dawn. The German Army Corps Staff evidently decided to attack with the greatest strength possible on a narrow front, which was already held by their best troops. North and south of Acheville they had the Fourth Guards Division and north and south of Oppy the First Guard Reserve Division. Round about Fresnoy was the Fifteenth Reserve Division, and to stiffen and support this the German Guards sideslipped down a thousand yards. As further precautions against any weakness on the part of the Fifteenth Reserve Division, already tried by our shell fire, fresh troops of the First Bavarian were suddenly brought up, and after the first attack yesterday morning, passed through the lines of the Fifteenth, and in dense column formation went forward like a battering ram against the English troops, who had already suffered in the intense bombardment. Canadian officers are full of praise of the dogged spirit of the south country English lads, who held on in spite of the frightful fire, served machine guns to the last, and only fell back from the advanced lines when, for a time, Fresnoy village was a heap of ruins, like all those villages of the war, and became a death-trap in which no man could stay alive. They have already gained back part of the lost ground and hold it at the time I write, the line running up from the northwest corner of Fresnoy Wood. It is a setback on a small scale, which must be expected from time to time, now that the enemy has decided to stand and give battles rather than retreat at once beyond the Hindenburg line, and is an episode revealing again his desperate way of fighting since our success on April 9th menaced him with supreme disaster.

PRAISE FOR CANADIANS.

The Canadian troops who fought up from Neuville St. Vaast right over Vimy Ridge, and then on through Arleux to Fresnoy, a marvellous thrust of six miles in depth since the first day of the fighting in Artois here, in spite of all their losses and the price of all [illegible] absolute faith in their supremacy as soldiers over the enemy's troops, though they do not despise him or under-estimate his strength, and [illegible] to-day battalions which lost much are in some strange way [illegible] most high spirited and buoyant. These men who took Arleux and Fresnoy are great soldiers, excelling in certain grim qualities of the sport which makes them terrible in attack and strong to endure. They have been long in the war, and suffered much at Ypres, at St. Eloi and at Courcelette, and all that training in and out of the trenches has made them as hard as steel. The sound of shellfire is as familiar to them as their words, which I heard passing to-day, [illegible] turned out and the [illegible] the southern slopes of Vimy Ridge. Even these battalions had [illegible] back from Fresnoy, where they carried up supplies to the fighting men, and the pipers of the Canadian Scots played their men into battle and out again with honors for those who did not come back.

GREAT DEEDS OF HEROISM.

In the month of fighting the men I saw to-day have done astonishing things to add to the great tale of human courage [illegible] only that, but [illegible] life which goes on day after day on the [illegible] battlefields of the stricken fields of France. Imagine the spirit of men who will walk through two barrages, falling walls of shellfire, in order to get at an enemy beyond. That was what happened on the way to Fresnoy. The enemy dropped his barrage this side of ours to smash our men, but they went on. They went through our own shells and into a German trench, where they routed the enemy. They waited a minute or two while our storm of shells swept over them and beyond them. Through such a wall of shells one of these Canadians ran straight to a German machine-gun emplacement which he saw beyond, waiting to mow down his comrades as soon as our curtain of fire had passed. By some miracle he passed unscathed. Just as the enemy machine-gun team came up from their dugout to begin their deadly work they never made a start, for that single Canadian soldier ended their business.

The Canadians' hard training has told, and they are quick to see a point, and to do it in a moment of extreme hazard. So on the way to Fresnoy when they found in front of them a trench filled with German Grenadiers, they fell flat as in their practice camps and fired rifle grenades steadily and with deadly fire till the enemy surrendered or fled or died. It was an act of high sacrifice when a corporal said to men caught under machine-gun fire and dying in a shell crater: "Wait till I run, then you beat it." He ran, drawing the enemy's fire, and the other men had a greater chance. In an attack a mortar bomb fell at the feet of a bomber, and he had fourteen seconds to save his men and himself. He flung it at the German machine-gun emplacement, where it exploded instantly.

THEY KNOW NO FEAR.

What is the dividing line between courage and fear? I have seen a great deal of war and I cannot tell. Certainly the bravest men are the most candid in their telling of their fears, and it was a very brave man, a French Canadian, who said the other day between Arleux and Fresnoy, "By gum, I got scared, I got fair scared." And no wonder, for arriving outside a German dugout a man whom he took prisoner told him in French there were more inside. "More" is an uncertain word. The French-Canadian expected two or three, but out came two German officers and seventy men, and just then the Canadian was quite alone. It was then he got scared. He was armed with only two bombs, and he pulled out the pins and shouted: "Stand back, stand back, or I will kill you!" The seventy-two Germans stood back until three other Canadians arrived and formed an escort for them. "By gum, I was scared," said the French Canadian. But it was men no braver who captured Fresnoy. For the time that village is lost, but one day sooner or later our men will take it back. These men of ours do not reckon the cost, even though it is their own life that pays.

TRIED TO SHOOT GERMAN RULER

New York Report.—A news agency despatch from Rome, published here this forenoon says:

Kaiser Wilhelm had a narrow escape from an assassin's bullet while motoring to Berlin, a Zurich despatch to the Corriere D'Italia asserted to-day. An unidentified man fired three shots at the Kaiser's car, two of them striking the tonneau, the third going wide. He was arrested.

The despatch said the police were silent on the incident.

FIRED AT A SUB.

Which Disappeared at U. S. Ship's First Shot.

New York Report.—The Associated Press says:

An armed American Line steamship which arrived here to-night from a European port reported that her gun crew fired six shots at a German submarine off the coast of Ireland on May 2. The undersea boat immediately submerged and it was impossible to determine whether any of the shots took effect.

When the periscope of the submarine was sighted the American vessel immediately swung around to afford the gunners an opportunity for accurate aim. The undersea craft disappeared simultaneously with the firing of the first shot, it was said, and did not reappear. The American ship then put on full steam and proceeded on her course.

On board the vessel were [illegible] members of the crew of the Norwegian barque [illegible], sunk off the Irish coast by a German submarine on April [illegible], and the [illegible] of the Norwegian barque [illegible], sunk by submarine on April 22.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

After all, we should not forget that the farmers know better, on the whole, than anyone else what to sow, and when and where.

* * *

A despatch says retired farmers are needed to instruct amateur gardeners, who are working in the war production campaign. Tut, Tut! All the amateur needs is a copy of any Toronto daily.

* * *

United States writers advocate the increased planting of Indian corn. Already the States grows three times as much corn as wheat, and they do say corn bread is a good ration. More corn might profitably be tried in our own district.

* * *

If reports are to be relied on, some of the returned maimed soldiers are not being treated very kindly by the government's Pension Board. If it is, true that a Toronto soldier whose arm is withering was awarded only a small pension of $50 for a short time, then it's a disgrace to the people of Canada.

* * *

No sooner do we get rid of the arm chair critic of the war than on comes the city pen pusher to tell the rural inhabitants how to plant their garden and cultivate their farms. What the farmer and big gardeners want now is help. Muscle help not pen pusher orders.—Winchester Press.

The Board of License Commissioners have issued 1,244 Standard Hotel licenses for the year beginning May 1, 1917, this number showing very nearly the same as for the expiring license year, and indicating that the hotel accommodation of the Province continues ample. Between 40 and 50 applications are reserved, most of which are to be considered refusals.

One of the powerful weeklies of Canada is The Orillia Times. Last week it had a special number of twenty pages, which reflected credit on the staff, editorially and mechanically. Mr. H. T. Blackstone, formerly of The Brantford Expositor, is the proprietor of The Times, and the advertising patronage and news features found in the special issue show Orillia to be a thriving place, and The Times one of its best business concerns.

The government is investigating the newsprint situation. This will please the editors all right, but are newspapers more important than foods? There isn't a daily printed that could not give all the news necessary in eight pages, and scarcely a weekly that could not get along easily with four pages. Yet we find some dailies using from 30 to 70 pages. The government should investigate also the uses to which news print is being put.

* * *

In March there were six fires reported in Bruce County with a loss of $2,646. Of this loss $2,246 was covered by insurance. It is important that great care should be taken to prevent fires. Everyone should aim to have as little loss or waste as possible. If you have not insured look up The Times' directory and have your property insured. But, on second thought, The Times does not carry any insurance advertising. Perhaps it's because business in this line is too good, and no solicitation is necessary.

Well, there's one thing not up in price! School books. The Minister of Education has announced that arrangements have been concluded by which all text books, the contracts for which expire in June, 1917, will be published during the next school year at the same prices as previously. The list of books thus renewed includes the following: Composition, 15 cents; Hygiene, 20 cents; Arithmetic, 10 cents; History of England, 25 cents; and History of Canada, 25 cents; the two latter being in one volume and selling at 50 cents.

If the speculator bought Western wheat and Eastern potatoes and is holding them for higher prices, why not fix the price? This would probably cure the mania on the part of some men to hold up things. A Toronto professor says the only way to lower prices is to let wheat go to $10 a bushel and potatoes to $10 a bag. All the farmers would then grow wheat and potatoes. And this would just suit the speculator immensely.

The new recruiting plan for this district should meet with approval from Bruce county people. Major Nelson is a returned soldier from our own district and to him is given charge. Every day sees young men going quietly to Toronto and enlisting, and these young men are all tabulated as Toronto enlistments. With the new plan all young men should notify Major Nelson who will place them with any branch of the service, but who will also see that Bruce county is given the credit for the soldier. Every week young men leave Port Elgin and join on in Toronto, and are credited to Toronto district

* * *

Every little while we find substantiated charges of men endeavoring to corral quantities of food, and necessaries, for a higher price. In Hamilton last week at a city council meeting it was shown by one councillor that one firm alone was holding between four and five thousand bags of potatoes which it had bought at from $1 to $2 per bushel. Information was also given to the council that some coal dealers were holding large quantities of coal from last winter that could be sold at $8. All these things should have a tendency to force government action in the matter of regulating prices of all necessities in fuel and food.

* * *

Petitions, like a crowd, contain very little virtue. The one to discharge the overseer which was presented to the council without a sponsor, was one which received scant consideration. When petitions are necessary, and sometimes they are, it is always well to have a wholesome desire at heart. The power of petition should not be used except where there is an honest conviction that the greatest good to the greatest number is to be achieved. Every place is entitled to the very best possible service from its officers and employes, and every corporation should see that it values the work of its officers and employes, or else replaces them in a proper and businesslike way.

* * *

A despatch from Brant county last week rather hinted that some farmers would not make much effort to plant extra crop and that they were not planting potatoes at all fearing the price would be low. This kind of spirit, if the report be correct, is not true to the spirit of the average farmer. In this part of Bruce County The Times is glad to report that the farmers are co-operating in a splendid way, and they are planning to put in such heavy crops that the harvesting of them will occasion much serious thought. It may be that the report from Brant was prompted by over anxiety on the part of a daily newspaper correspondent.

* * *

The government will have to take action regarding fixing prices on food and fuel before next fall and winter. While some people are wroth because they have not done this before, it must be remembered that there are many things to consider. If one line of goods falls under the War Measures Act then other lines will be submitted. For instance, it's a glorious time the daily press is having in telling the farmer what he ought to do. But supposing the farmer were to retaliate by asking the government to shut off all use of automobiles not necessary to the production of foodstuffs. What a howl would go up from the city manufacturer. And the chief argument would be that it would throw men out of work in the cities. Yes, the government has a big task when it comes to fixing prices, but it must be done, and it should be done without too much fear of the big corporations.

* * *

The town council paid a tribute to a very worthy citizen last week, when it sent a resolution to the general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia regretting that Mr. Currie had been asked to resign for a very slight breach of an arbitrary bank regulation. The concluding part of the resolution regretted that "organized tyranny" sometimes existed in our own country. Kaiserism is a word which will apply to other places than Germany, and to other men than the Kaiser. There are plenty of men absolutely void of the brotherhood idea, and they are not confined to any particular place. The one who sees no good in another, the one who wants to master everyone, if not by consent, then by force, and the one who is not only out with the hook, but the gaff also, are types of people that are not confined to Kaiser Wilhelm alone. They are everywhere to be found. The live and let live idea, the "do unto others", etc are not developed in some people's natures.

A Small Town Club
(A Visit to Courtesy Town)

A stranger arrives feeling a little lonesome and blue. It is a thousand miles to his home. He does not know how business is going to be, but he knows how bad it has been. He has had a bad night. He is ready to hit back on the least provocation.

He starts up the street. A well dressed, busy-looking man passes him.

"Good morning, sir!" He gives his hand a friendly wave.

The stranger half turns and looks after him.

"Must have thought he knew me," says the blue visitor; but half a block farther on he meets another man.

"Fine morning!" The citizen nods and smiles.

Directly the visitor begins to feel a change in his spirits. This is a friendly town; and that is a nice park over there the squirrels are at play in the trees and the grass is very green.

Now it is no concerted action on the part of the inhabitants of this town. It is a spirit of friendliness started somewhere, sometime, which has bred a general courtesy and consideration for each other, and for the stranger within their square.

No matter how strong the competition is in a town, business and personal courtesy makes it easier and pleasanter for everybody.

The stranger feels it and remembers it; and now and then it causes one to buy a corner lot and build, and another to come back half across a continent and locate in this town of pleasant memories.

There are almost as many mottoes as there are factory promoters. But it might be useful to a Commercial Club to have a few more on their walls:

1. Do not hire people to come to your town. You might have to hire them to leave.

2. If the best thing you have to offer a factory is a bonus—keep the bonus.

3. Publicity does not consist in bragging about what you have not got to people who do not care what you have, but in convincing the man who wants to know that you really have it.

4. Speak to the stranger on the street. He may be the man you are looking for.

5. Extend to the visitor in the town some of the same courtesy you would to the visitor in your home.

6. If you love your town, show it by doing or giving some things you do not expect a profit on; then you will get a profit on some things you do not expect.

The Jeweller

Frank Geddes Writes From Vimy Ridge

France, April 8th.
Easter Sunday.

"With a few moments to spare I will try to write a short letter. By the time you get this the papers will have told of to-morrow's, happenings which we have known to be coming for some time.

The Canadians with our brigade in the front are going over with the picked regiments of the British army on the right and left. The artillery support is expected to be such as to make that of the Somme insignificant, and with other preparations to correspond, the casualties are expected to be light in comparison.

If it is a success and it surely will be, it will rank as one of the greatest operations of the war, or at least the start of such.

Fritz may have more respect for the "uncultured savages of the colonies", if he hasn't already got it.

I have put off writing for a few days until I could try to find out definitely the extent of Roy's wounds. As far as I can ascertain they are not dangerous, though rather extensive.

I must close now and try to get a few hours sleep as I will need all my faculties tomorrow morning.

Then on April 11th he writes:

"This is the first opportunity I have had to get a letter off to you since that never-to-be-forgotten 9th, Easter Monday. Have had opportunity to write but no mail has been sent as we are still fairly well advanced.

Saw an English paper to-night which said our taking of Vimy ridge was one of the most notable achievements of the war.

If you understand what Vimy meant you can easily realize that we feel quite satisfied with ourselves. It is said to be the strongest natural position on the western front, previously held and lost by both French and Imperials. The barrage under which we advanced was the heaviest of the war. Not a square foot of his lines but was ploughed up. The Sahara desert was a blooming Garden of Eden to the desolation there. I saw what were in some respects the most glorious sights of my life, in other respects the most awful. I will tell you some of the former in a later letter. Was very glad to meet and talk to Ewart Geddes and through him to meet Stan Morton and Fin Hepburn. Heard that some one in the Pats had card from Roy and I am so glad to hear he is well enough to write, probably in the end he was lucky to miss this. I lost some of my best friends in the Pats including Trow of Stratford."

Frank.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson VIII. May 20, 1917.

The Importance of Self-Control.—Temperance Lesson.—Isaiah 28: 1-13.

Commentary.—I. A nation in danger (vs. 1-4). 1. Woe—This is not an imprecation, but a warning. The prophet is foretelling the destruction of a debauched nation. Crown of pride—Samaria, the capital of Israel, was situated upon a beautiful, round hill about three hundred feet in height. It is here spoken of as "the crown of pride." Drunkards of Ephraim—Ephraim is used to stand for the entire kingdom, and the inference is that this was a nation of drunkards. A fading flower—Samaria was a thriving city and beautiful for situation, but the prophet saw it as a lovely flower beginning to fade. The destruction of Samaria and the captivity of Israel were only three or four years in the future. Even then the Assyrians under Shalmaneser were ready to bring about its destruction. Head of the fat valleys—Samaria was surrounded by beautiful, fruitful valleys. 2. Behold—The prophet's message demands attention. The Lord hath a mighty and strong one—The Assyrians were eager to conquer and take possession of Israel, and the Lord would withdraw his protection and permit Assyria to carry out her purpose. The fierceness and destructiveness of the Assyrian army is vividly expressed in the language of this verse. The army is compared to some of the most destructive forces in nature, "a tempest of hail and a destroying storm," and "a flood of mighty waters overflowing." 3. Crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim—The city of Samaria in all its beauty and prosperity is spoken of in these terms. The people were revelling in luxury, and drunkenness abounded. The nation was "overcome with wine" (v. 1). Trodden under feet—If the people of Israel had not been under the power of drink, they would have realized their danger and would have been able to defend themselves; but they were blind to their condition and became an easy prey to the Assyrian host. 4. The glorious beauty ..... shall be a fading flower—Samaria is represented as a fading flower in a sightly place. After the Assyrians, as a "tempest of hail" and a "flood of mighty waters," had swept over it, there would be nothing left of its beauty and prominence. The hasty fruit—Some of the fruit of the fig tree became ripe as early as June, when the main crop ripened in August. The "hasty fruit" was the "first ripe fig," and was esteemed a great delicacy, which was eagerly devoured by those who found it. So the Assyrians would eagerly devour Samaria and the land of Israel. Isaiah in his beauty saw this fearful destruction which was only a few years in the future.

II. Help in God (vs. 5-6). 5. In that day—At the time when the kingdom of Israel should be overthrown because of its drunkenness and other forms of wickedness. The Lord of hosts—"Jehovah of hosts."—R. V. A crown of glory—In striking contrast to the "crown of pride." Unto the residue of his people—Direct reference is doubtless made to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which constituted the kingdom of Judah. About the time the Assyrians took the northern kingdom into captivity, Hezekiah became king of Judah and instituted important and far-reaching reforms, and the kingdom prospered. It stood for a period of one hundred and thirty-five years after the northern kingdom ceased to exist. It is also doubtless true, as many commentators think, than the prophet saw in his vision the ushering in of Messiah's kingdom and the blessings that would attend his reign. 6. Spirit of judgment—Justice, righteousness. To him that sitteth in judgment—To the ruler of the people. To them that turn the battle to the gate—To those who wage a victorious warfare. The idea is that of driving the enemy back to the gates of the city from whence they came. There is great encouragement to the children of God in these verses. The Lord will be to them a crown of glory and a diadem of beauty, and he will give them wisdom and strength to make them victors over all that would oppose their spiritual progress. He is a tower of strength to the righteous, but to those who persist in a course of rebellion against him he brings punishment.

III. Needed instruction given (vs. 7-13). 7. But they also have erred through wine—Isaiah turns to the sins of his own people, the kingdom of Judah. He had held up the condition, morally, of the people of Israel, and had shown the coming destruction, as a warning to the people of Judah. He charges them with indulgence in strong drink, which is having its usual effects. It produces weakness of body and mind and is destructive of spiritual life. The priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink—They who should be the moral and spiritual guides of the people were incompetent and wicked. Their views of truth are not clear and they fail to weigh causes justly because they are given to strong drink. 8. Filthiness—The liquor traffic is productive of physical and moral filth. It defiles everything it touches. It pollutes the very air, so that the space about the door of the saloon is foul with the odor of the drink, and the breath of the drinker is nauseating with the fumes of alcohol. It brings its victim below the level of the brute.

9. Whom shall He teach knowledge—The condition described in the two preceding verses shows clearly the need for instruction and warning; but those to whom the prophet spoke resented his words. Was Isaiah talking to them as if they were mere babes? Did they not know what they were doing? 10. Precept upon precept, etc.—It seems that the people were mocking Isaiah in his continued efforts to instruct and warn them. They were thoroughly displeased with him for going over the same thing again and again. They considered it an affront to their intelligence to deal with them as a teacher would with little children. 11. With stammering lips—"By men of strange lips."—R. V. The prophet replies to the scoffers. They would not hear and heed the instructions and warnings which he gave them, but they would realize the truth when the Assyrians, "men of strange lips" and of a foreign tongue, should break down their haughty northern neighbor. The Lord would speak in judgment if the people would not listen when he spoke in mercy. 12. This is the rest ...This is the refreshing—The Lord had shown His people the way of rest from their enemies and of true prosperity. They had known of the great deliverances He had wrought out for them; yet they would not give heed to His requirements and promises. 13. The word of the Lord was unto them and pleaded with them repeatedly by his prophets, but they would not heed their warnings. Then He spoke to them by His judgments, permitting the Assyrians to afflict them until they were "broken and snared, and taken" into captivity.

Questions.—What is the meaning of the word woe as here used? What was the crown of pride? What particular sin was Isaiah condemning? To what does drunkenness lead? To what did the prophet compare the Assyrian army? What hope was held out to the kingdom of Judah? What was the condition of Judah? In what words did the people scoff at the message of the prophet? What would finally overtake the rebellious nation?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—A ruined nation.

I. Depraved by self-indulgence.

II. Deprived of divine blessing.

I. Depraved by self-indulgence. The lesson here is one of united and fearless opposition intemperance and to whatever exposes the people to its ravages. This chapter is the first of a group of representative discourses which deal with conditions existing throughout Israel, all enforcing the same principles. In this instance the prophet Isaiah warned the ten tribes of the coming judgments which were soon after executed by Assyria. Words are scarcely possible with which to express greater sorrow and calamity than are found here describing the prevailing iniquity caused by intemperance. Ephraim in this lesson stands for the kingdom of the ten tribes. The drunkards of Ephraim stand for its dissipated and desolate people. The crown of Samaria stands for its capital city, strong and beautiful. Pride was a sin which generally prevailed. Because of this the prophet boldly proclaimed a woe to the crown of pride. The people were not only overcome but ruined by the use of intoxicants. They sacrificed reason, virtue, conscience to the love of strong drink. The loss of everything desirable overcame them when they lost control of their appetites. In the place of industry, indolence prevailed. In the place of intelligence, ignorance abounded. In place of thrift and comfort, poverty and wretchedness existed. In place of honor and virtue, dishonor and vice held away until life became almost unendurable. Appetite as a strong giant brought his captives into complete subjection so as to render it practically impossible to cast off his chains. Drunkenness is compared to a combat between man and his habit, in which man is the victim and habit the victor. The figure is of a people laid prostrate and helpless in utter bewilderment, and unconscious as to what would happen to them or their homes or their nation, a condition heart-sickening and hopeless. They were so stricken as to be unsound in judgment, with little or no vision of truth and duty, with no susceptibility to moral and religious impressions, unable to speak intelligently, subject to the snares of all evil, afflictions and calamities, exposed to contempt, not able to recover themselves. They had no capacity to receive instruction and were prejudiced against it.

II. Deprived of divine blessing. Isaiah was one of the most eloquent men, yet the people resisted his words and objected to him as God's messenger. The word of God commanded their serious attention, which they refused to give, but rather ridiculed it. What really angered those scorners was that the prophet treated them, as they complained, as though they were children and not as masters in Israel. They despised God's method of dealing with them. They were weary of hearing of morality, or of having the prophet's warnings applied to the sins and needs of their time. They sneered at the simplicity of the means vouchsafed to the church of Isaiah's time. By their profane contempt of God and his word, they hastened their own ruin. They were to be broken by their enemies, snared in their own policy and taken in Satan's net. The refuge they chose for themselves would utterly fail them. They were to suffer punishment by a continued hardening of their hearts until they were no longer able to understand. The prophet's prediction was fulfilled. Terrible and exact was the retribution that fell on their sin. The literal meaning of the "residue of the people" is that after the pride of the apostate tribes had fallen, they who had remained true to God and to themselves should glory and delight in Jehovah. It was a prophecy blessingly fulfilled. "A crown of glory and a diadem of beauty" are employed as emblems to represent what God regards as the most precious and beautiful ornaments for his people. Such a crown is unfading and imperishable, substantial and immortal, "a crown of righteousness" rightly obtained and rightly possessed. Death has no power over it. God will impart to his faithful "residue" by His grace, that which will be infinitely more desirable and valuable to them than the most costly crown upon earth.—T. R. A.

The Speed Limit.

With a sentimental leaning toward the days of his own youth, a certain business man sent his son to the college where he had himself been educated.

On arriving at the place of much knowledge, the young man began to make a few inquiries.

"I should like to see my father's record," said he to the head of the college. "He was here in 1877."

"I shall be very pleased to show you the record," was the reply. "But have you any special reason for consulting it?"

"Well," replied the youth frankly, "when I left home dad told me not to disgrace his record, and I only want to see how far I can go."

GETTING THE MOST FROM FARM MANURE

Apply It With the Minimum of Loss and Labor—A Manure Spreader is Highly Desirable—By J. Hugh McKenney.

Stable manure is one of the big assets on the farm—in fact, the mainstay of crop production. It is an encouraging sign that the majority of farmers are coming to realize it. The old dictum that was prominent in the agricultural press, the farmers' institute meeting or the experimental station bulletin, a decade or so ago, warning the farmer against piling his manure under the eaves of the barn and allowing the fertility to leach down a slope into the nearest creek, is seldom mentioned. With the passing of graingrowing as a specialty and the advent of livestock as the principal factor of agricultural activity, the farmer has come to grapple with the situation from a scientific standpoint. Whereas, he formerly depleted the soil by marketing its fertility, he now aims to put back as much or more than he takes in the form of crops.

Anyone who has received a jolt from the dealer in commercial fertilizers has a pretty good object lesson regarding the cash value of nitrogen, potash and phosphoric acid. When bringing home a load of cotton seed meal, linseed meal or other rich nitrogenous feeds it is well to consider not alone their feeding value, but also their fertilizing value. After consumption, there will remain an average of 75 per cent. of the foregoing constituents to be utilized for feeding next season's crops. My experience leads me to believe that the safest way for the average farmer to buy fertilizers is by way of the feed bin. That means two profits for the one investment, which ought to make the transaction a highly satisfactory one.

How to get the greatest returns from the fertilizer produced on the farm is a live problem. Quite often the fact is overlooked that there are different types of soil requiring different treatment. For instance, it could hardly pay to put much farmyard manure on muck land. It is rich in nitrogen, phosphoric acid and organic matter, but is apt to be deficient in potash. Yet I have seen farmers applying all the way from ten to fifteen tons to the acre on just such lands. In such cases, all the benefit derived is from the potash contained in the manure. The result of an experiment conducted by the Indiana station showed that one application of 200 pounds of potash on muck soil gave an increase of eighty-nine bushels of corn to the acre, while an application of ten tons of barnyard manure to the acre increased the yield only fifty-one bushels during the same time. The potash then cost about five dollars and the ten tons of manure would be worth twenty dollars. This is a big waste of good fertilizing materials that would be of great value to sandy or clay soils.

In addition to the kind of soil, there are several other general principles that govern the use of farm manure. The most important of these are type of farming, rotation of crops, topography of land, time, method and rate of application, the amount of manure available for use and the total number of acres to be manured.

Regarding the quantity of manure that may profitably be applied to the land much depends upon the kind of farming followed. Truck growers and market gardeners, owing to the ability of their crops to use a large amount of available plant food and the comparatively heavy applications each year on the same ground. When well decomposed this also improves the water absorbing and retaining power of the soil as well as its bacterial and physical conditions. Sometimes when a dairy farm that is heavily stocked and a short rotation of crops is followed it becomes necessary to manure the land rather more heavily than would otherwise be desirable in order to utilize all the manure. On a general farm, not so well stocked, this could not be considered good practice.

Applying too much to the acre is a mistake and is bound to result in loss. I have seen fields lying next to the highway receive approximately twenty tons to the acre practically every year, while a meadow at the back end of the farm was left without any form of fertilizer for ten years. This "robbing Peter to pay Paul" policy gets a farmer nowhere, and if he keeps any tab at all on his operations, ordinary business acumen ought, in time, to lead him to abandon such a senseless show of vanity. Experiments at the Pennsylvania station clearly demonstrate that much of the value of such applications is lost. In a four-year rotation of corn, oats, wheat and grass, manure was applied at the rate at six, eight and ten tons to the acre for the corn and wheat crops, making the applications twelve, sixteen and twenty tons to the acre during the rotation. The average increase per ton of manure for twenty-five years has been $2.16 where twelve tons were applied; $1.66 where sixteen tons were applied, and $1.44 where twenty tons were applied during each four years.

The time that manure is applied to the land has a good deal to do with its effects on some crops. For instance, corn grown where manure was spread during the fall and winter will usually produce a larger yield than where the application was made just previous to planting. Also, meadows that have received a top-dressing of manure during the fall give a good increase, but if delayed until spring no beneficial results are likely to be observed.

Finally, the value of manure is influenced very largely by the method of application. If left lying over the field, unevenly distributed and in large lumps, it may be several years before it becomes decomposed and available as plant food. For proper fining and even distribution the manure spreader is almost indispensable. Not only that, but the supply of manure at hand will cover more land and the application may be made more frequently.

FARM AND GARDEN

MANURE DETERIORATION.

The necessity of keeping manure moist is especially notable in case of horse manure. Being naturally of a dry nature, it decomposes very rapidly. The same may be said of sheep manure, only in a less degree. "Fire fanging" is the result of an insufficient supply of water, which can be easily checked by sprinkling.

This sprinkling should be done regularly, so that the heap is kept in a constant state of moisture. Alternate wetting and drying liberates considerable ammonia.

FERMENTATION IN MANURE.

The nature and extent of fermentation in manure is governed largely by the composition of the manure, more particularly upon the amount of nitrogen in a soluble form which it contains. The more soluble nitrogen, the more rapid the fermentation. Urine is rich in soluble netrogenous compounds, and consequently decomposes rapidly.

Manure decreases rapidly in bulk by fermentation. The coarse materials are gradually decomposed, and are dissolved to a large extent, in the black liquid which oozes out of the manure pile. Properly controlled, fermentation is a valuable manner of increasing the availability of the fertilizing constituents of manure, although it decreases the bulk, but when not properly controlled it seriously reduces the value of the manure.

LEACHING OF MANURE.

Deterioration of manure is also caused by leaching. Manure exposed to the action of the elements loses about one-half of its valuable fertilizing constituents in the course of six months.

Solid cow dung, exposed to ordinary leaching for 109 days, acording to an experiment at the New Jersey Experiment Station, lost 37.6 per cent. of its nitrogen, 51.9 per cent. of its phosphoric acid and 47.1 per cent. of its potash. Mixed dung and urine lost during the same time 51 per cent. of its nitrogen, 51.1 per cent. of its phosphoric acid and 61.1 per cent. of its potash. More than one-half of the constituents in the total animal manure product of the cow may be lost by an exposure of less than four months.

The amount of litter required for any given animal depends largely upon the character of the food. A safe general rule is that the litter should amount to at least one-third of the dry matter of the food consumed. The following amounts per day for different animals is about right: Sheep, three-fifths pound of litter; cattle, 9 pounds; horses, 6 1-2 pounds.

It is not advisable, as a rule, to use an excess of litter beyond that needed to keep the animal clean and absorb the liquid excrement, since the materials available for bedding are generally poor in fertilizing constituents, and so extend and dilute the manure unnecessary.

METHODS OF APPLYING MANURE.

Whether manure should be applied fresh or rotten depends largely upon the character of the soil. Where improvement of the mechanical condition is the main object sought, the best results will be secured by applying fresh manure to the heavy clay soils, and well-rotted manure to the light soils. If, however, prompt action of fertilizers is desired, in a favorable season light soils utilize coarse manure to better advantage than the heavy soils. In heavy soils, decomposition takes place slowly, and the constituents of the fresh manure becomes available very slowly. On the other hand, in light soils, unless there is a dry season, the decomposes readily, and the fertilizing constituents are probably rendered available as fast as the plant requires them.

On clay soils it frequently happens that manure produces no effect at all during the first year, on account of slowness of decomposition, but as the clay possesses very powerful absorptive properties the manure is not lost. There is, therefore, practically no danger of loss in apply manure to clay soils a long while in advance of planting time.

Fresh manure has a forcing effect and tends to produce stems and leaves at the expense of fruit and grain. It is, therefore, better for early garden truck, grasses and forage plants than for cereals or fruits.

Spreading the manure and allowing it to lie on the surface should be practiced only on level fields where there is no danger from surface washing. There is no danger of a serious loss of ammonia into the air, where the manure is spread broadcast and allowed to lie on the surface. Experiments have proved that the loss from this cause is very small.

There can be no fixed rule as regards the amount of manure to apply. About 12 to 18 tons per acre is an abundant application. 14 [illegible], and 8 to [illegible] light. Twenty tons is a frequent application in New Jersey, as well as in other regions where truck farming is practiced, and still larger amounts are often used.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

The dairy cow often suffers the most from exposure to the weather before real winter has begun. After steady cold comes the cow is generally stabled. Exposure to cold rains is often more injurious to the animal that the colder but dry weather later in the winter. The dairy cow is not like the fat steer, protected from cold by a layer of fat. As a result bad weather causes a big drop in milk production. So long as the weather is dry it is just as well to leave the cow outside nights for some time, but every cold rain should find her protected. The main thing in barns is to have tight walls, so there is no draft of wind and a good roof. Care should be taken in arranging the stalls length and a gutter of sufficient depth to hold the manure. The cleanliness of the milk depends to a considerable extent upon having the barn built so the cow will keep herself clean.

Ounces of grease save dollars in repairs.

Tomato seed is good for three or four years.

Onions do best on a level seed bed, with perfect drainage.

On the average farm, the horses will not be worked as hard or as regularly as they have been during the summer. If they have been heavily fed and quantity of grain be reduced, but care must be taken not to cut down their food supply too much. They will need considerable food merely to keep them warm. In addition to this they should have enough to keep them looking well and give them strength for whatever driving or teaming may be required of them.

The feeding of cows on dairy farms is of still greater importance. Even if they get some grass or stalks from the pasture or the field, the supply will be scanty and the quantity will be poor. Unless there is prompt and liberal feeding from the barn, with grain added to the dried material, there will be a shrinkage in the quantity of milk and a decline in conditions. This will bring a loss not merely in the immediate present, but one which will continue for a long time. It is a rule to which dairying is no exception, that it is expensive to regain lost ground.

SUNDAY AT HOME

THE FUTURE.

The worst is yet to come,
So wail the doubters glum;
But here's the better view:
"My best I've yet to do."

The worst some always fear
To-morrow holds no cheer,
Yet farther on life's lane
Are joys you shall attain.

Go forward bravely then
And play your part as men,
For this is ever true:
"Our best we've yet to do."

REMEMBER NOT MY TRANSGRESSIONS.

I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins. I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more. Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.

Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back.—Who is a God like unto Thee, that pardoneth iniquity? ... He retaineth not His anger for ever, because He delighteth in mercy. ... Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, ... to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

THE OTHER FELLOW.

Perhaps he is snowed under; come along with your silver shovel and dig him out; mayhap you may find the angel. He may be considered dead, but there is a creative power in prayer, and a resurrecting lift in personal effort, and you may have the honor of unbinding the napkin about his head and leading him into the warm sunlight of everlasting day. You may meet him at the prison gate as he comes into a new day, after serving a term. Take his hand and bid him welcome to a freedom [illegible]; give him his dinner and some paper to write to his mother, and let him roll the cloud from the mother's heart. He has gained his liberty, to go to the devil, but do turn, by brotherly kindness, turn his feet into the way of peace. Find him a friend and a job and spring a [illegible] in his stunted, wasted heart.

He is one of the lost [illegible] sheep do not go in search for the shepherd, but the shepherd goes after the wanderer, and they [illegible] find, and return with joy. Oh, the finder's joy! Oh to drink out of the cup of restoration! A steamer stopped at a wharf on a great river. On a float was an interesting figure making great signals of joy, the note of the steamer answered with equal demonstrations of delight. As we proceeded on our way I joined the [illegible] at his leisure, and asked him to explain the correspondence by signals given. "My dear sir, I have a family at home, but this lad gives me more joy than all others. He fell into the water, and I plunged in after him and rescued him, and every trip he comes down to give me his glad salutation." The joy of serving is the highest [illegible] the very heart of God come flowing [illegible] you like a mill stream.

A Bible class teacher attended a convention and came back refreshed; on the walls of the class room was a motto, "the other fellow." He said: "We had better take down that motto and go out of business, for what have we done of late for the other fellow?" No man liveth unto himself; we increase our joy by promoting the joy of others. We wash our eyes and see better when we look at another man's care. True sympathy is a very tender and delicate spiritual ministry. We need to know what is going on inside a man's breast, and penetrate beyond the formalities of life, and touch the weary, aching, empty heart. The fingers of the soul are long and delicate; they carry secret cups of strengthening [illegible] but find a name for their secret pain. Oh, to give a thrill to the sad and shrinking soul, to warm the [illegible] of a heart made stubborn by the hard [illegible] of those who ought to be [illegible] for helpers in our brother's need. Oh, to come near and reverently touch the [illegible] of life, and offer the [illegible] of a half-famished heart. A vital [illegible] of our mortal [illegible] is laid in our heavenly garden.

War Crosses.

War crosses are far older than war medals. The latter are, in fact, a comparatively modern innovation. The oldest of those decorations is the Austrian Cross of Gold, and curiously enough it bears a similar inscription (cut in Latin) to our Victoria Cross. The first Gold Cross was awarded by the Empress Maria Theresa in 1757. The next oldest European battle cross is the Russian Cross of St. George, which is of gold with a fine medallion of St. George slaying the dragon. It was founded by the Empress Catherine II. in 1769. The French Cross of the Legion of Honor was instituted by Napoleon in 1802, at the time when he was First Consul. Germany's famous—or infamous Iron Cross was instituted by Emperor Frederick William III. of Prussia in the year 1813. The cross is of iron, but is rather cheaply edged or bordered with silver.

A Celebrated Suicide.

Haydon, the celebrated historical painter and writer, at a time in his life when he was overcome by debt, disappointment and ingratitude, laid down the brush with which he was at work upon his last great effort, "Albert and the Trial By Jury," wrote with a steady hand, "Stretch me no longer upon this rough world," and then with a pistol shot put an end to his unhappy existence.

BASEBALL AND THE MARINES.

Americans are admittedly the best ball and grenade throwers in the world, and are capable of waging wonderful [illegible] in case of hostilities, say United States marine corps officers. The average American youth early learns to throw a baseball with speed and accuracy, and it is because of that we, as a nation, are especially fitted to wage the modern war of the trenches. Baseball is encouraged at all our stations, and the skill developed by marines, even untrained recruits, in the bomb and grenade throwing practice is really remarkable, say marine corps officers.

THE NOISELESS MOOSE

Taller Than Ordinary Horse, He Moves Silently Through Forest

Although taller than an ordinary horse, weighing more than half a ton and adorned with wide-spreading antlers, the bull moose [illegible] with silently [illegible] through tangled forests, where [illegible] scarcely move without being detected by the [illegible]. [illegible] partially submerged. These visits to the water are [illegible] by day, but usually at night, especially during the season when the calves are young and the horns of the bulls are but partly grown.

Late in the fall, with full-grown antlers, the bulls wander through the forest looking for their mates, at times uttering far-reaching calls of defiance to all rivals, and occasionally clashing their antlers against the saplings in exhibitions of masterful vigor. Other bulls at times accept the challenge and hasten to meet the rival for a battle royal. At this season the call of the cow moose also brings the nearest bull quickly to her side. Hunters take advantage of this and by imitating the call through a birch-bark trumpet bring the most [illegible] bulls to their doom.—Exchange.

"The world is full of sunshine," chirped the Optimist. "Yes, dog-gone it. Why didn't I go into the awning business?" growled the Pessimist.

A PUZZLING CASE

"Naturally enough, I asked her the meaning of this extraordinary message," said Ivan, quietly, "but she refused to tell me anything. I had never heard of a Black Carnation, and was curious to know if there was such a flower in existence. She never showed me the flower, and though her message was in those words, I was in complete ignorance as to whether she had actually received a black carnation (of the existence of which I was ignorant), or whether the words, 'Why did you send me the black carnation,' hid some secret of her past life."

"And what did you do?"

"I accepted the mission," said Ivan, simply, "and next day I went down to Lippinton. When I saw this Maxwell, I asked him the question as directed, upon which he stared at me in surprise and asked me what I meant. Of course, I could tell him nothing, and explained as much, whereupon he informed me that he possessed a carnation, which was unique of its kind, bearing perfectly black flowers, but that he was too fond of the plant to part with even a single bud."

"In fact, he denied having sent Mazzucata a black carnation flower," suggested Tancred.

"Yes. Then he took me to a glass house and showed me the plant, which was certainly marvelous, though it looked rather weird, being so unnatural in the color of its blossoms. On this plant, Maxwell said, there were twelve buds, upon which I counted them and found eleven."

"Eleven!" I ejaculated, in surprise, "why that is the same number as there were when I was down. So you did not steal the twelfth bud?"

"I, Monsieur! who accuses me of such a thing?"

"Why, this Maxwell. He told me there were twelve buds, but on counting them found only eleven, upon which discovery he said you must have stolen the twelfth."

"I certainly did not steal the twelfth," said Ivan, in a puzzled tone, "particularly as, on the discovery of the missing bud, he [illegible] the thief's name."

"What was it?" questioned Tancred, inquisitively.

"M. Dallas."

This name took us both by surprise, but of the two I was the most amazed, as I saw that Maxwell had been playing with Ivan the same comedy as he had played with me, only for the name of the singer, he substituted that of Dallas. We remained silent in sheer perplexity, for we knew not what to think or say, so Ivan, without waiting for our speech, resumed his story.

"I could get nothing else out of this Maxwell, so took my leave. He remained behind in the glass house, and unconsciously allowed me to find my way out into the street alone. While I was passing through the front of the house, I felt a touch on my arm and saw—"

"Mazzucata?"

"Well, I certainly thought so for the moment. The resemblance is truly wonderful, for this Mademoiselle Maxwell resembles my poor Mazzucata in all ways, save that she is blind."

"Poor girl," muttered Tancred, in a low tone, "well, Signor Ivan, and what did she say?"

"She told me she had overheard my conversation with her father, and asked me if it were true that Mazzucata had received a black carnation. When I told her that I thought such was the case she was much disturbed."

"Did she make any mention of Dallas?"

"No."

"Did she say her father had sent Mazzucata the black carnation?" asked the lawyer, sharply.

"My dear Tancred," I said, impulsively, "what an absurd remark, what possible motive would this old man Maxwell have for sending Madame Mazzucata such a flower? There can be no connection between them."

"So I thought," remarked Ivan, who had listened to my speech, with a grave smile on his lips, "but when I tell you, monsieur, what this blind girl told me, I do not think you will find M. Tancred's remark so utterly absurd as you seem to fancy."

"Why, what did she tell you?"

"I cannot give you the whole conversation, it would take too long."

"Well, give us the gist of it," I retorted, impatiently. "Who is Mazzucata, and what connection has she with this man?"

"I know what you are going to say," struck in Tancred, before Ivan could speak; "Mazzucata was Maxwell's daughter."

"Precisely," answered Ivan, "Mazzucata—no, not—she was Mademoiselle Maxwell's twin sister."

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

I am certainly much bewildered over the new aspect of this case, as after my interview with Signor Ivan, I cannot but think that my four previous theories are all wrong. Ilma Celinski, Dallas, Signor Ivan, and the secret society emissary, must be innocent, as all the evidence now obtainable seems to point in the direction of Simon Maxwell.

Now I have a theory, that he killed his daughter Mazzucata, and my belief is based upon the following circumstances:

He is the only possessor of the Black Carnation, and no bud could have left the greenhouse without his knowledge.

He equivocated on the missing bud, and after accusing Dallas to Ivan, of being the thief, now accuses Ivan to me.

As to the dynamite cartridge, which was certainly manufactured by Kutuzeff and possessed by Ivan, I fancy that the latter must have lost it down at Lippinton, where it was picked up by Maxwell and used in the fatal bouquet, together with the missing carnation which the gardener plucked himself.

CHAPTER XIII.

When Tancred and myself left the Hotel Europa, we certainly had sufficient to think about, for the discovery of Mazzucata's relationship with the Maxwells complicated matters to a surprising degree. Seeing that Marietta Mazzucata, or, to give her real name, Mary Maxwell, was the daughter of this gardener, it was evident that she must have known of the existence of the Black Carnation, created by her father. Hence her frequent reference to that flower. But why should it appear to her as a symbol of a violent death? This was the question which agitated our minds; and though we discussed it thoroughly, we could come to no conclusion as to the real meaning of the fancy.

Again, Mazzucata had sent Ivan to her father to inquire why he had sent the Black Carnation, so it was evident that Maxwell was the person from whom she expected the token. But why should that token refer to a violent death? Turn which way we would, that last question kept appearing in the most persistent manner, and defied our efforts to obtain a satisfactory answer to it.

"I would like to tell Melchizedek about this fresh discovery," said Tancred, as we parted, "but, unfortunately he is down at Lippinton, and I do not know where a letter will find him."

"What will you do?"

"My dear major, I can do nothing except wait till Melchizedek returns to town, when we can consult as to what new move to make. Besides, it is probable Melchizedek will have discovered something at Lippinton likely to aid us in solving the mystery. At all events, now that we know the dead woman came from Lippinton, it is evident the secret is to be discovered there, and if so, you may be sure Melchizedek, who is on the spot, will ferret it out."

"Well, it is to be hoped so, for at present, so far as we are concerned, the secret of Mazzucata's death will remain one until the day of judgment. Good-bye, Tancred. If you make any fresh discovery, let me know at once."

"Assuredly, but I must exact the same promise from you."

"Whatever I learn shall be known to you half an hour afterwards. But what about Gilbert?"

"I am going to see him now. Will you come?"

"No. Don't think me unkind, Tancred, but I am quite worn out for want of rest. Tell Tressinger I will call and see him to-morrow morning, and not to worry too much."

"My dear Major Granby, when I tell him that Mazzucata was Maxwell's daughter, he will have too much to think about to waste any time in worrying. Good-bye. Don't forget your promise."

So we parted, and Tancred went off to see Gilbert; while I returned to my rooms, quite worn out, as I have stated, with the many surprises of the last few days. When this case was finished, I was quite determined to abstain for the future from the investigation of criminal matters, for the employment is too exhausting. It wearies the brain, it irritates the nerves, it spoils the temper, and yet is so confoundedly fascinating that one can no more stop in the middle of a case than cease to breathe of one's own free will. I wonder if detectives live to any great age? If they do, it is a puzzle to me how they manage to preserve the body from wear and tear of the mind. Formerly, I did not think much of detectives as an intelligent class; but now that I have had some experience of the difficulties they meet with, I have the greatest respect for their acuteness, their brain power, and their physical endurance.

For that evening, at least, I got the better of my detective fever, and by resolutely fighting against the demon of curiosity, managed to secure a few hours of comparative rest to my brain. Reverting to my usual mode of life, I strolled in the park to gain an appetite, dined at the "Old Friends" Club with an old army friend, and afterwards went to the theatre. Whist was out of the question, as I could not have fixed my attention on the cards, but the theatre to which we went was the Gaiety, and there, in the trivialities of the last up-to-date burlesque, I forgot for a time that infernal problem which I had so foolishly set myself to solve.

I might have known such peace of mind would not last, and remember the calm before the storm proverb, for on my return to my rooms about midnight, I was met by Pointer with the extraordinary remark.

"A lady is waiting to see you, sir."

"A lady, Pointer?"

"Yes, sir; she has been waiting for three hours."

I own I felt somewhat indignant at this, as the mere fact of a lady waiting to see me at midnight in my own rooms was enough to destroy my character with the people of the house. Pointer, I must admit, was perfectly respectful, and yet I felt that he was secretly amused at my embarrassment, which naturally put me into a towering rage.

"I can't see any lady to-night, Pointer."

"She says she won't go away until she sees you, sir."

"Who is she?"

"Miss Ilma Celinski."

"What, the witness in Mazzucata's case?"

"Yes, sir, she is in the sitting-room."

"Oh, I'll see her at once. I wonder what she wants, Pointer. You must come with me in order to bear witness to anything she may say in connection with the case."

"Yes, sir."

"She needn't see you, Pointer. Go into my bedroom and busy yourself with something, but leave the door open, keep your attention fully, Pointer: this is most important."

Pointer, as a matter of fact, felt much flattered at being thus brought into the case, as since his conversation with Dalsworth, he had taken a great interest in the affair, therefore he went into my bedroom by another door, while I entered the sitting room where I found Mademoiselle Celinski, impatiently awaiting my arrival.

"Major Granby," she said, rising, as I came into the room.

"Yes. To what have I the honor—"

"It is no honor," she retorted, abruptly, cutting short my polite speech, "I am in a rage."

"Not with me, I trust."

"No, with M. Dallas."

"Ho! Ho!" I thought to myself, "when thieves fall out honest men get their dues."

"Do you know me, monsieur?" said the Pole, sitting down again, "I am Mademoiselle Celinski—Ilma Celinski. Oh, yes, you know me."

"I think so, mademoiselle. It was you who gave evidence against my poor friend, Sir Gilbert Tressinger."

"Yes, I did tell a story against him. But why did he stay? I came and told him to go. He should have ran away. Why did he stay?"

"Because he was innocent."

"Innocent! Bah!"

"You are not polite, mademoiselle, and not truthful. You know Sir Gilbert is innocent."

"I know what I know," she answered, sullenly.

"Doubtless; but as you did not come here without a purpose I would like to know what that purpose is."

Ilma Celinski had taken off her gloves, and was twisting them round and round in her strong hands. Still dressed in that bizarre red costume, hardly hidden by a thin black cloak, she was with her strongly marked features, flashing eyes, and eloquent gestures sufficiently interesting, although hardly the kind of young person a steady old bachelor likes to entertain in his rooms at such an hour. I was glad Pointer was a witness in the next room. Besides, this girl had a temper, and was evidently in a towering rage about something, which temper she vented on me for want of a better person.

"Eh, monsieur, you are surprised to see me here," she burst out, rapidly, "eh, yes, but it is not my fault this midnight. I came here at nine hours, but you were not here, so I waited. I wished to see you, to ask about this woman—the lady you know, monsieur, I think."

"I haven't the slightest idea to whom you are alluding."

"It is a conspiracy against me. You take his side."

"Take whose side?" I asked, completely bewildered.

"M. Dallas," she muttered, in a savage tone; "that coward, that infamous."

"Monsieur Dallas," I repeated, reflectively. "Oh, yes, I think I know the gentleman you mean. He was in love with your mistress, was he not?"

"He was in love with me."

"That you said [illegible]—"

"Yes, I said many things in court; I told lies, and all for his sake."

"Then you acknowledge that you spoke falsely against Sir Gilbert—"

"I acknowledge nothing, monsieur," retorted the Pole, vehemently; "only I can tell you [illegible]—why that, indeed—oh, yes, I can say something of your Sir Gilbert."

"I don't understand you, mademoiselle."

"Oh, yes you do," she panted, eagerly, "this woman—the place he has gone."

"Miss Maxwell?"

"Yes! yes! you have seen her. Oh, I know of your visit to that place; and he also was there. Does he love her, this coward, who said I was his adored?"

"You wish to know if Mr. Dallas is in love with Miss Maxwell?"

"Yes! yes! Is it so?"

"I cannot tell you, mademoiselle. I know he was down there about some business."

"He is down there now."

"At Lippinton?"

"Yes. Oh, I know why he is there. He loves this woman who is like my dead mistress."

"How do you know that Miss Maxwell is the sister of Madame Mazzucata?"

"She told me so herself. Yes, I was the friend of madame, not the servant. She told me many things. I know all her history. I know of the black carnation."

"What do you know about that?"

It was an injudicious question to ask, for hardly had the words left my mouth, when Ilma Celinski closed her mouth with a snap and refused to answer. There was evidently nothing to be got out of this woman save by working on her jealousy, so, as I saw she knew a great deal likely to be useful to us in the case, I took that line at the expense of a few falsehoods, which I trust will be pardoned to me, seeing how desperate was the dilemma in which I found myself.

"You have come to ask me about Mr. Dallas, I understand?"

"I have, monsieur."

"What can I tell you, mademoiselle, I should think you were more likely to know his movements than I."

"I know nothing—nothing," she said, angrily, "after the death of my mistress, M. Dallas left the town, and I have not seen him since. Oh, I am sure he is down with that woman, he loves her because she is so like madame."

"Does he not love you?"

"He has told me so, many times, and I, like a fool, believed him. I helped him all in my power, I told him madame's name—of the black carnation—of the place where it was to be found—all—all that he wished to know, and this is my reward—he leaves me for another. I am neglected, deceived, but let him beware, for I can speak, as well as keep silent."

"I think it would be best to speak, seeing how badly he is treating you."

"Yes, he is treating me badly, but I do not know yet that he is false."

"Oh, I can set your mind at rest on that point. He is false—he has been false all along. He never loved you as he loved Mazzucata."

At these words she grew so pale, that, for the moment, I thought she was about to faint, but being evidently a woman with an indomitable spirit, she controlled her emotion, and answered me at once.

"He did not love madame, he hated her. That is why he sent her the black carnation."

"Oh, he did send that flower then?"

"Yes."

"And did he kill madame, also?"

"That I do not know."

"Then tell me all you do know. Save an innocent man from death, and revenge yourself on your false lover."

"Is he false? If I thought so!"

"He is false," I responded, eagerly, "He told me that he loved Madame Mazzucata, and no one else. The black carnation was only sent to her because he wished to frighten her into breaking off her engagement with Sir Gilbert. You have been his tool all along."

"His tool! I!" she screamed, in a rage. "Impossible! he loves me!"

"He does not. He loved Mazzucata while she was alive, but now she is dead, he loves her sister."

Ilma clutched her breast as if to prevent her fury bursting forth, but as it was, she was by no means sparing of words in condemning her false lover.

"Oh, the infamous one, the devil! He swore by all that he held most sacred, that I was the only woman he loved. I know now it is false, and that he is with this woman, this sister of madame. But I will be revenged; I will tell all."

I listened eagerly for the promised revelation, and after a pause she burst out again.

STRENUOUS WORK SOON TELLS ON YOU

BUSINESS MEN AND BREAD WINNERS THE VICTIMS OF NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

When worry is added to overwork men soon become the victims of nervous exhaustion—neurasthenia — the doctor calls it. Some have no reserve strength in their systems to bear the strain; others overtax what strength they have. If you find that you are nervous and not sure of yourself, that you sleep badly, and wake up tired and aching, your nerves are out of order. Other signs are inability to take proper interest in your work; your appetite is fickle; your back feels weak, and you are greatly depressed in spirits. One or more of these signs mean that you should take prompt steps to stop mischief by nourishing the nerves with the food they thrive on, namely, the rich, red blood made by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills have cured thousands of cases of nervous disorders, including nervous prostration, neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance and partial paralysis. Here is an example: Mr. P. H. Callan, a well-known business man in Coleman, P. E. I., says: "I owe my present health, if not life itself, to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had always been an active man, and when I began to run down in health paid little attention to it as I thought it only a temporary weakness. As time passed, however, I found myself growing worse, and consulted a doctor, who said that I was not only badly run down, but that my nervous system was badly shattered. I lost flesh, my appetite was poor, I slept badly and notwithstanding the doctor's treatment grew so weak that I had to leave my business and was confined to the house. Time went on and I was steadily growing weaker, and my friends were all greatly alarmed by my condition. In this condition I was strongly recommended to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as the doctor's medicine was not helping me I decided to do so. By the time I had used three boxes I could tell that they were helping me. When I had taken eight boxes of the pills I felt able to attend to my business again, and people were surprised to see me out. I continued the use of the pills until I had taken 12 boxes, by which time I was feeling as well as I ever did, and was being congratulated by all my friends on my full restoration to health. I feel now that if I had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at the outset I would not only have saved much money spent in doctor's bills, but would have had renewed health sooner. I cannot speak too highly of this medicine, and would recommend it to every man who feels weak, nervous or run down."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

OLD DUBLIN.

Irish Capital Indissolubly Linked With Country's History.

Whatever other good thing may be said of Dublin, which has bulked so large in the world's eye in the days just past, it is beautiful for situation. The sweep of Dublin bay and the rugged outline of Howth head and Kingstown harbor and Killiney hill have all found many to speak well in their praise. Like so many other Irish cities and indeed like most old cities the world over, Dublin, for its early history, draws largely on tradition. The men of Dublin appear suddenly from nowhere, and they defeat the men of Leinster. That is dogmatically stated to have been the year A.D. 291. They then return, covered with achievements and filled with satisfaction, into the unknown, and no more is heard of them for about a century and a half. In the year 450, however, they suddenly emerge again from obscurity as converts to Christianity. Thereafter, they have still a way of retiring into the unknown, but the excursions are steadily more rare and the periods shorter.

Then the Danes begin to be heard of. For centuries they were a sore trouble. In the ninth century they attacked Dublin and took it, and in [illegible] [illegible], the Norseman, proclaimed himself king, and established himself in great strength at Armagh. The Irish, however, never for long acquiesced in the situation. There was no more peace in Ireland of those days than there was in all the centuries that followed, but it was not until the year 1014 that the Irish rose to a supreme effort. In that year, however, Brian Boroimhe, king of Munster, determined to attack in force, and his enterprise culminated in the famous battle of Clontarf, in which Brian himself fell, and his son and many thousands of his followers. The Irish won the day, but the Danes recovered Dublin and the great [illegible] [illegible] went on again with varying fortune.

It was not, indeed, until the middle of the twelfth century that the Danes were finally driven out of the country, and then it was not by the Irish, but by the Anglo-Normans. Strongbow had in the meantime sailed from England and landed on the banks of the Waterford river. No weapon the Irish had could pierce the coats of mail of his followers, and with the Danes, too, he carried all before him. That was the beginning of the English conquest. Henry II. landed at Waterford in 1172, in great state. He moved to Dublin, and there held court in still greater state. In a pavilion of wickerwork he received the Irish chieftains with much pomp and circumstance, entered into alliances with them, and so departed. Dublin was now practically a Norman city, and, all alliances and agreements notwithstanding, there was no peace between the inhabitants of the city and the native Irish of the surrounding country. The Slaughter in the "Bloody Fields" at Cullenswood on that long-remembered "Black Monday" in the year 1209, when the native Irish set upon and slew some 500 citizens of Dublin, as they celebrated Easter, was only one amongst many similar incidents.

Towards the close of the fourteenth century Richard II. visited Dublin with much display. Some 30,000 bowmen he had in his retinue and 4,000 cavalry, and he came with his crown jewels and did lavishly entertain and was lavishly entertained, conferred with native chieftains, knighted some of them and returned to England. Hitherto Dublin had stood for the king, and it continued more or less faithful down to the time of the civil war in 1641. By that time, however, far-reaching social changes had come about. The Anglo-Irish had become more passionately Irish than the Irish themselves. They had resisted the Reformation, suffered much at the hands of the Protestants, and when James II. landed in Ireland to assert his right to the British throne, he had a great reception in Dublin. He returned to it for just one night after his defeat at the battle of Boyne, but thereafter the city saw him no more. Soon afterwards William III. was returning thanks in St. Patrick's cathedral for his victory.

Perhaps the most famous period in Dublin's history, however, is that wonderful twenty-five years stretching roughly from Grattan's entering the Irish parliament in 1775 to the passing of the Act of Union in 1800. The Dublin of those days was one of the greatest centres of wit and learning in Europe. Those spacious houses with wonderful doorways and stairways, now let out in tenements, which line so many of the streets between Stephen's green and St. Patrick's bore a very different aspect in Grattan's time from what they do to-day. In this respect Dublin's glory departed with the Act of Union, but nothing can ever take away from its natural beauty. The view of the customs house from the river; the view west across the College Park, with the granite spire of St. Andrew's shooting up amidst the trees; the view from the Wellington monument in Phoenix Park and the glimpses of the Dublin mountains as one walks along the north side of Stephen's green and beyond, are beauties which no change in fortune can take away.—Christian Science Monitor.

We'er Going to Hang a Child

(With Apologies to Luke North.)

By Robert Bickerdike, M. P.

We're going to hang a child in Canada—
Twelve men, a regular physician, a schooled jurist, and a Dominion full of righteous people have condemned a little boy of sixteen.
Whom the wisest on earth, its Saviour, prophets and sages, have restrained from judging; whom the Central Figure of the era (in whose name the nations are filled with churches) admonished the world to "Judge Not"—twelve men, a regular physician, a schooled jurist, and a Dominion full of righteous people have not only judged but condemned a little boy of sixteen.

We're going to hang a child—
Not in passion's blinding mists, or youth's high fever that riots through distended veins and overthrows the inner God;
Not in lightning spur to lust of blood—the quick flowering of atavistic germ from cave to forest;
Not for a sudden clot that burst a tiny vein and floods a lobe and clouds the mental vision;
Not for flashing impact on the nerve that reaches from the spleen and dethrones the clay's master.

We're going to hang a child—
To uphold the majesty of the law, maintain the dignity of the country, a little boy of sixteen, to prove that Canada is a law-abiding state;
Eight million people against a little boy of sixteen.
We will hang him to prove our courage, our virtues, and our civilization,
And the church and state are approvingly silent.

We're going to hang a little boy—
A jury, a doctor, and a "Daniel come to judgment" have condemned a little boy—read his heart, searched his soul, pierced the secret chambers of his mind, laid bare the human ego, and found it all bad.
A jury, a doctor of physic and a Daniel have measured the surging impulses of hot youth, balanced the force of impact and impulsion, read the record of the motor brain areas—
And found the little boy sane and bad—quite sane and all bad, and have ordered him hanged.

We're going to hang a little boy—
A bad boy. Why is he bad, because he murdered? Then is he sane because he murdered? Or did he murder because he was sane?
Did the doctor measure the boy's sanity by his own? Would the doctor do murder? Is it only fear of hanging that keeps the doctor from murdering?
Then the little boy was a braver soul. If the doctor will consider why he would not murder, he will reach a truer measure of the little boy's sanity.
If the doctor has a better test of sanity than murder is, he is wiser than God.

It was called "The Fete of the Allies," and was given by the Sunshine club, which comprises the women of Humboldt, and of this club Mrs. R. J. Kepkey, a former Port Elgin lady, is president. The affair netted the ladies $1646.80. It began with a big dinner, at which 700 people were served.

In some places a "take it back day" is held to give everyone an opportunity to take back what has been borrowed. A subscriber has written The Times saying this might work well here, and instances the fact that at recent affairs held for Red Cross many bottles, plates, jars, etc, containing foods have been bought with the understanding that the vessels be returned. But despite the fact that owners' names have been attached, the articles have seldom been returned. A "take it back day" might be a good thing.

Corp. Roy Thomson in a letter home says: "Just had a letter from Ralph Geddes to-day, who said he had a letter from Frank saying I had been killed. Kitchener citizens were startled one day last week by an aeroplane landing on the Brubacher farm to the east. The aviator proved to be Flying Cadet Owen Thamer, son of E. H. Thamer, of that city. He ate breakfast at the home of his brother R. H. Thamer. Cadet Thamer left Camp Borden at 5.55 o'clock in the morning on a trip, and when he reached Georgetown he was above the clouds and lost his bearings. He reached Hamilton before he realized where he was, and then returned, passing over Brantford, Paris, Galt and Preston, and then Kitchener, making the trip of nearly 110 miles in about 75 minutes. YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati authority tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone cost very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house. It is fine stuff and acts like a charm every time.

At The Churches

AT THE METHODIST

A helpful and inspiring service was held in the Methodist church on Sunday evening, the children and congregation taking part. Many tributes were paid to christian mothers and their influence on the future lives of their children in the excellent and appropriate selections rendered. "Memories of Mother"; "Great truths"; "Children's song", Responsive reading, duett "When you say good bye to mother" duett and chorus, "My Mother's hymn", "Write to mother to day."

The pastor gave an appropriate address based on the story of Salome bringing her two sons to Christ, her prayer and desire that they might be near him and have the places of honor in his Kingdom. The indignation of the disciples at the request. The questions put to James and John by Master, "can ye drink of the cup that I drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? The fearless answer of these men "we are able". The answer of Jesus and enforcement of the great lesson, no favoritism in His Kingdom; the place of honor can only be had by loving faithful service, and fellowship in the Master's sacrifice and sufferings.

AT THE EVANGELICAL

Mothers' Day was observed in the Evangelical church with appropriate services. In the morning the pastor, Rev. E. M. Gischler, preached a suitable sermon. Taking as his text Mark 14:9 "She hath done what she could" Miss Estella Ebert rendered a beautiful solo and the Ladies Aid Octette sang a fine selection of what mother is and does. In the evening a splendid programme was rendered. Miss Margaret Detweiler gave a splendid paper on "The Supremacy of Love", as found in 1 Cor. 13th. chapter. Mrs. E. M. Gischler gave a paper on "Home and Mother" Solos were given by Mrs. Tupling, Mrs. Walker and Mr. Illindauer. A duett by the Misses Winnie and Lillie Ewald and several selections by the choir. All these various selections were well rendered and deep and lasting impressions were made. True mother love is a spark out of the warm love of God for his creatures. Mother's Day is here to stay. God bless the Mothers of our beloved country.

AT THE BAPTIST

The I. O. O. F. of Port Elgin and district celebrated the 98th anniversary of Oddfellowship in America by attending Divine service in the Baptist church on Sunday evening May 13th. Between 60 and 70 of the brethren were in attendance. Rev. W. [illegible] Buckberrough, pastor, conducted the services and preached a very able sermon. Special music was also rendered by the choir. The subject of the address was "The ideal relationship of man to his fellowman." There was a large attendance.

47th YEAR—NO. 21 PORT ELGIN, ONTARIO, WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, 1917 $1.50 PER YEAR $2.00 PER YEAR TO UNITED STATES

Given Presentation

On Saturday evening last the men of the broom and whisk department of the Stevens-Hepner Co., gathered at the Arlington hotel, where they presented Martin Welsh, who has enlisted with the 69th battery, with two very useful articles, a fountain pen and a safety razor. The presentation was made by George Muir and the address was read by Ed. Fisher. The address set forth the fact that Martin was one of the most popular and best-liked fellows in town. His shopmates would miss his good nature and cheerfulness, and they heartily joined in wishing him good luck in the fight for the Empire.

Gunner Welsh made a brief reply of thanks for the gifts and the good words contained in the address.

Death of John McLeod

Deep regret is felt at the passing away of John McLeod, a popular young man in the prime of life, he being but 25 years of age. Jack, as he was familiarly known, was for some time in McLaren's hardware. Leaving there a few years ago he worked in Hamilton and Cobalt. About two years ago he became ill and came to his home on the 10th of Bruce and later was removed to a sanitarium at London. A few days ago he was stricken with pneumonia and came up to Port Elgin to his brother's where he grew worse, death ensuing on Friday night. The funeral was on Sunday, to Port Elgin cemetery and was largely attended, the services being conducted by Rev. Mr. Buckborough. Deceased is survived by his mother, four sisters and three brothers, who will have the sincere sympathy of all.

Some letters sent to the Soldiers' Friend Club by soldiers who have received parcels, will appear next week.

NOTICE

I hereby publicly announce that in connection with a whip stolen from our cutter at the church shed at North Bruce in March that I have been wrongly informed as to who took the whip, and that the two young men mentioned in connection therewith have taken their oath that the reports are false, and I believe them, and I hereby accept their denial of any knowledge of the theft, and absolve them from all blame.

A New Industry

What promises to be a thriving concern in itself is a new department recently established at the Stevens-Hepner works.

Six months ago a new heavy broom, suitable for factories, shops and railways, was invented and made. In this short time it has grown to be quite a large department, and a number of hands are employed in this alone. Over 25 dozen of this particular class of brooms are made daily.

But the new line is in connection with brushes. It is the finest of the new ivory design of brushes. Some 75 different varieties of these brushes are to be made, and another separate department is being fitted with special machinery for this high class work.

To a town like Port Elgin it is like a new industry, and perhaps a little better, insofar as it is an assured concern, and will be a success. Samples of these beautiful and expensive brushes were shown The Times representative, and when it is explained that some of the articles run as high as $7 it will be easily seen that the stock and machinery for this new department will run into many thousands of dollars.

Another surprise was handed to the employes of the Stevens-Hepner company on Saturday when a general increase amounting to 10 per cent was given out in all the departments.

Selective Conscription for Canada

Premier Borden has announced that 100,000 men are needed, and that they will be got by selective conscription.

The men will be mainly got from the villages towns and cities, those working on the soil being given consideration, but no person in the various classes is exempt.

The first class is young men 18 to 25, unmarried; second class 18 to 30, unmarried; third class 18 to 35, married without dependents.

In Bruce county it will mean 400 men if 100,000 are to be taken. On a basis of town and village population only in this county it would mean about 20 men to every thousand population.

Grits Preparing for Their Convention

Things are warming up for the Liberal convention at Tara on the 7th of June. Some new developments are showing. Mr. Campbell of Hepworth is being opposed by John McAulay of Wiarton, whose friends are working hard for him.

The centre of the riding is to be heard from this time with a vengeance. Messrs McCannel and Mewhinney, both ex-wardens, have so far been the serious ones in the centre of the riding, but The Times learns that Warden Izzard is a contestant for the candidacy.

In conversation with Mr. Mewhinney of Bruce, The Times was informed that he was in the field. "I have been urged by many friends to let my name go to the convention, and I shall. I want the people to make the choice and I shall be satisfied with whatever choice they make. This is my attitude. I am not exercising myself before the convention. These matters should be left with the people", said Mr. Mewhinney.

Calling on Warden Izzard the reporter asked: "We understand you are being pressed to let your name go to the Convention, what are your intentions?"

Warden Izzard said: "It is true that lately pressure is being brought to bear, and I am inclined to consider it. Personally, I think the centre part of the riding should be recognized some time by the Liberals of the riding."

Ex Warden Alex. McCannel was called up by phone and asked if reports were true that he would seek the convention. "Yes they are," said Mr. McCannel. "Is it not time that the agricultural interests should have some particular plans for the convention? Much talk is being heard that a farmer should be willing to contest the seat and if I am acceptable to the convention I am prepared to sacrifice to canvass the riding."

Memorial Service

Special memorial service was held in the Baptist church Sunday morning at at 11 o'clock, in memory of those from the homes of Port Elgin who have fallen on the battlefield or died in training. A large congregation assembled. The pastor made reference to Lieut. Scanlon, Pte. Keany, Pte. Willoughby and Pte. D. McIntyre. More especial reference to Pte. McIntyre, who was a former member of this church.

Speaking of the soldiers he referred to the qualities of a good soldier of his country and a good soldier of Christ.

Reference was made to a letter from Pte. D. McIntyre in a recent issue of The Times and his testimony to the value of religion in time of battle.

The choir rendered two appropriate selections during the service, "Does Jesus Care" and "God will take care of you". The service throughout was a very impressive one.

Bread went down Monday night, when Edgar Martin's trailer broke loose while motoring up street. No damage.

Pte. W. J. Barrett

Is a Port Elgin soldier, who was an employee of the Stevens-Hepner Company. He went west last year and while working there enlisted at GlenEwen, Sask. He was in the trenches for the first time, last January. His wife lives in Port Elgin. In a letter home Pte. Barrett says:

"We had it pretty hot up here yesterday. The Germans were giving us a shower of shrapnel, but we came through safely. The weather is fine now, which makes the work easier, for we have a rather hard task to perform, but we are doing it gradually. It may be that the war will not last a great deal longer. We seem to have the best of them now. We are advancing steadily."

Do it Now

There should be no further delay on the part of our council in providing our constable with a stop watch for the purpose of stopping the mad rush of certain automobile speed fiends.

Last Monday a car was driven through our streets at shocking speed proceeding as far as the North End park. Here the visitor turned around and sauntered back slowly, stopped his car, got out and made a call as if nothing had happened.

But what if a child had attempted to cross the streets, or in fact anyone? Certainly the driver could not have stopped the car. What if another car had suddenly loomed up in one of the cross streets, or a vehicle, or bicyclist? Must someone be killed before common decency in auto driving is enforced.

Considers the People

"Is the price of milk to go up, too?"

This was the blunt question put by The Times to Wm. Robertson, whose dairy provides Port Elgin with a supply of pure milk.

"No, I don't think I will have to raise milk. At least not for some time. You see I have raised all our stock, and having a good farm has made it possible for us to produce the milk and get along on what we are charging, a fraction over 7 cents, or 14 quarts for the dollar.

"Another thing," said Mr. Robertson I know that there are many families who need milk for their growing families, and the way everything else is raising in price it must be a hardship for them to get the necessaries of life. As long as I can I propose to give these people milk at this price. And there is no raise in sight. We hope for an abundant harvest on our farm, and we are planning to do all that we can to produce feed and keep milk where it is."

This is the best bit of news our people have read in a long time. Milk is one of the necessaries of life. The position Mr. Robertson occupies, that of having the field entirely to himself, shows a philanthropic spirit, and one which the citizens of Port Elgin appreciate.

Another Union Prayermeeting

Reeve Christie had a meeting of the clergymen of the town and country on Monday afternoon in the library for the purpose of arranging for a union-prayermeeting along the same lines as recently held in Port Elgin.

It was decided to hold the next gathering in St. Andrew's church, Saugeen, on Friday evening, June 1st at 7.30 p. m.

The program will be on the same plan as last meeting, the four clergymen who gave addresses last time will exchange with those who offered prayers, Dr. McDougall taking the place of Rev. Mr. Watt and Mr. J. B. Muir will represent the laymen.

Mr. Archie Bell will have charge of the music. The program, if arranged in time, will be printed next week in The Times.

A collection will be taken, to go to Red Cross of S. S. No. 5.

It is expected that a similar meeting will be held in Burgoyne church at a later date. Reeve Christie was chairman and E. R. Sayles sec'y-treasurer.

Mr. South Preaches

Sunday morning Rev. Mr. South, presiding elder of the Leaf River district in Illinois of the U. B. church, preached in the local church here. There was a good attendance, and the services were much enjoyed.

Mr. South in opening his address, expressed his joy at being again in the old town of Port Elgin. It was an especial joy just now to him to come back here and to feel both Canada and his country were together in the great fight for liberty, and a mingled joy and sorrow that his own son had joined with Canadian sons everywhere to fight the good fight. "Soon the blood of our sons will be mingled with the blood of your sons on the fields of Europe. And may God support us in this fight for righteousness, I am glad we are now linked with the British Empire and its allies in the great conflict, said Mr. South.

He preached a good sermon on "Things temporal and Things Eternal" pointing out that the people who were possessed of the "out of sight out of mind" spirit were being placed to one side, and men and women selected for the great affairs of life who had visions of things beyond. There was something more to live for than what we can see with the bodily eye. Why be satisfied with time and sense, when we were made for eternity? We need a powerful eye to see beyond ourselves. Men and women were sifted to-day as never before. All need to have the forward look to God.

W. Sparks is making some improvements to his house, enlarging the rear part.

TURNER'S

Seeding operations are through for this spring and the farmers' thoughts are now turned to his root crop. It is expected a much larger acreage will be put in this year.

Messrs. P. McKinnon and D. Forrester of Paisley, were calling on friends here last week.

The Red Cross Society met on Friday evening for the purpose of choosing a night for a garden party and to appoint committees to take charge of the different parts. The attendance was good, and after some discussion the night was set for June 8th. Colonel Cameron kindly consented to give his place for the evening. It is expected that the Kincardine Pipe Band will be there. The society would like the co-operation of the whole community for this worthy cause.

Mr. John S. Schrank was in Guelph last week.

Mrs. Wm. Atkinson is under the doctor's care at present.

Mrs. and Mrs. Aug. Thede and family of Port Elgin, motored to Mr. Wm. Karcher's, on Sunday.

Muir Bros. Con. 2, Saugeen, received word last week, that their nephew George Muir was killed in action. It is with regret that many heard of his death, as George was well known here.

Mr. and Mrs. Andy Miller were called to Burgoyne Sunday week, owing to the death of Mrs. Miller's mother, Mrs. McTaggart. We extend sympathy.

Mrs. Karcher is improving.

News in General

Flour dropped a dollar a barrel in Sarnia last Thursday.

To-morrow May 24th is recognized as a holiday throughout Canada.

Kincardine is to have horse races on June 8th. Teeswater is also to have a race meet shortly.

Woodstock bowlers are combining in the purchase of a piece of land and will do farming instead of bowling this year.

Chatham council are offering butter and potatoes at wholesale prices in an endeavor to break up the high price ring.

The citizens of Kincardine on Tuesday sanctioned by their vote the proposition of J. B. Watson to erect another factory. The vote stood 229 for the by-law and 85 against.

It will cost $4 as a tax on a dog in Owen Sound, and $9 on a female dog. Port Elgin would make some change by this method, and do a good service to the town by thinning out a lot of mongrels.

Mr. W. L. Iveson, of the chemistry department of the O. A. C., was in this district last week. He is making surveys in this section of the province ascertaining the nature of the soil in the various districts.

Kincardine is to have Friday afternoon as a half holiday. This makes quite a mix-up for this district. Port Elgin and Southampton have Thursday afternoon, Underwood and Tiverton Tuesday and Kincardine Friday.

An old man was sent down from Bruce Tp. this week to become an inmate of the House of Refuge. Unfortunately the people who were looking after him up there did not send along the necessary papers to secure his admittance and he had to board at the gaol for a few days until they could be communicated with.—Walkerton Telescope.

The Saugeen Electric Light & Power Company had their coffer dam completed last night and are once more using water power to generate electricity, which means a great difference in price of coal. They are replacing 150 feet of the old wooden dam. They had a small strike on the work last Saturday. They had about a score of men working on the coffer dam, mostly Indians, and $2.00 a day didn't seem enough for some of them, so they all struck. The matter was soon adjusted however, most of the men going back at the same rate of pay.—Beacon.

Dr. Scanlan Honored

At a largely-attended meeting of the quarterly board of the Methodist church Dr. Scanlan was requested to remain as pastor for a fourth year, and an increase was made in salary amounting to $100.

Dr. Scanlan in replying thanked the men for their expressions of good-will toward him, and said that if it pleased the stationing board of the Conference he would remain.

Case Dismissed

Justices of the Peace J. J. George and H. Crowe dismissed the case against James Brunton, charged by John Witting with not stopping his car, when the latter desired to drive past. The incident happened at Mr. Ament's gate, near town, when Mr. Witting and Mr. Dan Campbell were in the buggy coming to town. Mr. Brunton and Mr. John Ribey were in the car going home. Mr. Witting claimed he raised his hand, and kept his horse and rig directly in the centre of the road, so as to make Brunton stop. That the horse backed up considerably, but finally drove by. Brunton claims he stopped his Ford and went into low gear. Magistrate George said it seemed peculiar that the motorists did not see Mr. Witting's hand go up, but agreed with Magistrate Crowe, that Witting should not have kept the road, and therefore dismissed the case. The costs were very small.

PORTO RICAN BATS.

Only Mammal On the Island Swarms in Caves.

The American Museum of Natural History has received a fine series of birds and mammals collected by H. E. Anthony, of the museum staff, in Porto Rico. Mr. Anthony conducted this expedition as part of a plan of a natural history survey of the island undertaken by the New York Academy of Sciences and the American Museum of Natural History in co-operation with the insular government.

Included in the collections are a number of specimens of bats and fossil mammals. It is not generally known that bats are the only mammals found on the island to-day. Not less than twelve distinct species were found in a collection of nearly 300 specimens. Caves are found all over the island and nearly fifty were visited. Many of these caves are extensive, and contain underground streams, so that exploration is a difficult procedure. In some places bats were found by the thousand, and when disturbed, the noise of their wings was like that of a gale of wind.

Although the layman regards a bat as a commonplace sort of animal, closer acquaintance yields many interesting facts about them and in the variety of forms obtained on the island, many important scientific points concerning them were noted. Most of the bats are insectivorous and play an important part in the control of insect life. The largest bats on the island are reputed to be fish-eaters. On this point, however, no first-hand evidence could be secured. The guano in many of the caves is a valuable asset as a fertilizer and the deposits are being worked by the natives.

In addition to the bats fossil mammals of a type hitherto unknown were secured. these mammals were, like the bats, to be found in the caves, but it was necessary to search for the latter by digging in the loner soil of the cave floors.

Without doubt these animals lived before human habitation, but it is possible that some of them—larger rodents—formed an important item in the diet of the early Indian dwellers who used to visit the caves probably to celebrate religious ceremonies, at which time the animals may have been eaten and the bones cast aside. Evidence of this was found by examination of a number of refuse heaps in the caves in which bones and broken bits of Indian pottery were found.

The fact that Porto Rico at one time doubtless had an abundant point in the study of the history of the West Indies.—New York "Evening Post."

A ROUMANIAN VILLAGE.

Quaint Switch Houses Mask Great Poverty.

Behind the community haystack will be found the village.

Each village house itself seems but a mass of willow switches, wattled together, the interstices being then chinked in and about with mud, so that the place resembles nothing so much as the Dahomey villages of World's Fair times. Along the road, beneath the locusts, rise high walls of it, hiding the yards behind as Turkish women were wont to screen their faces from the masculine gaze. From the street wall other fences run back to the meadows, to enclose a yard.

Passing through the fence, one will see the home, usually the bare, brown mud walls alone, but occasionally coated over with a whitewash of slightly blue tinge, and now and then boasting a portico, on which repose old sheepskin coats, green peppers, cats and the great troop of village dogs, the scavengers of the highway.

Inside the homes, poverty is everywhere manifest. The floors are of earth, on which the family go about barefoot in order to save the costly shoes. The oven is of earth; the bed is a plank, set against the wall; and the artistic is supplied by a single cheap icon. Opulent peasants now go as far as to cover their walls with a cheap cloth, which gives a decidedly pretty effect, but they are the exceptions. For food on their table, there is one dish that is common to all, and that is a soft meal of maize. In addition, there will be mangoes, the poor man's friend in the Balkans, either stuffed with cabbage, roasted or boiled, and, possibly, a potato. Sheep's cheese is also served; but bread is a rarity, and then it is of the black variety always. Meat, of course, is to be had on great occasions only.

At one end of the village stands the symbol of their wrongs the home of the landed proprietor, to whom the adjoining thousand-odd hectares of land belong.

Seldom, if ever, is the noble here. He lives in Vienna or Paris, and leaves the place in charge of some Greek or Macedonian, who has the stewardship for a term of five years, with the intent of making all he can, first for himself and then for the proprietor.—Christian Herald.

Grapes and Wine.

Most people think white grapes make white wine and dark grapes make red wine. It is a popular error. Red wine is made by fermenting grape juice and grape skins together, and white wine is made by fermenting grape juice alone.

THE NOISELESS MOOSE.

Taller Than Ordinary Horse, He Moves Silently Through Forest.

Although taller than an ordinary horse, weighing more than half a ton, and adorned with wide-spreading antlers, the bull moose stalks with ghostly silence through thickest forests, where man can scarcely move without being betrayed by the loud crackling of dry twigs. In summer it loves low-lying, swampy forests, interspersed with shallow lakes and sluggish wades up to its neck in a lake to feed on succulent water plants, and when reaching to the bottom becomes entirely submerged. These visits to the water are sometimes by day, but usually at night, especially during the season when the calves are young and the horns of the bulls are but partly grown.

Late in the fall, with full-grown antlers, the bulls wander through the forest looking for their mates, at times uttering far-reaching calls of defiance to all rivals, and occasionally clashing their horns against the saplings in exuberance of masterful vigor. Other bulls at times accept the challenge and hasten to meet the rival for a battle royal. At this season the call of the cow moose also brings the nearest bull quickly to her side. Hunters take advantage of this, and by imitating the call through a birch-bark trumpet bring the most aggressive bulls to their doom.—Exchange.

"SHORT SELLING."

How Money is Made as Well as Lost On Falling Market.

Someone writing to the New York World confesses that he shares Count von Bernstorff's declared ignorance of the workings of the stock market machinery "by which it is possible to make money on a falling market," and ask whether it is possible to make money "otherwise than by buying at low prices and holding the goods until the market rises again."

The World did not take the trouble to enlighten the inquirer. Yet it is worth while to do that. The speculative process that is known as "selling short" is a mystery to many, and frequently attempts to explain it to those who do not understand are unsatisfactory in their results, if not altogether futile.

It is axiomatic that profit can be made only by selling a third for more than one pays for it. The simplest process to accomplish the desired result is to do the buying when prices are lower than they are likely to be at some future time, and then wait until realization of the expected advance makes opportunity to sell at a higher price.

Short selling is simply a reversal of that process. The selling is done at a time when prices are higher than they are likely to be at a future time, and the buying when prices have declined. Manifestly, the difference between the prices is profit, just the same as it is when the buying precedes the selling.

It is the fact that as a rule, short sellers do not possess what they sell, that makes comprehension of the process difficult—to many. They cannot understand how anyone can sell something that he hasn't. But the explanation of that is simple enough. The short seller borrows the stock which he sells, directly he is a member of the stock exchange, or through a broker if he is an outside operator, and delivers the borrowed stock to the buyer. The lender of the stock is secured by the delivery, to him, of the purchase price, and the obligation of the seller to make up to him any advance in the price which may come before return of the stock.

When, sooner or later, the price of the stock declines, the sellers and borrower buys as much as he has sold and borrowed for delivery at the lower price. He returns this to the lender and receives his original selling price. His gain is the excess of that over the price which he paid in a lower market.

This closing of the transaction is called covering.

We have described a successful transaction. It may happen, of course, that the short seller is disappointed in his expectation that he will be able to buy the stock which he sold when he didn't have it, at a lower price. It may advance so much that he is unable, or deems it advisable, to hold the transaction open indefinitely, for possible ultimate results in his favor. Then he must buy the stock for return to the lender, at a price higher than that which he paid for it, and the difference between selling price and the purchasing price is a loss to him, just as that difference is a loss to the speculator who buys when he believes a stock will advance sooner or later and instead it declines and he is forced, or thinks it advisable, to sell at the lower price.—Albany Journal.

MONEY IS USELESS.

No Cash is Needed in the Island of Ascension.

The island of Ascension, in the Atlantic, belonging to Great Britain, is of volcanic formation, eight miles by six in size, and has a population of about 450. It was uninhabited until the confinement of Napoleon at St. Helena. Vast numbers of turtles are found on its shores and it serves as a depot and watering place for ships.

Ascension is governed by a captain appointed by the British Admiralty. There is no private property in land, no rents, no taxes and no use for money. The flocks and herds are public property and the meat is issued as rations. So are the vegetables grown on the farms. When an island fisherman makes a catch he brings it to the guardroom, where it is issued by the sergeant-major. Practically the entire population are sailors, and they work at one of the common trades. The muleteer is a jack tar, so is the gardener, so is the shepherds, the stockmen, the grooms, masons, carpenters and plumbers. Even the island trapper who gets reward for the tails of rats, is a sailor.

The climate is almost perfect; anything can be grown.—Philadelphia Ledger.

INSECT TRAVELERS.

Moths, Butterflies and Beetles Make Long Distance Journeys.

Mr. William Evans, a Scottish naturalist, who has made a lifelong study of the fauna of Scotland, obtained from a dozen Scottish lighthouses 241 species of insects, which include two butterflies, 159 moths, eighteen caddis flies and lacewings, forty diptera, ten beetles and a dozen other males. To reach the Isle of May, in the Firth of Forth, where Mr. Evans collected most of the insects, many of the specimens must have flown across several miles of sea.

In his records Mr. Evans calls attention to several other extraordinary flights of insects.

Thus, the "painted lady," or thistle butterfly (Pyrameis cardui), has been known to cross the Alps; the red admiral butterfly (Vanessa atalanta) has landed in numbers on the deck of a vessel 500 miles from the coast of England; the common white butterflies cross the English channel in clouds; the famous milkweed butterfly (Danais archippus), abundant everywhere in the United States, is said to make the 2,000 mile journey from California to the Hawaiian Islands and has gradually progressed by way of the south sea islands as far as Australia.

A death's head moth has boarded a steamer 200 miles off the Cape Verde Islands. Clouds of ladybirds miles in extent, so that they resembled smoke from a steamer, have been seen at sea. A swarm of locusts that passed over the Red sea in 1889 is said to have extended over 2,000 square miles, and it was estimated to weigh 42,850,000,000 tons!

ST. VITUS DANCE

EVEN THE MOST SEVERE CASES CAN BE CURED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Is your child fidgety, restless, or irritable? Are the hands shaky or the arms jerky? Does the face twitch? Do the legs tremble or drag? These are signs of St. Vitus Dance, a nervous disease which is confined chiefly to young children, but which often affects highly-strung women, and sometimes men. St. Vitus Dance is caused by disordered nerves, due to poor blood, and is always cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which fill the veins with new, rich red blood, strengthening the nerves, and thus drawing out the disease. Here is proof:—Mrs. John A. Cumming, Lower Caledonia, N. S., says:—"When my daughter Myrtle was about nine years of age she became afflicted with St. Vitus Dance. The trouble ultimately became so bad that she could not hold anything in her hands, and had to be fed like a child. She could not even walk across the floor without help. She was treated for some time by a physician, but did not show any improvement. One day a neighbor said she had read of a case of St. Vitus Dance cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and we decided to give this medicine a trial. By the time the third box was used there was some improvement in her condition, and we continued giving her the pills for about a month longer when she was entirely cured, and has not since had the least return of the trouble.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be obtained from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE JAGUAR.

Is Bigger But Not So Fierce as African Leopard.

The jaguar or "el tigre," as it is generally known throughout Spanish America, is the largest and handsomest of American cats. Its size and deep yellow color, profusely marked with black spots and rosettes, gives it a close resemblance to the African leopard. It is, however, a heavier and more powerful animal. In parts of the dense tropical forest of South America coal-black jaguars occur, and while representing merely a color phase, they are supposed to be much fiercer than the ordinary animal. Although so large and powerful, the jaguar has none of the truculent ferocity of the African leopard. During the years I spent in this country, mainly in the open, I made careful inquiry without hearing of a single case where one had attacked human beings.

In one locality on the Pacific coast of Guerrero I found that the hardier natives had an interesting method of hunting the "tigre" during the mating period. At such time the male has the habit of leaving its lair near the head of a small canyon in the foothills early in the evening and following down the canyon for some distance, at intervals uttering a subdued roar. On moonlight nights at this time the hunter places an expert native with a short wooden trumpet near the mouth of the canyon to imitate the "tigre's" call as soon as it is heard and to repeat the cry at proper intervals. After placing the caller, the hunter ascends the canyon several hundred yards, and, gun in hand, awaits the approach of the animal. The natives have many amusing tales of the sudden exit of untried hunters when the approaching animal unexpectedly uttered its roar at close quarters.—National Geographic Magazine.

Why We Can Gauge Distance.

Aside from the monkey, man is the only animal having what we call binocular single vision. That is, he can tell not only the direction of an object, but he can estimate fairly accurately its distance. This is because both of his eyes point at the same object at the same time, like two range finders. Other animals do not concentrate their gaze in this way. Their eyes are set more nearly at the sides of the head so that they see not only forward, but backward for a short distance. Man, on the contrary, sees clearly only the object at which he looks directly.—"Popular Science Monthly."

FAMILIAR PHRASES.

A Few of the Many Gems We Get From Alexander Pope.

With the exception of Shakespeare, Pope is the author of more familiar phrases than any other writer of modern times. Here are a few of his gems:

"Shoot folly as she flies." "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." "Man never is but always to be blessed." "Whatever is is right." "The proper study of mankind is man." "Grows with his growth and strengthens with his strength." "Order is heaven's first law." "Worth makes the man and want of it the fellow." "Honor and shame from no condition rise; act well your part—there all the honor lies." "An honest man's the noblest work of God." "Thou wert my guide, philosopher and friend." "Woman's at best a contradiction still." "Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined." "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" "A little learning is a dangerous thing." "To err is human, to forgive divine." "Beauty draws us with a single hair." "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." "Damn with faint praise." "The many headed monster."

SEPARATE SKIRTS

Ultra Smart for Spring—Some Chic Blouses.

The separate skirt for spring has been given more attention by designers than this important garment has received heretofore. They have at last realized that it is just as staple a garment as the suit and frock, and are, consequently, taking quite as much care in its designing.

As a result, it is now being developed in various very appropriate fabrics and it is showing a greater variety of line. The barrel skirt is being featured this year, however, and one may safely say that it is the leading skirt silhouette. Sport skirts will be more popular than ever. There is, too, a dress skirt, much favored by fashionable Parisian women throughout the winter, which will be worn this spring. It is of black or navy blue satin and is especially effective when worn with the new chiffon blouses in art colors.

A very new design for a separate skirt is that which has been borrowed from the native dress of the French colony of Algeria. It has panels of thick pleats set close together to form the sides of the skirt, the front and back panels being entirely plain.

Blouses, simple or elaborate, are frequently composed of two materials, usually sheer. Practically all dressy blouses are made up in sheer fabrics. Net blouses will be worn, many of them having colored linings of chiffon or satins. Dressy blouses show a decided preference for very short kimono sleeves, but the tailored blouses have sleeves extending quite to the mona sleeves, but the tailored blouses are expected to receive the approval of the ultra smart. Paisley designs appear upon chiffon blouses. Sheer organdies show the finest possible embroidery done in fine sewing silk.

Very fine linens, lawns, organdies and washable silk crepes are the favored spring and summer blouse materials.

Gentlemen,—Ever since coming home from the Boer war I have been bothered with running fever sores on my legs. I tried many salves and liniments; also doctored continuously for the blood, but got no permanent relief till last winter, when my mother got me to try MINARD'S LINIMENT, the effect of which was almost magical. Two bottles completely cured me, and I have worked every working day since.

Yours gratefully,

When Parasols Began.

Parasols when they first came into use must have been cumbersome. Henri Estienne, writing in 1578, speaks of a parasol as capable generally of sheltering four persons from the sun. And when they diminished in circumference the material still remained of the heaviest. Red velvet parasols with heavy gold fringes, were carried by ladies of fashion in the days of Louis XIV. At that time it was possible when crossing a bridge in Paris to hire a parasol at one end and deposit it at the other, the charge for the accommodation being a sou. Under the regency fashion went to the other extreme. Men's parasols folded into the shape of a three-cornered hat and could thus be carried elegantly under the arm; ladies' parasols were hinged so that they could slip into the pocket, for the ladies had pockets then.—London Spectator.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

A Slight Mistake.

The clerk was up to his ears in parasols. He was a good salesman, had a rare command of language, and knew how to explain on the best points of the goods he sold. As he picked up a parasol from a lot on the counter and opened it he struck an attitude and admiration and said:

"Now there! Look at that silk! Isn't it lovely? Particularly observe the quality, the finish, the general effect. Feel it. Pass your hand over it. No nonsense about that parasol, is there?"

"No," said the lady; "it has worn well. That is my old one. I just laid it down here."—New York Times.

GERMAN COUNTER-ATTACKS WERE BUT COSTLY FAILURES

Picked Troops Mowed Down in Swaths by British on West Front.

French Also Took Heavy Toll of the Invaders on Their Front.

(By Perry Robinson.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—German efforts to recover lost positions in Bullecourt and Roeux continued last night and this morning without material result, and so far at neither place has he made any impression. At Bullecourt at one time he won a portion of the western side of the village, but was again driven out. We again improved our position on the east side.

At Roeux also at one time he succeeded in forcing us back from the village and near the chemical works, but at both places were recovered all the ground yielded. The present position seems to be better than before. Our artillery throughout has done admirably. All attacks, however, cannot be entirely broken by guns. Every day the fighting shows more, and more the importance of rifle fire.

It was pre-eminence in the use of the rifle which was the chief strength of the first expeditionary force. The Germans have been taking a leaf out of our book, and giving more time to musketry training. Never before was it so necessary to train our troops and new armies especially to the greatest possible excellence in the use of the rifle.

BULLECOURT SUCCESS.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—The Germans received a heavy check north of the Scarpe River to-day, where in massed formation they stormed this position, which was recently won by the British. After a terrific bombardment lasting a considerable time, the German infantry came down the slopes of Greenland Hill from the direction of Plouvain.

The British artillery made the hillside look like a mushroom farm, balls of shell smoke sprouting up thickly over the entire field. Machine guns streamed nickled missiles into the enemy ranks on the front and in the flanks.

Sheer weight and momentum carried the Germans beyond the British outposts and even into the chemical works themselves, but, like a rubber ball, the rebound was instantaneous and swift. The defenders struck. After a short and hard fight the enemy was thrown out with heavy losses, leaving the British established more securely than ever.

The fighting continued about Bullecourt and a German partial success recently won there was wiped out. In the meantime the British strengthened their positions eastward toward Roeux and drew a mile closer to Loos. Here the Germans continue their work of wrecking the district. Buildings are being blown up and machinery is being destroyed in order that the great mining centre shall not furnish the slightest benefit to the Allies when the Germans are finally forced to let go.

MOWN DOWN IN SWATHS.

London Cable.—The launching of a German infantry attack against Roeux this morning in great strength with the evident object of recapturing the position is reported by the Reuter correspondent at British headquarters in France.

"When the first grey waves swept forward from the direction of Plouvain they were met by a whirlwind of [illegible] and [illegible] fire as well as artillery fire," writes the correspondent. "They were mown down in swaths, but continued to advance in waves of fresh troops in a manner indicating that picked troops were being employed.

"So far as I have been able to learn the enemy succeeded in gaining [illegible] the chemical works and forcing an entry there. Three hand-to-hand fighting followed, but the Germans were thrown back in a counter-attack, and we restored our positions, [illegible] inflicting terrible punishment upon the enemy.

"The struggle still is progressing this afternoon, [illegible] the [illegible] of the German attack."

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

Wednesday night's War Office report said:

"After a heavy bombardment of our trenches on both banks of the Scarpe, the enemy delivered a powerful counter-attack this morning on the north bank between Gavrelle and the river. His troops pressed on [illegible] under a destructive fire from our artillery and machine guns. For a short period he [illegible] our advanced troops from their forward positions, but counter-attacks, however, immediately launched, regained all the ground temporarily lost, driving back the enemy with exceptionally heavy losses. A number of prisoners remained in our hands.

"Our troops made progress during the day in the Hindenburg line, north-west of Bullecourt.

"A hostile raiding party was successfully repulsed this morning south-east of Ypres.

"A German aeroplane was driven down out of control yesterday. One of our machines is missing."

FRENCH ALSO SCORE HEAVILY.

Paris Cable.—Heavy German attacks in the Aisne sector have been repulsed with sanguinary losses, and where the Germans temporarily broke through they were driven out and the lost ground regained, according to the official statement issued by the War Office to-night. Despite the importance of the enemy effective and the violence of the assaults the French inflicted a sanguinary check on the enemy.

Wednesday night's War Office report read:

"The Germans to-day continued their attacks in the regions to the north and northeast of Moulin de Laffaux as far as the railroad between Soissons and Laon. Despite the importance of the enemy effectives and the violence of the assaults our troops inflicted a sanguinary check on their adversaries. At several points, where our line temporarily gave way, we carried out brilliant counter-attacks, which enabled us to regain the lost ground.

"The Germans suffered heavy losses in endeavoring to arrest our progress by new attempts, which were broken by our barrages and the fire of our machine guns. About one hundred unwounded Germans remained in our hands as well as a number of wounded Germans who were carried by our ambulances.

"The artillery fighting continued violently along the whole front of attack. In the sector of Craonne lively artillery actions also occurred.

"On May 15 our pilots brought down three German aeroplanes."

CROP OUTLOOK IS NOW BETTER

Reports to Department More Encouraging.

High Record for Town and Farm Vegetables.

Toronto Cable.—There is more optimistic tone in the reports filed by the district representatives with the Department of Agriculture regarding the progress of food production on the farms of the Province during the past week. There has been a marked advance in the work of getting in the new crops, and fully 75 per cent. of the spring seeding has been accomplished. The reports indicate that as a general rule the soil has worked up well this spring—better than for many years.

Fall wheat has quickened to the favorable change in weather conditions, but the backwardness of the early season has forced farmers in many districts to re-seed with barley or oats. Clover shows a little improvement over wheat, although few fields are up to real form, and the present prospects for hay are not bright. Pastures are ready for sheep and young cattle only.

Increased acreage has been planted to early potatoes over previous years, but the cold ground has retarded growth and is trying to the planted seed. The indications are that a much larger area of beans and corn will be planted. Essex County reports some corn already sown. The year promises a new high record for both [illegible] town home-grown vegetables. Pruning and spraying operations were well advanced during the week in the orchard belts.

Live stock is reported in good condition with most of the young cattle on pasture, although grass is not sufficiently advanced for general grazing. With the exception of Simcoe County the reports indicate that cattle are scarce this year. Milk production is fairly normal, owing to backward pasture, but local creameries are reported as anticipating a good year. There is still more than sufficient for immediate needs.

Labor conditions are less acute now that the spring rush is nearly over, but requests are still coming in for high school boys. Larger implements and additional [illegible] are being purchased [illegible], and the demonstrations made by the Department of Agriculture with Ford tractors have been successful everywhere and have added a practically [illegible] in the [illegible] for [illegible] production.

PROBLEMS OF BEER AND WAR

British Director of Food Economy Backs Brewing.

Steel Workers, He Says, Must Have It.

London Cable.—Influential representations have been made to the Ministry of Food that the continuation of brewing in Great Britain is likely to make it more difficult to get increased export of cereals from America. Kennedy Jones, Director of Food Economy, gave the Associated Press an authoritative statement in regard to the restrictions already imposed on brewing and the complexities of the problem. He said:

"We quite realize that misapprehension may exist in the United States regarding our beer consumption. That is natural. We are daily receiving letters from numbers in this country who consider that they are absolved from the necessity of saving bread because other people drink beer, and who demand that, as a first step in food economy, all brewing should cease.

"As things stand, no more barley will be malted in this country, except a small quantity for use as coloring matter. The last barley was malted in February. Therefore the only question is, would there be a very voluminable saving in food by mixing the malt which exists with flour and making it into bread, rather than by using it for the brewing of beer. A strong body of scientific opinion holds that beer has its food value. Apart from that it is a fact that only a small percentage of malt—not more than five per cent.—can be mixed with flour in bread-making, as it produces a sticky and unpalatable loaf.

"Whether the brewing of beer shall be stopped at once, and the barley already malted used for mixing with flour, is a question of policy, and hinges on the point whether the malt in bread or in beer will secure the most efficient prosecution of the war. Beer has been for centuries a part of the daily diet of our working classes. The first duty and the first effort of those responsible for the ordering of public affairs is to secure a maximum output of work for the prosecution of the war from all workers. A great number of men engaged in very heavy manual labor—as for example men working at blast furnaces—must drink considerable malty liquid. This is not only a practical fact, it is a scientific fact. The bulk of these men are in the habit of taking that liquid in the form of beer. The question is, not whether cold tea would be better for them, but what would be the effect on the output of work by suddenly cutting off their supply of beer.

"If it be found advisable to stop beer altogether—upon which point there is considerable difference of opinion—it would be simply common sense to allow the workers time to adapt themselves to the change gradually, by a gradual reduction of the supply, rather than by stopping or checking the brewing of beer at once. Also, it is well to bear in mind that if the worker is not deriving part of his energy, as has been his habit, from beer, he may require more bread, so that practically no actual saving of bread could be effected.

"Moreover, we may well take a leaf out of Germany's book in this matter. That country is, in the matter of food now scientifically organized with a view to supplying its workers with a maximum of energy for the prosecution of the war. South Germany is still brewing 55 per cent. of its prewar quantity of beer, against our 27½ per cent., yet no one would suggest that the food situation in Germany has not been serious for the last twelve months.

"Of course, there may arrive the point at which it is considered necessary, on review of all the circumstances, to stop all brewing, but until this point is reached, and in view of the drastic restrictions already imposed, it is scarcely fair to let the impression get abroad that we are blind to the considerations involved, or determined to continue beer drinking regardless of its effect upon the war. It should be clearly understood that, because of its relation to daily life and the output of munitions, beer occupies a very different status in this country, as compared with its relation to the life of the American people."

RUSS OUTLOOK IS IMPROVED

"The unity of the allied fronts, the fullest confidence of the revolutionary democracy in the reconstructed Cabinet, and a plenitude of powers for the Government."

WARNS ALLIES AS TO AUSTRIA

Must be Dismembered in a Separate Peace.

If Allowed to Stand, Always a Menace.

London Cable.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—"Let the Entente Allies beware against giving Austria-Hungary too liberal terms in any agreement for a separate peace," declares Professor Masaryk, the Bohemian political leader, who was condemned to death by the Austrian Government four months ago for high treason. He is at present an exile in London and discussed with war correspondents the recent reports that Austria is seeking a separate peace through agents in Switzerland.

"There is no doubt that Austria would be glad to come to some arrangements," he said. "These peace moves must be a source of great humiliation to many honest Austrians, no matter how much they are forced on her by economic and political conditions. Austria is not playing fair to her partner. What she is doing now to Germany is, speaking plainly, treachery. Austria is trying to get out of the war, and does not know how to go about it.

"The difference between Germany and Austria is that the German nation is united while the majority of the Austrian nation has been against the war all along. This applies especially to the Bohemians. Bohemian regiments repeatedly declined to fight, and did everything in their power to impede the Central Powers and help the enemy. Bohemia has been thoroughly punished for all this. Bohemian commanders were sent to dangerous fronts, their regiments were diluted with various unpleasant elements, their leaders were thrown into prison.

"The whole of Bohemia is against Austria and against the war. The same applies to the south Slavs, the Poles and the Austro-Roumanians.

"But Austria's present manoeuvres toward peace ought not to deceive the Ententc. She is willing, no doubt, to sacrifice some territory, but not enough to remove her as a menace. The dismemberment of Austria-Hungary is just as essential to permanent peace in Europe as the destruction of military Prussianism.

"Bohemia and the Slovaks should become a separate independent state. The Italian elements in the monarchy should go to Italy, the Roumanian elements to Roumania, the Ruthenians to Russia, the Poles to Poland, and the south Slavs to Serbia. There would remain the German Austrians and the Magyars, in separate states. This is the only possible way of crushing out the Mittel-Europa idea. If Poland and Bohemia are free, Central Europe cannot exist.

"I believe also that the dynasty in Austria must go. The question is democracy or dynasty. Dynastic Austria will always be dangerous to the peace of Europe, because of close ties with Germany."

CLOSING IN ON GERMAN LINES

How Gen. Haig Saves His Men, but Gains Ground.

Steadily Closing On Lens, Coal Centre.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

With the British Armies in France, Cable.—Toward a full afternoon, the greater portion of the battle line, [illegible] in places that larks singing and swallows circling make welcome breaks in the noise of [illegible] other [illegible] are [illegible] unending fighting. Bullecourt is one of these spots. Lens is another and the valley of the Scarpe another.

[illegible] the Germans never [illegible] counter-attacking, throwing in fresh battalion after battalion, only to [illegible] them out [illegible] days as [illegible] company.

The Bullecourt fighting has [illegible] here [illegible] almost [illegible] continued for two weeks, sometimes advancing and sometimes [illegible], but always [illegible] slow, [illegible] for Haig's [illegible]. The German wireless recently said: "This is the twelfth attack on the mass of craters which represent Bullecourt since April 11. It, however, the English are bent upon possession of this heap of ruins, they will have to repeat the attack for the [illegible] time."

However the village is now virtually all British, not needing the German admission that the thirteenth assault would complete its conquest. The Germans have [illegible] frantically counter-attacked the British holdings in the Hindenburg line through the edge of the village leaving many dead as they staggered back defeated.

The British are almost imperceptibly closing in about Lens, in much the same manner with almost continuous fighting reported. Southeast of Loos the Germans attacking from trenches near Cite St. Laurent are breaking up under the English artillery. In a snappy encounter around the Gillemont Farm the Germans drove out the British in a midnight attack, but the British counter-attacked and recaptured the farm before dawn.

U. S. FOOD CONTROL.

President is Anxious for Early Legislation.

Washington Report.—Members of the Senate and House Agriculture Committees to-day reported to their colleagues that President Wilson is unusually anxious for early passage of legislation to stop speculation in foods and regulate production and distribution. The food situation ranks second only to the army and navy in importance for the war, the President told the committee members at the White House conference last night.

It seems probable to-day that all food legislation pending in Congress will be arranged in three Administration bills—one providing for a food survey and stimulating production, already under consideration in the Senate; another regulating distribution and prices, and the third authorizing a system of preferential shipments.

IRISH PLAN OF LLOYD GEORGE

Dublin Parliament, With S.-E. Ulster Out,

And Grand Council to Do Common Business.

London Cable.—The Times' announcement of the Government's Irish plan follows:

"The proposals of the Government Irish settlement will be in the hands of the Irish party leaders on Wednesday. It is understood the following are the chief heads of the scheme:

"First—Immediate establishment of an Irish Parliament in Dublin.

"Second—Exclusion of Southeast Ulster by clean cut.

"Third—Formation of a Grand Council, consisting of equal proportions of members of the Dublin Parliament and Ulster members of the Imperial Parliament, to transact all common business between the excluded area and the rest of Ireland, and to have power to direct, if it thinks fit, any enactment the Dublin Parliament shall apply to the excluded area.

"It will be seen that the Government has not adopted the expedient of exclusion by county option which for a time fascinated the Nationalists, but apparently attracts them no longer. Partition is avoided, and the essential unity of Ireland preserved by the device of a Grand Council, which, it is hoped, would pave the way for a fuller and more intimate union in its general attitude. The Government's reasons for first acquainting the Irish party leaders with the proposals can be explained that the Nationalists declined to negotiate with the Government. On this occasion neither they nor Ulster Unionists have any foreknowledge from official sources of the Government's scheme. The Government laid down two fundamental conditions. The first, that it is absolutely impossible to coerce Ulster in any way. The second is that it is impossible to carry through Parliament at the present time long detailed measures if they invite controversy. There is neither time nor atmosphere for contentious measures. Unless, therefore, some measure of agreement between the two Irish parties can be secured the scheme cannot go forward."

M. MILUKOFF LEAVES RUSS GOVERNMENT

Latter Refuses Demands of Workers and Soldiers Before Joining.

LIKELY CABINET

Provisional Government Stands by Its Principles of April 9th.

Petrograd Cable, via London Cable.—Paul N. Milukoff, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has resigned, leaving the Cabinet altogether. M. Tereschtenko, Minister of Finance, has been appointed Foreign Minister, and A. F. Kerensky, previously Minister of Justice, has been named Minister of War and Marine.

Petrograd Cable, via London Cable.—Having discussed the conditions under which representatives of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates would consent to enter the Cabinet, the provisional Government decided to say that it was unable to accept the first of these conditions. This called for the enunciation as a fundamental principle of a foreign policy openly pursuing the aim of reaching as soon as possible a general peace without annexations or indemnities, on the basis of the right of nations to work out their own destinies. The provisional Government was unable to agree to such a principle, because it did not consider possible any renunciation of principles set forth in its Proclamation of April 9.

The provisional Government further thinks it necessary to confirm the unity of all Allied fronts, and insists on an energetic struggle against anarchy. To the financial and economic reforms mentioned by the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates the Government raises no objections, regarding it as part of its task to realize such reforms.

The executive committee of the Duma has approved this decision of the Government.

The probable composition of the coalition Cabinet, as reported to-day, with reserve, follows:

Premier and Minister of the Interior, Prince G. A. Lvoff (the present incumbent).

Minister of Public Instruction, Prof. Paul Milukoff (now Foreign Minister. He has left the Cabinet altogether.)

Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Tereschtenko (now Minister of Finance).

Minister of Finance, A. I. Shingaroff (now Minister of Agriculture).

Minister of Commerce and Industry, A. I. Konovaloff (now Minister of Trade and Commerce).

Minister of Communications, N. V. Nekrasoff (the present incumbent).

Minister of War, A. F. Kerensky (now Minister of Justice).

Minister of Marine, M. Skobeleff, Vice President of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, or Admiral Koltchak, commander of the Black Sea fleet. (The War Minister takes this post also.)

Minister of Agriculture, M. Tchernoff, a revolutionary Socialist.

Minister of Labor, M. Tseredeff, a Social Democrat.

Minister of Justice, M. Nikitine, a Moscow lawyer and Social Democrat, or M. Malantkvitch, an Odessa lawyer and Social Democrat.

Minister of Munitions, M. Pechehonoff, a National Socialist.

WIN HOLY CITY BY END OF JUNE

Shocking Ill-Treatment of Jews by Turks.

London Cable.—Indications are that the allied forces will occupy Jerusalem by the end of June. It is deemed probable that they will find it in ruins.

Reports continue to come from Palestine telling of the Turkish persecution of the Jews. Hundreds of young Jews have been driven from Jerusalem and scattered over a wide territory, with the deliberate intention of forcing them to starve or succumb to sickness.

The most reliable information does not hesitate to picture the misery of these people as worse than anything one so far reported. Even the massacres of the Armenians pale before the latest outrages perpetrated by religious fanatics. Wherever the Jews have attempted to defend their homes in the Holy City they have been taken out and hanged, their houses pillaged and all property of value taken and the remainder burned.

French troops are co-operating with the British in the advance on Jerusalem, which is to be resumed presently. Reports from Constantinople say that the Grand Vizier is on the way to Berlin, where he will seek the aid of Germany, Austria and Bulgaria in defending the sacred places in Palestine. It is not known whether or not his mission will be successful.

Have you got that bunch of ashes, or refuse hauled away yet? Clean Up! There should be some regulation as to where refuse should be placed. Too much liberty is taken with the street and paths, and all kinds of sand, ashes and junk are dumped in the streets just because it's handy.

Hon. Mr. Crothers stated in the House last week that although prices are high working people were all employed, and that these people had more money than they ever had. He also stated they were putting their money in the banks. This is most encouraging, but we fancy it will be news to most of the workers who find that the increasing prices have cut the dollar to less than half of its pre war value.

A wealthy doctor in Detroit has erected a large apartment house and has advertised it as available for rent to families with children, but not dogs. Sir Robert Borden said that when he was in France in July, 1915, there was one Canadian division. This year there were four Canadian divisions, some thousands over strength, with all the lines of communication, and a large force of railway construction and forestry. He also noted that the fifth division, which contained the 160th. Battalion, had also gone to France. Apparently the reports in some papers that the Canadian battalions were understrength in France is not true.

Capt. (Rev.) W. A. Cameron, of Toronto, who has been working in the Y. M. C. A at the front says: The overwhelming majority of the Canadian boys in France have kept their lives clean and unsullied. "I brand reports of drinking as lies and slanders." "The Y. M. C. A. tried to lead the Canadian soldiers to make the great decision, and we found the majority of them had made it years ago." The above is encouraging news to many an anxious father and mother in Canada. The great work of the "Y. M." is hindered by the wet canteen, but they are winning against the handicap. Why the wet canteen, anyway?

Some one has been counting up the retired farmers in Uxbridge and puts the number about sixty. The retired farmer generally has an eye for good property and has time enough to keep it in apple pie order. He also sets the community an example of how to keep one's sidewalk clear of snow in the winter. He is not a lavish spender because he earned his competence by hard work and economy, but he is always good pay.—Uxbridge Journal.

Are those who can plant potatoes planting them? Of course, a man knows his own business best. But there was a time a month or so ago, when a great cry was going up that seed potatoes could not be got. Now this seed is plentiful in town, and it ought to be good business to plant potatoes. Eggs are being bought up and stored for 40c per dozen, and if the speculator is to be king in this country, better raise all the potatoes possible. Some fear there might be an over supply. Take no chances. They might be $10 per bag.

Early in the present century the following question was sent to leading statesmen, college presidents, doctors, lawyers, ministers, and to prominent men of every calling throughout Great Britain: "What is the greatest evil that threatens the church and the world in the twentieth century?" A great many interesting answers were received and published. Perhaps the most striking was given by the late General Booth, of the salvation army. Here it is: "Religion without the Holy Ghost, Christianity without Christ, Forgiveness without Repentance, Salvation without Regeneration, Politics without God, and Heaven without Hell."

Premier Borden's pronouncement of conscription for Canada occasioned no regrets from anyone in this district, and reports prove the order is generally approved by Canadians. Farmers and their sons engaged on the soil may not be taken in the selective drafts, but the men will be found mainly in the towns and cities, and in the occupations not necessary for war purposes or production. But conscription, even the selective kind, is a dangerous club in the hands of politicians, either Grit or Tory. Conscription is acceptable in a crisis like this, but the favoritism characteristic of the average politician, is disgusting. One way Premier Borden can show his statesmanship is to appoint a board to operate conscription outside of the politicians altogether.

The Toronto Globe, in a survey of the coal situation notes that coal buying is too hasty. That there is no need of a buying panic, and that this sort of thing is tending to raise the price of coal. The increased wage scale is 24 and 30 cents a ton. The U. S. commission says this is a steadying factor in the coal industry, and that the May prices at the mine provide for this increase. Prices for May at the mines are quoted at $3 61 a net ton for egg, $3.84 for stove, and $3 93 for chestnut coal. The local situation is declared to be absolutely dependent upon the railroads, and the congestion there is used as an argument for local prices. Increased freight rates are also pointed out as a cause for abnormal prices. It is possible that the difficulty with the railroads will be solved by important large quantities of waterborne coal. If this is done to any appreciable extent, it is stated that prices will develop a downward tendency.

Cost of Bad Roads

A company in Stanislaus county, California, that buys skimmed milk from the farmer has demonstrated to the rural residents in an emphatic manner the value of good roads to them. This company sends trucks directly to the farms to collect the skimmed milk, but it pays higher prices to farmers living on good roads than on bad roads. On poor roads the company pays 17½ cents per 100 pounds, but on good roads it pays 20 cents. Of course, the farmer always has been paying this tax on every hundred pounds he hauled over bad roads and he has been relieved of it on every hundred pounds he had hauled over good roads, but that fact has not been brought to his notice as in the case cited. When he measures his distance from town in minutes instead of miles he will realize the profit of good roads.—American Lumberman.

Automobile Ordinances

"Speed limit 15 miles an hour" is the sign that faces you at the city boundary, and in the next ten minutes a dozen cars go by you at 25 miles an hour. We should say off hand that hardly one community out of fifty lives up to its automobile regulations. Spasmodic enforcement of local laws is a constant source of grief to motorists. You cut across the street intersection forty-nine days in succession, and on the fiftieth day are arrested for not turning a square corner. Naturally you are offended. Another affliction is the absence of signs. In some towns you may park your car anywhere you please. In others, of the same general aspect and with no warning sign, you may be arrested for leaving it on a certain street. Your muffler cut-out is a tolerated nuisance in a half a dozen towns, while in the next one its use is a misdemeanor, but there is no sign to tell you the difference. Signs cost little, too. The beginning of automobile regulation for any town should be: "Say plainly what you mean and stick to it."

Brantford is to sell coal and potatoes at cost.

FIGHTING GARDEN FOES

Destroy Them or They May Destroy Your Crop.

SPRAYING A READY REMEDY

In This Column the Amateur is Introduced to Insects and Fungus So That He May Know Them by Their First Names.

(By S. C. JOHNSTON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Garden Foes.

Unfortunately the backyard vegetable grower has some difficulties to overcome. It will not be all pleasure and profit which he must look forward to because there are innumerable insects and fungus diseases which cause much worry and trouble and necessitate the use of extraordinary methods to prevent or control. Most of these troubles may be overcome by spraying the plants with remedies which can be secured from seed stores and other firms handling them.

The following is a list of the more common vegetables and the insects and plant diseases attacking them with remedies or preventives.

ASPARAGUS. Beetles. Blue, black or yellowish colored, about one-half inch long, which appear early in May and feed on the young shoots. Keep the bed closely cut in the spring or allow poultry to run through it. After cutting season is over, spray with arsenate of lead. Encourage the lady bird bettle which destroys many of these insects.

Anthracnose or Pod Spots. Brown or reddish spots on the foliage and pods. Found on low damp ground. Plant only seeds which have no signs of the disease. Pull up and burn diseased plants as they appear.

CABBAGE, CAULIFLOWER, AND BRUSSELS SPROUTS. Root Maggot. A small whitish colored maggot one-quarter of an inch long. Looks something like a grain of wheat, found just below the surface of the ground either close to or on the roots. They eat the roots, causing the plant to drop over. Apply a solution of corrosive sublimate one-half ounce dissolved in five gallons of water, at the rate of half a teacupful over each plant once a week for five weeks after they are set out, commencing three or four days after planting.

Cut Worms and White Grubs. Greyish white grubs which work at the surface of the soil cutting off the plants. They may be trapped by spreading a mixture of poison bran over the surface of the soil close to the plants. A pail of bran with sufficient paris green to highly color it, should be moistened with molasses until it crumbles readily in the hand. This moisture should be kept on the ground during the early part of the season.

Worm. A small greenish worm three-quarters of an inch long, which appears quite early in the season. Dust with pyrethrum or hellebore powder when the plants have headed, or dust with a teaspoonful of paris green mixed with three tablespoonful of flour when young. A piece of burlap may be used for this purpose or an empty can with holes punched in the bottom.

Aphis, also called louse. Small greyish insects which multiply rapidly. They may appear at any time in the season. Spray forcibly with a solution made from steeping one pound of tobacco refuse in one gallon of water. This solution may be used on all plants on which Aphis are found.

CELERY. Blight. Black spots appear on the foliage followed by wilting of the plant and a soft root on the stock. Spray each week with a mixture of Bordeaux mixture covering the entire plant.

CUCUMBER. Striped Beetle. Black and yellow striped beetle which feeds ravenously on the tender leaves of the plant in the very early stage of growth. Dust leaves when wet with ashes or air-slaked lime.

Squash Bug. Dark brown bettle which sucks the juice from the plant. Hand pick and destroy. Found on the leaves.

MELONS. Cucumber insects usually attacks and may be destroyed as given above.

ONION. Onion Maggot. A white maggot similar to the cabbage root maggot. No effective means of control. Spread charcoal over the ground or try the corrosive sublimate solution as recommended above.

Blight. A violet color, patches appearing on the leaf of the onion. Some advise spraying with Bordeaux mixture from the time the onion plant is three inches high.

POTATO. Colorado Beetle or Potato Bug. Dust with paris green when the dew is still on the plant, or place a teaspoonful in a watering can of water and pour over the plant. If possible have the plant dusted with paris green before the bug appears.

Scab. Easily recognized by characteristic roughness of the skin. Immerse the uncut tuber just before planting in a solution of two fluid ounces of formalin with two gallons of water. Dry, cut, and plant.

Blight. Brown spots distributed over the leafy surface, usually found in July. If they are not prevented from growing, the whole plant will be destroyed. Spray once a week for four or five weeks with Bordeaux mixture from July 1st.

RADISH. Root Maggot. Use the same remedies as given for cabbage and onion maggot.

TOMATO. Tomato Worm or Horn Blower. A large worm which rapidly defoliates the plant. Hand pick and destroy.

Blight. Black spots appearing on the leaves which spread rapidly and cause the whole plant to die. Keep the plants growing vigorously.

Sudden Death

On Wednesday last while in her home death came suddenly to Mrs. Dan Black. She had been rather indisposed for a weeks, following an attack of grippe, but was able to take care of her regular duties. On Wednesday morning she was around as usual, when alone with her husband about 10 o'clock, the call came. Mrs Black was a patient woman. Amidst her trials and difficulties she presented always a bright countenance. Her place in life did not give to her much of luxury and ease, but her influence, her loyalty and her kindliness will be remembered. She was a member of the Presbyterian church, and served in a humble way her Lord and Master. Besides a feeble husband, she is survived by six sons. Of these Neil and Gourlay are in France, John is with the 220th Toronto battalion, Dan just recently discharged from the 160th, now a munitions inspector at Walkerville, Jacob and Hugh of Toronto.

The funeral took place on Friday. The casket was covered with beautiful flowers from many friends, as well as wreaths from the Ladies Aid and Missionary society of the Presbyterian church.

My Auto Tis of Thee

My auto 'tis of thee, short cut to poverty—of thee I chant. I blew a pile of dough on you two years ago, and now you refuse to go, won't or can't. Through town and countryside, you were my joy and pride; a happy day I loved the gaudy hue, thy nice white tires so new, but now you're down and through in every way. To thee, old rattle box, came many bumps and knocks; for thee I grieve. Badly thy top is torn, frayed are thy seats and worn; a whooping cough affects thy horn, I do believe.

Thy perfume swells the breeze, while good folks choke and wheeze as we pass by. I paid for thee a price, 'twould buy a mansion twice, now all are yelling "ice"—I wonder why? Thy motor has the grip, thy spark plug has the pip, and woe is thine. I too have suffered chills, ague and kindred ills, endeavoring to pay my bills since thou wert mine. Gone is my bank roll now, no more 'twould choke a cow, as once before. Yet if I had the mon, so help me John—amen, I'd buy a car again, and spend some more.—Ex.

Lieut. Northgrave Recovering

Lieut. W. D. Northgrave in a letter home says:

"I am getting along fine. They haven't moved me from France to England yet, but think they will shortly when my legs mend a little more. I am in a very fine hospital called the Duchess of Westminster, for officers only. It is on the coast. It was formerly a casino. The treatment is fine. I was moved to the veranda Sunday and enjoyed a band concert by the Australians.

The doctors operated and took out the shrapnel the other day, I am in no pain and get all sorts of nice things. I can not move at all yet, but that does not bother me, as I am so comfortable.

The weather is beautiful, and there are great windows along the whole side of the ward. This is a British hospital, and scarcely any Canadians here. On one side of me is a Gordon Highlander, and on the other a Royal Garrison Artillery officer, both dandy fellows.

Expect to be on my feet by first of June, and ready to go back to the fight once more.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

Tells how to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn or callus the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off with the fingers.

Freezone dries the moment it is applied, and simply shrivels the corn or callus without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but will positively rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or hardened callus. If your druggist hasn't any freezone he can get it at any wholesale drug house for you.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON IX.

May 27, 1917.

The Holy Spirit and His Work.—John 15:26—16:14.

Commentary.—I. The Holy Spirit witnesses to Christ (vs. 26, 27). 26. when the Comforter is come—This expression indicates that the Comforter was certainly coming. The Holy Spirit is called the Comforter, a name which is full of significance. The original word means to strengthen and has in it also the idea of companionship. The Holy Spirit comes to us, stands by us and gives us strength. whom I will send unto you from the Father—In this brief clause the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, the three persons of the Godhead, are named. The Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father and is sent by the Son. the Spirit of truth—He who declares the truth and guides into the truth. He brings truth home to the hearts of men. he shall testify of me—The world would hate and reject Christ, but the Holy Spirit would bear witness to the Messiahship of Jesus. He bore witness with the apostles by the truths he enabled them to declare, and by the miracles that were wrought by them in the name of Jesus. He bore witness also by the Scriptures he inspired them to write, and this witness is continuing now and will ever continue. 27. ye also shall bear witness—The mission of the apostles, after receiving the power of the Holy Spirit, was to witness to Jesus to all the world, commencing at Jerusalem. because ye have been with me—The apostles had been under the instruction of Jesus for three years. They were, therefore, prepared to be witnesses for the Master. from the beginning—From the commencement of Christ's public ministry.

II. Comfort in trial (vs. 1-6.) Jesus explains his purpose in telling his purpose in telling his disciples the things mentioned in this farewell discourse, especially about the hatred of the world toward him and them. He wished to forewarn them and prepare them for the difficulties they would have to face. They were to be on their guard so that they would not "be offended," or made to stumble, when persecution should arise. They would be put out of the synagogue, or excommunicated, by the Jews. This means that they would become social and ecclesiastical outcasts, having no right in common with the Jews. They would suffer greater persecution than this, for the zealous and fanatical hatred of the Jews toward the new religion would lead them to put the followers of Jesus to death. Jesus had told the disciples previously that they would be persecuted, but he had spoken so particularly regarding it, because he was with them to advise and comfort them. He was now about to leave them and they would experience sorrow of heart, but they would not be left uninstructed and uncomforted, for the Holy Spirit would be sent to them to remain with them always. His coming would meet all their spiritual needs.

III. Judges the world (vs. 7-11). 7. Nevertheless I tell you the truth—The solemnity of the affirmation arises from the fact that in their present state of mind the information was difficult to believe. Our Lord solemnly assures them that there is no contingency or mistake in the idea that his departure, however sorrowful, was necessary in itself, and best even for them.—Whedon. Jesus placed particular emphasis upon the great truth he was declaring. It is expedient for you that I go away—The best interests of the disciples, as well as the spread of Christ's kingdom on the earth, demanded that he should go to the Father. His wisdom perceived that truth, although theirs did not. His redemptive work would soon be completed, and the Holy Spirit would be given to carry into execution the plan of salvation. For if I go not away, etc.—Jesus gives the reason why it is expedient that he go away. His presence during his earthly ministry was local. He was in only one place at a time, but the Comforter would be everywhere present to minister to the needs of all who longed after God. 8. When he is come—The Holy Spirit. will reprove the world—He will bring [illegible] and conviction. He will let men know their moral and spiritual condition, and will show them what is required of them. The Holy Spirit brings deeper conviction to the heart than can be brought in any other way. 9. Of sin, because they believe not on me—Men must be convicted of sin in order that they must apply to God for salvation; for only as they see their sinful hearts and lives will they long for deliverance. The great sin of the world is its rejection of Jesus Christ. Unbelief effectually closes the door of salvation. "This is the source of sin, unbelief; formerly [illegible] in God, now unbelief in his Ambassador. Not that the sin is limited to unbelief, but this is the beginning [illegible] 'Because' does not explain [illegible] 'will convict.' The Spirit, by bringing the fact of unbelief home to the hearts of men shows what the nature of sin is."—Cam. Bib. 10. Of righteousness—Righteousness [illegible] keeping the law, but it means more than the keeping of the law outward[illegible]. It means the conformity of the nature and life to the will of God. The spirit first convicts of sin and then points out the Divine requirements which are laid upon man. Because I go to my Father—Jesus had been the pattern of righteousness and his teachings showed what it was to be righteous. He was about to go away to the Father, and the Spirit would continue the work that he had begun. He would write on the hearts of men what sort of character and life they must have. Ye see me no more—Very naturally this would be an occasion of sadness to the disciples, but they were to be comforted and sustained by the Holy Spirit. Jesus would not be to them an object of sight, but of faith. 11. Of judgment—The world would be convicted with respect of judgment by the Spirit. The world's standards of sin and righteousness were wrong, as was also its standard of judgment. It was faulty in its discrimination between right and wrong. Because the Prince of this world is judged—Satan is the prince of this world. "The Advocate convicts the world of its error in this point also. The world might think that the power of darkness conquered at Gethsemane and Calvary, but the resurrection and ascension proved that what looked like victory was most signal defeat; instead of conquering he was judged. This result is so certain that from the view of the Spirit's coming it is spoken of as already accomplished."—Cam. Bib.

IV. Reveals the truth (vs. 12-14). 12. I have yet many things—Jesus had given much instruction to his disciples during the years of their association with him. He had explained the nature of his kingdom and the conditions upon which men might enter it. He had told them to some extent the relation of the gospel to the Mosaic system of religion. He had not as yet, told them in full about his sufferings, death, resurrection and ascension. He had told them all that it was then necessary for them to know. What he had yet to tell them they were not prepared to comprehend. cannot bear them now. Truth is imparted as we are able to receive it. Jesus knew the capacity of his disciples to comprehend and bear the truths of the gospel, and he would not confuse or burden them with those that were too deep for them. What they could not bear at that time, they could not profitably receive when the Holy Spirit was given in his fullness. 13. the Spirit of Truth—One of the offices of the Holy Spirit is to impart the truth. He would declare to the disciples the truths which Jesus saw they were not prepared to receive from him. shall not speak for himself (R. V.)—The Spirit does not speak for himself apart from the Father, who is the source of all truth. he will shew you things to come—The Spirit would bring to the remembrance of the disciples the things that Jesus had said to them, would declare truth regarding their duty and privilege and would disclose truths pertaining to the future of the church and pertaining to the general judgment, the punishment of the wicked, and the glorification of the saints. 14. he shall glorify me—The Holy Spirit would dwell upon the nature and mission of Jesus, and would apply the benefits of the atonement to all who earnestly desired to be saved. Jesus is glorified in every one who accepts salvation through the atonement he made. He is glorified by a holy life and a positive testimony.

Questions.—Upon what grounds would the world hate the followers of Jesus? What is the significance of the name Comforter as applied to the Holy Spirit? Who were to be witnesses of Jesus to the world? What did Jesus tell his disciples about persecution? Why was it expedient that Jesus should go away? What are the several offices of the Spirit? How would the Holy Spirit glorify Jesus?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Christian perfection.

I. Subsequent to Christ's atoning work.

II. Spiritual qualification for service.

I. Subsequent to Christ's atoning work. It was a mark of Christ's wisdom and tenderness to adapt his lessons to the growing capacity of his disciples. He had been speaking to a world hostile to himself and to his followers. Having spoken of the guilt of the persecutors, Jesus referred to the sufferings of his disciples. He mentioned two ways in which his apostles should experience the hostility of an unbelieving world, by ecclesiastical censure and by excommunication. They were given the assurance that however great their approaching trials might be and though Jesus himself was about to depart from them, One should come from his father, who would be all sufficient for their help, a Witness commissioned by Christ to testify of him. They could not comprehend his sayings, either in their relation to him or to themselves. His departure was felt to be a most grievous trial. There was but one thing that could enable the disciples to bear the prospect of separation, and that was the descent of the Comforter, through whom should come the unfolding of Christianity in its spiritual power. The mission of the Holy Spirit was essential to the great plan of redemption, to present all the facts in a clearer light, illuminating the soul, mind, intellect, heart and conscience. How essential the Holy Spirit was to them and to the interests of the kingdom, all their subsequent history shows. By this cross and passion, by his sufferings and death, was Christ's kingdom to be set up and his throne established. As soon as the hour had struck when he would be accepted as the great substitute, it would surely have availed nothing to defer the hour of his triumphant return to God. It was expedient that Christ should go away, for his death was his work. His departure was to aid in the apprehension of his true character and nature. The hope his disciples had held of [illegible] retaining of earthly [illegible] their Lord and the restoration of an earthly kingdom to his chosen people, must hence forth give place to a higher and better hope.

II. Spiritual qualification for service. With simplicity and de[illegible] Jesus defined the functions of the Holy Spirit. He spoke of the ministry of the Spirit in relation to himself and his disciples. They, as yet, knew only the foundation truth of the unity of the Godhead. The process of the Spirit's action in regenerating the world formed Christ's own history of the silent progress of the spiritual life, the first step in the divine life being a sense of sin. The office of the Spirit is to teach mankind what sin is, a work which no earthly power can accomplish, and therefore Jesus mercifully sent the Comforter to produce such conviction in the human heart. The great end and design of the gospel required that conviction should be wrought by the Holy Spirit. The necessity of this conviction arises out of the fact that the gospel is a plan for the salvation of sinners. The work of conviction as to sin, righteousness and judgment, all goes on together. Unbelief found its climax in the rejection of Jesus Christ. It was the sin of the Jews. They withstood all the evidence of Christ's remarkable life, His remarkable discourses, and His remarkable miracles. They regarded their religion as perfect, capable of no addition and no improvement. Though Jesus ascribed their behavior to ignorance, he did not say they were responsible for it. He dealt with the deep, ancient and malignant cause of all human failure. The apostate Jewish church represented the world. They did did not like to hear about the mediation of Jesus Christ or the work of the Holy Spirit. Their rejection of Jesus was virtually the act of the race. All the enmity against God which their hearts had harbored, was concentrated in a single act. Just as sin is revealed by the Spirit to be something far different from the outward fulfilment of ceremonial or moral observances. The great aim with Jesus was to make clear the spiritual union between Himself and His disciples.

GROW CORN AND REDUCE THE FEED BILL

At Present Prices for Feed Corn Silage is Worth $5.60 Per Ton—Help to Get a Bumper Crop by Using Tested Seed—Best Varieties to Use in Your Locality.

"Can you tell us whether it is going to be a good year?" We have had several inquiries of this nature come to the office during the winter months. No one can tell definitely whether it is going to be a good corn year, as it depends chiefly on getting rain and heat at the proper time.

Corn converts are being made all the time. When farmers see what a lot of first-class succulent feed corn provides when it is put into the silo, they cannot help being convinced of its value. Roots have a very important place, and rightly so, in the stock menu, but as silage corn can be grown so much cheaper per ton, it would be well for those who have grown nothing but roots to seriously consider whether it would not pay them to put in a few acres of corn this year.

Silage is preeminently a cattle feed but it can be profitably used for sheep and even for horses. With present prices for feed stuffs a ton of good silage is worth about $4 for the food nutrients it contains. On account of its succulency, however, silage makes the other food better digested, and it has been found that cows will give more milk when fed silage than if they were fed the same amount of nutrients in the dry form as hay or dried fodder corn, so that $4 per ton does not represent the full value of silage. From the average of a large number of experiments that have been carried on in the United States we may reckon that one ton of silage will increase the milk flow of the cows to which it is fed by at least 80 pounds. Reckoning the value of milk at $2 per hundred, or 2 cents per pound, we see that we must add $1.60 to the $4 to get the true feeding value of one ton of silage. This gives $5.60.

The cost of producing one ton of silage will vary, of course, with the cost of labor and the yield of the crop. When on account of good climatic conditions the corn crop is a good one, the cost of producing a ton of silage may be as low as $1.25, while another year, when the crop is a poor one, the cost of production may run as high as $3 per ton. Under average conditions it will cost about $20 to put one acre of corn in the silo. An acre of corn will yield from 10 to 20 tons of silage. Taking 15 tons as an average, the cost of one ton would be $1.33. In this calculation the rent of the land or the cost of the barnyard manure or artificial fertilizers used has not been considered. Corn is a heat-loving plant and thrives best in southern climates. Under the most favorable conditions the corn plant produces a large leafy stalk and ears with deep kernels. Corn of this type yields heavily, but would not mature early enough to be grown in our northern climate. By careful breeding and selection, however, varieties of corn have been produced with a shallower kernel, which, although they do not yield quite as well, mature sufficiently early to be grown successfully practically all over Canada. In the southern part of Ontario the Dent varieties of corn are grown largely. These varieties are heavy yielders, but somewhat late in maturing. The Flint varieties of corn mature earlier, as a rule, than the Dent varieties, so that they are usually grown in the more northerly sections.

In choosing a variety of corn it is evident that it is necessary to select one that is suited to the locality, but one that at the same time will give a large yield. In this connection the experiments that have been conducted by the Ontario Agricultural College are very instructive. In the table a summary of these experiments is given. Seven terms have been used to describe the condition of the corn as regards its ripeness when harvested, as follows: water, early milk, late milk, milk, dough, firm dough, and ripe. Suppose a man were growing Wisconsin No. 8 and wanted to get a variety that would yield more heavily, but would mature at the same time. From the table it is seen that Wisconsin No. 8, was in the dough stage when harvested. Salzer's North Dakota was in the same stage when harvested, but yielded 18.97 tons per acre against 13.84 by the Wisconsin variety. Salzer's North Dakota could safely be grown instead of Wisconsin No. 8.

GREAT DIFFERENCE IN STRAINS

Not only is there a great difference in the yield of the different varieties but there is a difference in the yields of the same variety obtained from various sources. Thus, take for example, White Cap Yellow Dent. The strain obtained from one source (H. Smith) took 89 days until it was in full tassel, and yielded 16.37 tons of green fodder per year. Another strain obtained from J. Hammond took only 81 days until it was in full tassel, but only yielded 12.12 tons of green fodder per acre. For best results therefore, not only must one know the variety of the seed, but something about its source.

It is useless growing an early maturing variety or strain of corn which will give a light yield of fodder when a later maturing one that will give a heavy yield can be grown equally well. South of the 43rd parallel of latitude, which runs almost through Sarnia, London and Welland, practically all the Dent varieties of corn will mature, the later ones in Essex and Kent, the earlier varieties as we approach the northern limit. Between the 43rd and 44th parallels of latitude the earlier types of Dent corn are mostly grown. Between the 44th and 45th parallels of latitude only the very early varieties of Dent corn are grown, and these are grown chiefly for silage. In this zone such varieties of Flint corn as Longfellow, Salzer's North Dakota and Compton's Early are grown very largely for grain, while the Dents are grown for fodder. In the zone which lies between the 45th and 46th parallels of latitude only the very earliest varieties of Flint corn can be relied on to produce mature corn. For silage, however, the later maturing, heavier yielding varieties of corn may be grown.

Seed corn should never be bought shelled, but on the cob. Only in this way can one be sure of getting seed of strong vitality with good germinating qualities. The type of ear selected for seed should be true to type. It should be almost cylindrical but slope slightly towards the tip. Both tips and butts should be well covered. The kernels should be deep and full. The deeper the kernel the longer the corn is in reaching maturity, so that care must be taken if the kernels are especially deep that the corn is of a variety or strain that will mature in the locality where it is to be grown. This is more important where it is grown for the grain than if the crop is to be put into the silo. The kernels should be close together, even and in straight rows. If the ear of corn that was harvested when immature, it will germinate all right but the plants will be weak and a Now place a piece of cloth on top poor crop will be the result. Corn that is immature can be told by the ease with which the ear may be twisted in the hands.

After the best ears have been selected, these should be laid to one side and tested for germination. In making the germination test 6 kernels should be taken from each ear, two from the tip, two from the middle and two from the butt. The kernels may be germinated in earth, sand or sawdust—any material in fact that can be kept moist and yet allow of sufficient air getting to the kernels. Make a box about 30 inches square and four inches deep. Fill it with moist, sandy soil, sand or sawdust, and level off the surface. Take a piece of cloth and rule it off into squares like a checker board, making the squares 2 1-2 inches each way. Place this cloth on top of the soil, sand or sawdust or whatever material has been used. Take six kernels from each ear and place each group in one square. Have a system of numbering the ears of corn and the squares so that when the test has been made one can tell which kernels belonged to which ear of corn. of the kernels and moisten it with some water. Place on top of this a cloth that is considerably larger than the box and fill in on top with some moist soil, sand or sawdust to a depth of about two inches. Now turn the ends of the cloth over the top of the box and put the box away. The temperature of the room where the box is kept should be about that of the living room. In six or eight days the grain should have sprouted. Discard all ears whose kernels have not germinated well. So as to ensure even planting it is good practice to remove the kernels from the tips and butts from the ears that are to be used for seed, and plant only the kernels from the middle of the ear.

There is little use planting corn until the soil has become thoroughly warmed up, but on the other hand it should not be planted too late. From the middle to the end of May is about the right time to plant it in most sections of Ontario, although sometimes on account of weather conditions it has to be planted [illegible] having the plants [illegible] inches apart in the rows. [illegible] it is better to plant the corn in hills, dropping three to [illegible] kernels in the hill. When the corn is planted in rows the rows should be 3 feet 6 inches apart, but if it is planted in hills 3 feet apart each way is usual. For planting in rows there are special corn planting machines, but an ordinary grain drill may be used by stopping up some of the tubes. For planting the corn in hills special machinery may be used, or it will be necessary to mark off the land both ways. A marker may be [illegible] to mark [illegible] rows at a time [illegible] planted at the [illegible].

Wherever possible the corn should be planted on clover sod. The sod should be plowed early in the fall previous. The following spring the land should be [illegible] thoroughly disced and harrowed and worked up into a [illegible]. Corn responds well to barnyard manure and [illegible] is not too much to apply. [illegible] A weeder or light harrow may be [illegible] the young corn.—The Canadian Countryman.

In growing corn for silage it is necessary to select a variety that will yield heavily, but at the same time will mature early enough to ensure quality. The above table gives the results of five years' experiments carried on at the Ontario Agricultural College, and will help our readers to decide which varieties are best under their conditions.

STUCK IN THE MUD.

Then He Discovered the Magic Power of the Water Jet.

The water jet has been used for so many years in putting down and pulling piling that its discovery has long since been lost sight of. It was used during the civil war and for many years previous by government engineers.

Tradition has it that the discoverer of the advantages of the water jet was a government engineer and that his discovery was made in the following manner: It seems that along in the forties this engineer was building a wharf and was having unusual difficulty in putting down his piling. One day in wading around his boots became stuck in a tenacious mud, and he found it impossible to pull them out. There happened to be a hose near by, and one of the men handed it to the officer, the idea being that he would wash the mud away from his boots. The water was turned on, and the officer applied a stream to his feet.

To his surprise he sank deeper. He tried it again and went down still farther in the mud. He was soon in mud up to his waist and still going down. Astonished by his discovery, he continued to apply the stream, [illegible] but he might be going down yet had not his men come to the rescue and pulled him out by means of a small hand derrick.

Once he started he began to think the matter out. If a stream of water applied to a man's feet will cause him to sink deeper in the mud, why wouldn't it have the same effect if applied to the base of a pile? He tried it, and the pile which had obstinately refused to go down before sank easily to place, and in that way, so runs the story, was discovered the use of the water jet for putting down piling.

"Wonderful time that aviator made." "Yes," replied Mr. Chuggins. "But think of the advantage he had. Not a traffic policeman on the entire route."—Washington Star.

A PUZZLING CASE

"Madame told me that a black carnation existed, and that she was afraid to receive one. She did not tell me the reason; I did not know it was a message of death. I knew her father [illegible] this Maxwell, who had this black carnation in his possession, and all of this I told to M. Dallas. He came back from Paris many days before madame appeared at the theatre—he told me in Italy he loved me, and that he loved me now. I, like a fool, believed him, and told him all. Then he assured me that he hated madame, who had treated him badly; and when I told him how afraid she was of receiving a black carnation, he determined to send her one. I informed him where the black carnation was to be found."

"Don't you think it was very cruel of you thus to treat your mistress?"

"I never thought of my mistress," she responded, recklessly. "I only did what he desired. I knew no law but his, and, fool that I am, I have been punished for my folly. He told me that his only reason for sending the black carnation to madame was to make her fear."

"A feeble excuse. Surely you did not believe him?"

"Why should I not, monsieur? I knew not that he loved her so dear, and also there was no harm in sending madame the flower. It would cause her fear, but do her no harm. Fear, ah! what foolishness!"

"Well, he sent the black carnation?"

"Yes. He told me so, and I gave madame the letter when it arrived. It was from Paris, and contained that black flower. I could not understand that coming from France, and thought M. Dallas had returned to Paris; but, no, I saw him the same day. It was a lie, that letter—he had sent it to his servant to post from Paris."

"Did he ask you to keep silent about his being in London?"

"He did, monsieur, and I held my peace. I told him all. He pretended to be jealous of M. Gilbert and myself, but I said, 'No, this milord loves madame, he is with her always, he gives her flowers,' and then I showed him the shop where the flowers came from."

"And Sir Gilbert's bouquet?"

"Ah, yes, I knew of that. M. Dallas told me how he had gone to the shop and asked to have a bouquet the same as Sir Gilbert's. He said the bouquet was for me, so as to be equal to madame. He brought it to the hotel after madame had gone to the theatre. We were talking—we heard the voice of Sir Gilbert. He came in, yes, but M. Dallas hid himself."

"Where?"

"In the same room as Sir Gilbert, who was drinking coffee. The flowers of Sir Gilbert were on a table near the curtain. I was in the next room, but I saw all—yes, all, and I will tell."

"What did you see?" I asked, much excited.

Ilma Celinski placed her fingers on her lips.

"I saw M. Dallas put out his hand, when was turned Sir Gilbert's back, and change the bouquets—yes, change the flowers."

"How could he do that when Sir Gilbert was in the room?"

"You do not understand, monsieur," she replied, impatiently. "The table was near the window, and M. Dallas was hiding behind the curtain. In front of him were the flowers of Sir Gilbert, so what did he do but stretch out his hand with the bouquet and leave it on the table, taking away Sir Gilbert's instead."

"And you said nothing?"

"Nothing. I did not know there was danger in the bouquet. Sir Gilbert, he took up the flowers of M. Dallas, thinking they were his own, and went away. Then M. Dallas came out, and when I asked him why he changed the flowers, he laughed, and said it was a trick for laughter."

"Then he gave you the bouquet left by Sir Gilbert."

"He gave me no flowers," said the Pole, in an angry tone, "see, this was it, monsieur: I was late to go to the theatre, and M. Dallas said he would put me in a fiacre. I go away from the room first, and leave my flowers behind, he came also with me, and had his cloak over his arm. I did not know then, but I know now that my flowers were under that cloak. I did not see them; he puts me in a fiacre, says au revoir, and then I go, while he, [illegible], takes the flowers he gives to me, to madame at the theatre."

"What kind of flowers were they that he brought to the hotel?"

"The same as those of Sir Gilbert—white with a black one in the centre."

"A Black Carnation?"

"I cannot tell; it was black."

"Try and recollect; this evidence is very important."

"I cannot say, Monsieur. I was busy; I had the flowers but a moment."

"If that second bouquet had a Black Carnation in the centre, it was the one which killed Mazzucata."

"Yes, but I do not know if it was the Black Carnation. Oh, yes, it might have been; but why should he bring me flowers to kill me?"

"He didn't wish to kill you, but madame."

"And for why?"

"Because he loved her, and could not bear to see her marry Sir Gilbert."

"Oh, I have been a fool," she said, throwing up her arms in despair, "I see now he did not love me. But I will make him suffer."

"It would serve him right. He has made others suffer. Why did you tell all those lies in court, about Sir Gilbert stealing the Black Carnation?"

"Because Mr. Dallas said he would marry me if I did so."

"Oh!" I cried, revolted at this callous behavior, "would you have condemned an innocent man to death on so slight a cause. Shame!"

"I did not want him to die," answered Ilma, doggedly; "but I wished to marry M. Dallas. I warned Sir Gilbert to go away, but he would not."

"You are little better than a murderess."

"I am what I am," she returned, defiantly. "I was good once, but now—oh, I will make him suffer. He never loved me—he loved madame, and now it is her sister."

"I am not sure if he loves the sister."

"It is a lie. You said it was so."

"Pardon me, I said I thought so, but I did not swear to it."

"Oh! old false one, you have deceived me. Perhaps he does love me after all."

"No, I'm sure he does not."

"And I have destroyed him with my tongue," she said, not heeding my speech, "but no matter, I will go down to this sister and ask her, 'Does he love you?' If she says 'yes,' I will tell all that I have said to the justice, but if she says 'no,' I will swear that I spoke nothing of the changing of the flowers."

"And thus condemn Sir Gilbert to death?"

"No, no, but what is that to me. I will marry M. Dallas."

"A murderer."

"He is not a murderer. He did not change the flowers. He loves me, what I have said is lies—all lies."

"What you have said is the truth," I replied, sharply, rising to my feet, "and I will tell it to my lawyer."

"I will deny it."

"Quite useless, Mademoiselle Celinski; you have confessed in the presence of two witnesses."

"Two witnesses!" she gasped, falling back a step.

"Pointer."

He appeared at the door of the bedroom.

"Did you hear what this lady said?"

"Every word, sir."

"You can swear to it?"

"I can swear to it, sir."

Ilma Celinski looked from one to the other, in a quietly vindictive manner, and then addressed herself to me.

"You have tricked me, monsieur. You are a brave man. I make you my compliments, but I will go to this girl, and if he loves her not, I will swear that I told you lies to-night. If he hates me, you can kill him. If he loves me, I will save him."

And without another word, she turned and left the room.

CHAPTER XIV.

It can easily be imagined that after two such exciting interviews I had but little sleep that night, and arose next morning earlier than was my custom. Every second of those dragging hours of darkness my thoughts were busy with that weary case, and, though I looked at the affair from every imaginable point of view, I was unable to arrive at any conclusion respecting the solution of the problem. Towards dawn, worn out with incessant thought, I fell into an uneasy slumber, from whence I awoke about 8 o'clock, feeling jaded and unrefreshed.

When I caught sight of my face in the glass, I positively started, so haggard did I look, and when Pointer entered with my shaving water he was unable to refrain from an exclamation of surprise. Usually Pointer knows his place and makes no remark unless directly addressed, therefore, I knew that my appearance must be singularly careworn to thus provoke uncalled-for condolences from my ordinarily reticent servant.

"I am afraid you have not slept, sir."

"No, Pointer, I have been thinking over this confounded case."

"It is a pity sir, you saw that young person last night."

"So far as my rest is concerned—yes; but as regards the case, I am glad I interviewed her, as her evidence will be of great value."

"I hope it will go a long way to releasing Sir Gilbert, sir."

"I am sure there will be little difficulty now, in proving his innocence. But the question is—Who is the guilty person?"

"If I may make so bold, sir——"

"Well, what is it, Pointer?" I replied in an encouraging tone of voice. "What is your opinion?"

"After what Dabsworth told me, sir, and after the story of that young person last night, I think Mr. Dallas is the guilty party."

"Ah! is that your conviction, Pointer?"

"My firm conviction, sir. I don't see that it can be anyone else."

"I have my doubts about Mr. Dallas, myself, Pointer; but I can't be sure. However, when I am dressed, I will call on Mr. Tancred, and tell him about this woman. By the way, Pointer, you need not mention her visit."

"By no means, sir."

So anxious was I to hear Tancred's opinion about the matter that it did not take me long to finish dressing; a most remarkable thing for me, as I usually dawdle about my bedroom for at least an hour. However this matter was too important to admit of delay, so, having hastily swallowed breakfast — another extraordinary thing for me to do—I went at once to the Temple, in search of Tancred.

What with dressing hurriedly and eating quickly, I felt most uncomfortable; and thus realizing—that this detective fever was undermining my health, I made a solemn vow to myself that if the case were not concluded speedily, I would throw it up and go abroad for a time. Either at Monte Carlo or San Remo I should be sufficiently distracted to forget this foolish desire to unravel this mystery. I would return cured, and able to take up the pleasant calm life of the days before this terrible criminal case had upset my existence.

Tancred was out when I arrived at his rooms. This hardly astonished me, for when anyone is in a hurry Fate generally throws all kinds of obstacles in his way, both to delay his aim and try his temper. Mine was bad enough already, so I accepted the absence of Tancred with resigned despair, and sat down to read the Times. Generally, I enjoy that paper, but this morning I could not keep my attention fixed enough to even read it; so, throwing it on one side, I was about to go out and take a walk when Tancred entered with such a joyous look on his face, that my ill temper vanished like mist before the sun.

"What! Major Granby," he said, shaking my hand, "I am glad to see you, major. I have much to tell you."

"And I have very serious news to tell you."

"Eh, major. Have you found out who committed the crime? Another theory, major?"

"No; but I have had an interview with Ilma Celinski."

"What, the waiting maid? Did you pay her a visit?"

"On the contrary; she paid me a visit—at midnight."

"Major! major!"

"Oh, Pointer was there in the next room; and I was very glad, as he overheard her evidence, and is prepared to swear to it."

"Did she confess to those lies she told in the court?"

"Yes; and she confessed a good deal more. Listen, Tancred; I am going to astonish you."

"Good, I like being astonished. Where is my pipe? Ah, here it is. Now, Major Granby, I am your most obedient servant."

Seeing he was thus disposed to listen, I narrated, at great length, the conversation of the previous night with Ilma Celinski. Tancred was very attentive, though he frequently interrupted me with exclamations of surprise. When I finished my story he rose to his feet and walked to and fro for some moments in deep thought, then resumed his seat with a dissatisfied frown on his face.

"That woman is such a liar that I don't know whether to believe her or not."

"I am sure she speaks the truth in this case."

"Oh, I have no doubt that she is in love with Dallas, and that he deceived her. Also, that story of the changing of the bouquets is perfectly true, but she has not told you everything."

"What else is there to tell?"

"I wish to know if that bouquet of Dallas, which she said he presented to her, contained the dynamite cartridge. It is a lie she is telling about the flowers, I am sure, for Dallas had no reason to give her that fatal bunch of flowers. No, he meant it for Mazzucata!"

"Doubtless; but very likely, knowing the temper of this Ilma Celinski, he was afraid to say so, and all the time pretended that the bouquet was for her, although he meant it for Madame Mazzucata."

"Well, there is only one way to prove the truth of the story, and that is to see Dallas at once."

"But he is at Lippinton."

"No, he isn't, major. I have no doubt in order to be rid of this girl, he lets her think he is at Lippinton, but in reality he is in town."

"How do you know?"

"Because I have seen him this morning."

"Seen Dallas!"

"Yes. After our interview with Ivan, yesterday, I wished to see what attitude Dallas was taking up, and so called at his rooms an hour ago."

"Did you speak to him personally?"

"Yes, but only for a moment, as he was not yet up. However, he promised to come here at once and have a conversation over the matter."

I rose to my feet with an ejaculation of rage.

"What is the matter, major?" asked Tancred, calmly.

"Don't you see that you have put him on his guard. He will not come here."

"Oh, yes, he will, if he is innocent."

"But I think he is guilty, and now that he knows you wish to see him, he will suspect something and run away."

"Don't be alarmed, major, he won't run far. I have a detective watching his chambers, and he cannot move a yard without being followed."

"Well, supposing he does come here, do you think that will prove his innocence."

"I don't go so far as that," replied Tancred, quickly, "but it will be strong presumptive evidence that he is not guilty."

"Or that he is on his guard, and knows he can baffle justice."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, Tancred, I don't think my meaning is hard to guess. As I told you, when Ilma found that I had deceived her in the matter of Dallas being in love with Mazzucata's sister, she withdrew all her previous statements."

"That does not matter. Her evidence was overheard by two witnesses, yourself and Pointer."

"Yes! yes! that is all right; but she said she would warn Dallas of the mistake she had made."

"She won't warn Dallas until she is satisfied he loves no one but her," responded Tancred, coolly, "and that she can't make sure of until she has a personal interview with Miss Maxwell, in which case, she will have to go to Lippinton, therefore, up till now, she cannot have called on Dallas."

"But, supposing she called at his chambers before she went to Lippinton and told him all. That would put him on his guard, and he will come here with a prepared conversation and line of defence."

"If he comes here to tell lies, I think I can prove their falsity. But as to this woman calling on him, she won't do that for two reasons. The first being that she wishes to see Miss Maxwell and know the truth; the second that she thinks Dallas is at Lippinton, as she told you last night. So, my dear major, you need have no fear that Dallas knows of that midnight visit, for by this time, Ilma Celinski is on her way to Lippinton to kill two birds with one stone, by seeing Miss Maxwell and Dallas at once."

"When she doesn't find Dallas there, she will come back to town and warn him."

"She can't; for Dallas will be here shortly, and we shall know all he has to tell before Ilma Celinski returns. Besides, when she is at Lippinton she will fall into the clutches of Melchizedek."

"He doesn't know her."

"Oh, yes, he does. He was in court and heard her evidence, which I proved to him to be a tissue of lies. When he sees her at Lippinton, he will suspect her intentions, and watch her. If he overhears her conversation with Miss Maxwell, as he assuredly will do, I wouldn't be surprised if he found out the truth without further trouble."

"Do you think Ilma Celinski knows the truth?"

"Either she or Miss Maxwell."

"Why Miss Maxwell?"

"Because I distrust Miss Maxwell. I want to know several things about Miss Maxwell."

"Such as——"

"Why was she so anxious [illegible] the [illegible] of the Black Carnation? What [illegible] she know about that particular flower? Tell me her reason [illegible] wanting so much to know."

"But, surely, Tancred, you don't suspect this poor [illegible]?"

"I don't know what to suspect. [illegible] some miracle [illegible] the truth, I do not see [illegible] to discover the real criminal."

"But, Tancred, you don't think Gilbert Tressinger will [illegible]."

CARE OF THE SETTING HEN.

The setting hen, which is used most generally for incubation purposes, should receive care and attention during the process of hatching eggs. To a great extent the care given a setting hen plays an important part on the number and condition of the chicks when hatched.

If several hens are setting in the same room see that they are kept on the nest, allowing them to come off only once a day to receive food and water, the feed to consist of corn, wheat or both. If there are any that do not desire to come off, [illegible]. Hens usually return to their nests before there is any danger of the eggs chilling, but if they do not go back in half an hour in ordinary weather they should be put on the nest. Where a large number of setters are kept in one room it is advisable to let them off in groups of from four to six at a time. The eggs and nests should be examined and washing those that are soiled; in the latter case the soiled nesting material should be removed and clean straw added. Nests containing broken eggs that the hen is allowed to set on soon become infected with mites and lice, which cause the hens to become uneasy and leave the nest, often causing the loss of valuable settings of eggs. In mite-infested nests the hen, if fastened in, will often be found standing over rather than sitting on the eggs. Many eggs that are laid in the late winter and early spring are infertile. For this reason it is advisable to set several hens at the same time. After the eggs have been under the hens from five to seven days, the time depending somewhat on the color and thickness of the shells—white shelled eggs being easier to test than those having brown shells—they should be tested, the infertile eggs and dead germs removed and the fertile eggs put back under the hen. In this way it is often possible to put all the eggs that several hens originally started to set on under fewer hens and reset the others. For example, thirty eggs are set under three hens at the same time—ten under each. At the end of the seven days, on testing the eggs from all the hens, suppose that ten are infertile, leaving twenty eggs to reset, which is done by putting them under two hens, and having the remaining hen set over again after she has set only seven days. In this way considerable time can be saved in hatching operations.

TESTING EGGS FOR FERTILITY.

An egg, whether impregnated or not, has a small grayish spot on the surface of the yolk known as the "germinal spot." As soon as a fertile egg is placed under a hen, or in an incubator, development begins. All eggs should be tested at least twice during the period of incubation, preferably on the seventh and fourteenth days, and the infertile eggs and the dead germs removed. White eggs can be tested on the fourth or fifth day, while the development in eggs having brown shells cannot be seen by the use of the ordinary egg tester until the seventh day. Dead germs soon decay and give off a bad odor if allowed to remain under the hen. Infertile eggs make good feed for young chickens. Most incubator companies furnish testing chimneys with their machines which will fit ordinary lamps. Electric or gas lamps may be used in a box with a hole slightly smaller than an egg cut in the side of the box and at the same level as the light. They may also be tested by sunlight, or daylight, using a shutter or curtain with a small hole in it for the light to shine through.

The United States Department of Agriculture recommends a home-made egg tester, or candler, made with a large shoe box, or any box that is large enough to go over a lamp, by removing the end and cutting a hole a little larger than the size of a quarter in the bottom of the box, so that when it is set over a kerosene lamp the hole in the bottom will be opposite the blaze. A hole the size of a silver dollar should be cut in the top of the box to allow the heat to escape.

The eggs are tested with the large end up, so that the size of the air cell may be seen as well as the condition of the embryo. The testing should take place in a dark room. The infertile egg when held before the small hole with the lamp lighted inside the box will look perfectly clear, the same as a fresh egg, while a fertile egg will show a small dark spot known as the embryo, with a mass of little blood veins extending in all directions, if the embryo is living. If dead, and the egg has been incubated for at least forty-six hours, the blood settles away from the embryo toward the edge of the yolk, forming in some cases an irregular circle of blood, known as a "blood ring." Eggs vary in this respect, some showing only a streak of blood. All infertile eggs should be removed at the first test. The eggs containing strong, living embryos are dark and well filled up on the fourteenth day and show a clear, sharp, distinct line of demarcation between the air cell and the growing embryo, while dead germs show only partial development and have no clear, distinct outline.

The members of the Soldiers' Friend club had the Red Cross tea rooms on Saturday. They went to a good deal of trouble in decorating and cleaning up, and but for the wet afternoon they would have had a big crowd. However as it was they did well, and many persons patronized them. In the evening they served ice cream and cake. The proceeds amounted to $65.86. Ex Warden McCannel and J. C. Munro were lucky in winning the oats, while Mrs. Busby drew the potatoes.

Jamie Johnson narrowly escaped severe injuries on Thursday evening while in the doorway of the Chevrolet garage. Mr. Gideon Eby was coming in with his car, when the lad was backing out, and a collision occurred in which Jamie was knocked under the car. The only injuries he received were from the milk bottle which he carried, and which was broken, cutting his hand. It was a narrow escape. The Times in conversation with Dr. Power, one of the proprietors of the garage, said he had warned all boys from hanging around the garage, and repeatedly ordered loiterers out of the place, but the boys persisted in being near the doorway. "Where cars are coming in and out all the time, the doorway is a dangerous place for lads, and parents should warn their children about being at the garage," said the Doctor.

In the death of Mrs. H. A. Havill, which took place at her home here about 7 o'clock on Saturday evening last, an early settler of town is removed from the scene and a highly esteemed lady passes to her reward. As President of the Walkerton Humane Society since its inception fifteen years ago she exerted a great influence for good locally towards the prevention of cruelty to dumb animals. She was a woman of imposing personality, being one of the tallest and biggest women in the county and a lady of generous impulses and wide knowledge. Born in Montreal about 70 years ago, the deceased, whose maiden was Mary Lavrock, came with her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. James Lavrock, to Port Elgin, where she was married in July, 1872, to Mr. H. A. Havill, who about two months previous had left Port Elgin to take over a stove and tinware business in Walkerton, which he successfully conducted for upwards of thirty-seven years. Few people are now residing in Walkerton who were in town when Mrs. Havill came as a young bride to take up residence here forty-five years ago. With the exception of six years, from 1884 to 1900, which she and her husband spent in Toronto, the deceased has been a citizen of this town ever since.—Walkerton Herald. Messrs. William and Duncan Falconer, of Port Elgin, nephews of deceased, attended the funeral.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

The late Mrs. McTaggart, whose maiden name was Isabella Biggar, came with her people to this country about 60 years ago. Her father was engaged doing engineer work in different parts of Europe before settling in Bruce. She was a sister of late Col. Biggar, M.P.P. Two of the family, James, in Texas and Margaret in Port Elgin survive her. Fifty years ago she was married to John McTaggart and resided on the McTaggart farm continually since then. Her husband predeceased her some ten years ago. To them were born five sons and two daughters. Home ties were very dear to her and the respect and prosperity which have attended all her large family is evidence of careful and loving training while under the home roof.

The funeral took place on Friday to Port Elgin cemetery, a large number from the surrounding districts attending the service at the house, which was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Mann, Port Elgin. Deceased had reached the age of 71 years, and had been in precarious health for some time. The old farm home which held the kind mother was always a source of attraction to the boys who had gone from it, and made homes of their own in distant parts.

All of the family except Rev. Alex. of Calgary, were able to be present to take part in the last sad rites. Donald from Calgary, John from Edmonton, James from Moosejaw, Mrs. A. Miller, Saugeen Margaret and Walter at home.

Rev. McIntosh preached last Sunday. Rev. Ferguson next two Sundays.

Mr. Cobean is some better. His daughter Mrs. Piper, of Michigan is visiting at home.

The Messrs. McTaggart have returned to their homes after attending the funeral of their mother. Their railway duties were pressing. They say there is any amount of wheat in the west and in Ontario, too, piles of it in warehouses that dealers can't get a bid for. Large milling companies who have a full stock of wheat fix the price to suit their pockets, it is alleged.

Wounded and Gassed

Pte. Neil Cassidy, in a letter to his cousin, Chrissie Cassidy, says:

"I received your letter, and awfully glad to hear from you. I got wounded and gassed on May 3rd, when we were taking the town of Fresnoy, after hand to hand fighting from an hour before daybreak.

"I arrived at this hospital at Southport, England, from France for further treatment. I am doing well, but that terrible gas just eats one's lungs. We have been successful this spring, but Canada has paid dearly for it, but when you see that enemy, the low down degraded Hun, it just makes me anxious to get back at it again. They are fighting hard to save their new line, but we are breaking it gradually. Our artillery is doing great work.

"If I get through this war, I shall be glad to get back to the Peace River country again. I think I shall open up a general store, if all is well with me. I was awfully glad to hear from you. Remember me to all the old friends in the old home district.

Must Get Permit to Cross Border

Any male between 18 and 45 years must get a permit to go to the United States.

To obtain a permit it is necessary to make application on a printed form, obtainable from any postmaster or railway ticket agent. The forms must be filled out in duplicate. Formal permission to leave the country, if granted by the immigration inspector, is inscribed on the duplicate, which is then retained by the applicant, and must be kept on his person for production at the demand of any immigration official.

The information called for on the application schedules is:

Name and address, date of birth, nationality and length of residence at present address.

Names and addresses of four persons for reference as to identification.

Destination and reasons for desiring to leave Canada, expected length of absence.

Height, weight, color of eyes and hair, occupation.

Each schedule must have attached thereto a photograph that is a good likeness of the applicant.

The declarations must be signed by the applicant and sworn to by him before a notary public, justice of the peace or commissioner. Applications must be signed by a sponsor, who must be a bank manager, chief of police, clergyman or Dominion Government official, who must state how long he has known the applicant, that he recognizes the photograph as a good likeness and that he believes the statements in the information are correct.

Saugeen Council Sanctions New Road

The Saugeen council on Saturday appointed a beat for road making and upkeep which will help to build up the summering business here.

The council agreed to accept the road given over by Mr. W. A. Mitchell which leads out on to the 6th. concession just above the lake. It is understood the town will meet this road, which will connect up with the new road at Paradise Grove. With the assistance of town and township there will soon be a good road along the summer cottages, making a block connecting with the Goderich road from the 6th, to Mill street, Port Elgin.

What is needed now is a permanent roadway from Gobles to the lake on the 6th. con. It is understood a petition will be presented to the Saugeen council to make a cement road of that few feet of soft sand, and the petition is to be backed up with a subscription of quite a few dollars, to help in the matter. There are quite a number of people in town who would be willing to help Saugeen people in this subscription, for down the 6th to the lake is one of the finest drives to be found anywhere, and that little piece of sand makes it most inconvenient to get to the lake.

A CRITICAL WEEK

A critical week has just passed, but not an eventful one.

At this time last week, Premier Borden announced his conscriptive measure. It was first reported that the ages would be from 18 to 45, but a few days later the announcement was given it would be for men from 20 to 45. And there the matter dropped. The Prime Minister has apparently not developed the details, and 24 hours after the announcement the people of Quebec province were busy in opposing the measure, until now, seven days since the announcement, we have a Canada, at first, reported by the daily press as unanimous in the matter, now divided on it.

The Liberal leader has not made his announcement, and many of the younger men who are in the Liberal ranks, deplore the fact that the Liberal leader is still waiting. Premier Hearst and Mr. Rowell both favor conscription, while the Liberal Premier of Nova Scotia says: "We must remember that a coalition government exists in Britain, and that conscription was defeated in Australia, and that the United States government has called to its councils the leaders of both parties. We must first be satisfied that the volunteer system has been given a fair trial," thus intimating that he has doubts as to the necessity of conscription.

Here we have the biggest men in Canada expressing divergent views on the matter, and can it be wondered at that the general public, after a week of roaming without leadership, are not unanimous in the matter.

In Quebec some noisy demonstrations have been held against conscription. Declarations have been made that they will rebel against any such force, until to-day, no matter what any politician may send out to them in a coaxing manner, there is a determined spirit in the French Catholic province which is determined to oppose any force in the matter of going to war.

There are rumors that Premier Borden will select a new set of men for a cabinet. Political newspapers of the Liberal shade want him to make a coalition government which would include the Liberals. Meanwhile the English speaking people of Canada wonder how even that will do, especially as so few of the men who make politics their chief aim in life are capable of directing and leading the nation in a crisis like this.

Does Canada not need to-day the services of busy business men, who have no time for politics? Quebec threatens to throttle the government. Would a government of business men tolerate for a minute the plans being made there to foment trouble? Canada needs leaders to-day.

Premier Borden can relieve the tense situation by calling up some of the big men of affairs, who may be found in the agricultural, commercial and industrial life of Canada. The years of Parliamentary experience which some men have obtained has only made politicians of them, and separated them entirely from the people.

Important Meeting

The meeting of the Dominion Day committee was largely attended Monday night by the business men of the town.

The secretary was instructed to advertise for other attractions. There will be a big demonstration here, and as this is the jubilee year of confederation a special feature along that line will be developed.

As automobiles form a big part in conveying people to our big celebration, a feature of decorated autos to form a parade is being considered with liberal prizes offered. Two pipe bands, one from Kincardine and one from London may also participate as well as other features.

The Band company have been engaged to put on one of their superb programs in the evening, and their promises to be several schools in the big relay race. Kincardine has announced its intention to have a team of runners, also Port Elgin. Paisley won last year from Chesley, and while no word has been received definitely it is expected that Chesley, Paisley and Wiarton will be in the big event.

Citizens are reminded again of the meeting on Monday night in the Library at 7.30. Suggestions will be gladly received for properly acknowledging the jubilee feature, Canada being on July 1 50 years a dominion.

This is the time when all classes of citizens are needed to make the Day a success. For thirty years Port Elgin has been noted for providing a day at the lake town, where people may assemble from all parts. We have a reputation as a celebration, and in this the year of Canada's jubilee it is felt by the committee that the co-operation of every citizen should be given to make this a memorable occasion.

Likes the Parcels

The girls of the Soldiers' Friend Club have been sending nice parcels to the boys at the front. This week The Times publishes a reply of thanks from Douglas Darling, as follows:

Dear Girls: Your parcel arrived today, April 21st in good shape, and it was an agreeable surprise. All the articles enclosed were very necessary to the soldier, and the candies and nuts were much enjoyed. I have been in action when it cost me a pair of socks a day. When they are saturated with mud and water, and the feet are sore, nothing but clean socks will do, and as it is almost impossible to carry them with you, we have to throw them away, unless we are near billets and can exchange them for clean ones at the baths. We are now under canvass since the last big push in which the Canadians drove Fritz back almost out of sight.

A few months and it will all be over (so we think here, ha, ha.) The weather now is fine. Spring will soon be on at home, and the bonfires will be going for the general clean-up in the old town. I often wonder how long it will take to clean up this country, straighten out all the trenches, barbed wire, dead bodies, unexploded shells, etc. You have no idea of the destruction here.

We all hope it will soon be over, and hope we'will be as fortunate as we have been, and be able to enjoy life without fear of being blown to atoms any minute."

Attend the Union Prayer-Meeting

All people in the town and countryside are asked to assemble for prayer in St. Andrew's church, Saugeen, on Friday evening at 7.30.

The gathering is intended to reach all classes, and it is hoped that many persons will lay aside their work and gather for united prayer.

Reeve Gilbert Christie will preside, and the program is given below. Those who cannot attend are asked to use the time at home in intercessory prayer for the success of the allied cause, and the speedy coming of peace.

Saugeen Court of Revision was adjourned early Saturday, and Assessor Clazie instructed to put all the married ladies on the list. Here's an opportunity for the ladies to get a vote quickly. Just marry a Saugeen bachelor—and there are some good fellows.

Poor old Lottie Tillotson (alias Judy Maguire) the fake returned missionary from Hawaii, who exploited half the women Societies in Ontario about a year ago, seems to have gotten in wrong with the immigration authorities on both sides of the line, and she will soon be the woman with no place to go. The American agents insist that she belongs in Ontario, while Canadian officers say she is an Ohio Buckeye.

"The telephone is the greatest luxury a man can have in his home," declared our townsman, Mr John Rowland, during a harangue on the high cost of living in the Town Hall on Thursday evening last. "People order their goods over the phone," continued the speaker, "and it takes a book keeper to charge them up and a horse and man to deliver them around. All this extra help requires money and is put on the selling price of the goods that the consumer receives." Mr. Rowlands was in London and found meat on the market there selling 2c. a pound cheaper than in Walkerton and on inquiry found that people there came and paid cash and carried home their purchases, thus dispensing with the outlay for a delivery rig and the cost of a book keeper to charge up the goods.—Walkerton Herald.

The Times Appreciated In Far China

143 North Szechuen Rd
Shanghai China,
April 17,17

To the Editor of The Times:

Dear Sir:

Your interesting article on the Congregation of Queen Hill, North Bruce, was sent to me by a kind friend, and as I spent my earliest youth in that locality, I was interested in what you say as to the importance of work in rural congregations. When I was a child the Minister was Mr. A. Matheson who died not so very long ago at Mount Forest. The late Rev. Gustavus Monroe spent a summer as a student in charge of the church and made a deep impression on the young people. The adjoining congregation was once ministered to by the Rev. Malcolm McGillivray D. D. who was Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada last year. At least two foreign missionaries have gone out from the Congregation, viz. Dr. Margaret McKellar of India and myself and there may be other others.

At present many of the young men have gone at the call of their country and at present we can hardly expect many to become missionaries. But I hope at the close of the war many who having fought against evil on the plains of Flanders and France will turn their attention to the great and never-ending war with evil whether at home or abroad.

The Bishop of Bristol in his recent autobiography gives three reasons why he has had such a happy life. First of these is that he was brought up in the country. Perhaps the youth of to-day do not realize their privileges, but the day is coming when they will look back at that time as the most formative and fruitful period of their lives. I should say also that one of the most vivid recollections in my youth is hearing the "Hoosier School Master" being read aloud in the columns of the "Port Elgin Free Press", where it appeared as a serial.

Yours sincerely,
Donald MacGillivray

A New Candidate

The Kincardine Reporter in advocating Mr. James Malcolm to carry the Liberal banner in North Bruce, says: "Perhaps he would not be a blind party man, but that would be to his credit, for at the present there is no room in Canada for blindly following any party. The man the Liberals want in North Bruce must be big enough, capable enough and willing to follow a right lead no matter from what quarter it eminates."

INDIAN DISCIPLINE.

How They Punished Their Unruly Offspring in Former Days.

My grandmother had twelve children, and one uncle undertook to teach me the art of worship. He used to lead me to the sandbanks of the Missouri River, where he would set fire to a pile of driftwood, and then, taking me by the hand, sing sacred songs to the fire and river. In the meantime he threw into them offerings of tobacco, red feathers and sometimes oak twigs. I never knew the meaning of these offerings, but I always felt that some living thing actuated both the fire and the river.

Another uncle came to visit us periodically, and every time he came my brother or I suffered at his hands. Sometimes he would rush to the spring, carrying me horizontally under his arm and would plunge my head into the water until I almost suffocated.

His common form of discipline was to let me hang by my hands on the cross poles of the wigwam until my arms ached. My body writhed before I dropped. This uncle seemed to like best to command my older brother to tie my hands and feet with a rope. Then he would order me to resist—an ordeal that would make us both cry. In the winter he would also sometimes roll us in snow naked.

The punishment of Indian children is usually in the hands of some uncle rather than the parents. Our punishments were inflicted generally because we had disobeyed grandmother, had resisted fasting, had fought some Indian boys or had cried without sufficient cause.—Southern Workman.

GOOD SOUPS.

Recipes for Making Both White and Brown.

For a white soup one should use stock made from veal and chicken bones, or the water a fowl was boiled in, with some vegetable added, but mutton bone stock or mutton made of vegetables only, or second stock (that is a second boiling of the materials used for soup) may serve.

For white soup choose a white enameled pan. All half strained stock and half milk, and if the flavor is liked add a very little mace, and pepper and salt to taste. Now thicken with flour and butter, using about two ounces to a quart of soup. The soup must be added to this by degrees off the fire and stirred thoroughly to prevent lumping. This process must not be hurried. When well mixed set on the heat again to bring to the boil. Now taste, add more seasoning if required, and if possible a spoonful or two of cream. Do not boil again after adding the cream. If liked, egg yolk may be added as well or instead of cream. In a bowl beat up the egg thoroughly with a teacupful of the cooled soup and half an ounce of butter. Then add the egg mixture off the fire to the soup by degrees and stir well, and be sure the soup does not boil when or after the egg is added, or it will curdle. As a rule, however, the egg is unnecessary unless the soup is to be the meal, when the additional nourishment may be needed. Cream or egg should be added just before serving.

Thick brown soup.—For thick brown soup proceed as before using well flavored dark stock and browned flour and butter, but do not add milk, cream or egg. If the color is not good add a little meat extract, and be sure the soup is well flavored. Some tomato juice or the flavoring of curry paste stirred smooth in some of the stock and then well cooked in the soup, gives you the result.

Curry Soup or a Taste to Soup.—When using the curry it must be thoroughly cooked or it will lend a harsh, raw taste to the soup. Needless to say, this method of making curry soup is not the correct way of making mulligatawny soup.

No Laugh From Him.

The eminent actor and the admired playwright were in company with another man of mark. And the actor told a story in his best manner—a manner justly celebrated on two sides of the Atlantic, and regarded by himself as effective—to say the least. The playwright laughed heartily, and upon that laugh the actor, with fine professional skill, made his exit. Then the playwright observed that the other man of mark sat silent and glumly regarded the opposite wall.

"That was a good story of Judkins," the playwright said. "May I ask why you chose to confer upon it such a disinheriting countenance?"

"A good story," the other replied, explosively. "Of course it's a good story. I told that story to Judkins yesterday myself. And did he laugh? He did not. And to-day the pig-tailed pirate tells it back to me and expects me to laugh. Not much. I'll choke first."—New York Evening Post.

HISTORIC PUNS.

When Sober English Chronicles Were Frivolous.

The English are declared to take their pleasures seriously. Perhaps they do, but on the other hand they often show an admirably gallant gayety in the face of danger, difficulty and discouraging circumstances. An abundant correspondence from the front has recently revealed, says the Youth's Companion, Tommy Atkins in the field is far from being a serious minded person much of the time; he is often as "larky" as a schoolboy, and his exuberant nonsense is frequently touched with gleams of real wit as well as humor.

But it is not British Tommies only who joke in war time. Throughout centuries of English history jokes, from sources military, literary, noble and even royal, have occasionally enlivened momentous events. Puns, the most frivolous and trivial, sometimes the most frivolous and trivial, sometimes the most disdained, of jocular efforts, attach themselves here and there, like impudent burs, to the most serious and careful chronicles. The sober historian who writes fully of the disastrous battle of Culloden, which decided the final fall of the royal house of Stuart, when he relates that the advance of Gens. Cope, Wade and Hawley was delayed by the snow filled glens and icy slopes of wild Scotland, condescends to record in a footnote that the opposing forces drew mirthful encouragement from this punning couplet:

Cope could not cope, nor Wade wade through the snow,
Nor Hawley haul his cannon to the foe.

When, in 1797, the fleet of Admiral Duncan was about to engage that of the Dutch Admiral de Winter, the British captains came aboard the flagship for instructions. They received them in an address of memorable brevity and point.

"Gentlemen," said Admiral Duncan, "you see a severe winter approaching. I have only to advise you to keep up a good fire."

Their enthusiastic compliance with his advice resulted in a brilliant victory.

Perhaps the briefest and wittiest of historic English puns was the Latin announcement in a single word of the conquest of Scinde, attributed to the conqueror, Sir Charles Napier:

"Peccavi!" (I have sinned.)

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED MRS. MERCREDI.

She Had Been Ill Two Years and Could Find No Cure. That's Why Her Husband is Enthusiastic Over Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Fort Smith, Alberta, May 21.—(Special.)—Among all the thousands of Canadians who praise Dodd's Kidney Pills for the good they have done, there is no more fervent admirer of the great kidney remedy than Isidore Mercredi, of this place.

"Yes, it always gives me pleasure to say a good word for Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Mercredi says. "My wife was sick for two years. We could not find anything to restore her to health. Then we found a pamphlet telling of several people who had been cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My wife used just two boxes of them and she is perfectly well, to the great surprise of all our neighbors. They can tell you the same thing. I cannot recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills enough."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the greatest of all remedies for weak, suffering women. They [illegible] the kidneys. The kidneys are the root of nine-tenths of women's ills. Strong, [illegible] kidneys mean pure clean blood all over the body. That means good health everywhere.

CARE OF THE EYES.

Frequent Short Rests Do Much to Aid Them.

The proper care of the eyes is one of the first duties of civilized man. This [illegible] rest, with [illegible] retirement.

They know, what many [illegible] do not as yet fully appreciate, that eye-strain is one of the most prolific of all present-day foes of health and efficiency. Its evil influence is [illegible] and varied diseases that [illegible] upon the eyes.

In the long ago, when our ancestors were clad in skins, dwelt in caves, and scoured the open country in search of food, the important thing was to have eyes [illegible] adapted to see at great distances.

Nature met this demand. The human eye became essentially an eye fitted for far vision.

But with the progress of civilization and particularly with the invention of printing and the development of the industrial arts, the demand for far vision lessened. It has been constantly lessening, until to-day the eye is primarily needed for tasks requiring near sight rather than far.

Fleet Foot
Shoes on the Farm
For work and play—in the middle of the day—and when on pleasure bent.

For field, farm and wagon, wear Fleet Foot Shoes. They are far cheaper than leather—light, easy, comfortable—long wearing. For every-day wear, you will find them immeasurably better than hot, heavy, expensive leather boots.

When you're out for a good time, wear WHITE "Fleet Foot" Shoes. In fact, you must wear White Shoes this summer, to be well dressed. Dealers everywhere have "Fleet Foot" Shoes, in all styles for men, women and children. 201

Unfortunately, there has not been time to make the necessary adaptation. Men still inherit from their remote ancestors far-seeing eyes.

The consequence is that eye-strain, with its resultant evils, is an ever-present danger. Many can avoid it only by wearing spectacles. All have to manage their eyes wisely if they would escape trouble.

And wise management of the eyes includes giving them frequent rests, as well as taking care to use them under lighting conditions that of themselves lessen strain.

Frequent rests do not necessarily mean long rests. If, for example, your work is of a sort to require close application of the eyes at reading, writing, designing, etc., for many hours a day, an occasional glance into distance for a few moments will relieve the strain to steady near vision.

Also, from time to time, close the eyes entirely. Let the muscles of your whole body relax. Sit limply in your chair. Dismiss all thought of the work on which you are engaged.

Or get up and walk about the room, look out of the window, poke the fire, think of nothing in especial.

Both these procedures will be found wonderfully restful to your mind. They have the additional advantage of giving your eyes a chance to rest.

If you ride in street car or railway car to and from your place of work, make these periods of travel a resting time for your eyes. Above all, do not read while travelling. The light is likely to be none too good, and the swaying of the car increases the strain of reading.

And do not sit looking steadily out of the car windows at the various objects you pass. If you do this, pain in the eyes, headache or other evidence of eye-strain will in all probability be the result.

Better far to sit with your eyes closed, or shifting their object from time to time. Remember that you ought to have them in as good condition as possible for your work. Assuredly you ought not to tire them before you begin to work.

If you have to work facing a window, wear an eyeshade. And while you ought always to work in a good light, avoid working with the sun glaring on the work at which you are looking. This, too, will rapidly tire and strain the eyes.

Should they be tired and strained, wash them with a mild solution of boric acid, and take special pains to observe the precautions already mentioned. If, despite every precaution, the feeling of strain persist, consult an oculist.

JUST A FEW DON'TS.

Good to Bear in Mind When Your Kiddies Get Sick.

The spread of scarlet fever and other contagious diseases in Chicago has caused Health Commissioner Robertson, of that city, to issue a series of "common sense don'ts." They follow:

Don't forget that you should keep a child at home and away from other children if the child is sick in any degree.

Don't fail to get a doctor and learn what is the matter with the child.

Don't forget that diphtheria antitoxin, given the first day, saves the child.

Don't wait until the second day of illness before calling a doctor.

Don't allow any one to kiss a child in any way, etc., until it is certain the illness is not the beginning of a contagious disease.

Don't forget that measles, whooping-cough, scarlet fever and diphtheria are conveyed every day because [illegible] is not followed.

Don't allow a child not feeling well to go to school, kindergarten, Sunday school, the nickel theatre, or visit with playmates. The nature of a contagious disease is rarely ever determined the first day of the attack.

Don't neglect a cold, cough, sore throat or slight rash. It may be the beginning of a contagious disease.

THE HASTINGS DIAMOND.

It Involved a King of England in a Bribery Scandal.

Nearly every great diamond has a history. These histories are always romantic, embodying numerous adventures, some of which are tragic.

In the history of the Hastings diamond of England is a charge of bribery against a king, George III., which gave the gentle art of caricature an opportunity such as it had never come to it before, and showed the power that caricature could wield upon a people.

At a levee of the king held on June 14, 1786, a very valuable diamond of unusual size and brilliancy was presented to George III., ostensibly as a gift from the Nizam or native ruler of Deccan, India.

At the period when this magnificent peace offering was given to the King the impeachment of Warren Hastings was attracting [illegible] in parliament, and it was current rumor that this and several lesser diamonds were the purchase price of Hastings' acquittal.

Caricatures appeared in the windows of the printshops. One represented Hastings wheeling the king to market in a wheelbarrow and saying, "What a man buys he may sell again." In another the king was exhibited kneeling, with his mouth open, and Hastings throwing diamonds into it.

Largest Crystal of Beryl.

It remained for a Turk, wandering far from his native land, to find the largest crystal of beryl (aquamarine) ever discovered, a long distance inland in Brazil. It was dug out at a shallow depth, transported by canoe to the coast and finally sold at Bahia, bringing the finder, it is said, $25,000. According to estimates, this crystal would furnish fully 200,000 carats of aquamarines of various sizes.

PERFECT HEALTH DUE TO THE BLOOD

NO GIRL OR WOMAN NEED BE CONSTANTLY AILING AND UNHAPPY.

Nature intended every girl and every woman to be happy, attractive, active and healthy. Yet too many of them find their lives saddened by suffering—nearly always because their blood is to blame. All those happy girls and women with colorless cheeks, dull skins and sunken, lustreless eyes, are in this condition because they have not enough blood, red blood in their veins to keep them well in the charm of health. They suffer from depressing weariness and periodical headaches. Dark lines form under their eyes, their heart palpitates violently after the slightest exertion, and they are often attacked with fainting spells. These are only a few of the miseries of bloodlessness. Nothing can secure girls and women from the inevitable decline that follows anaemia except a generous supply of new, rich, red blood, and nothing has ever proved so successful in creating red good blood as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Thousands and thousands of girls and women owe their good health and charming complexion to the use of this medicine. Here is one example of its power to cure. Miss Bertha Boucher, St. Jerome, Que., says:—"For over a year my health was steadily failing; my blood had seemed almost to have turned to water, my cheeks were pale, my lips bloodless, and the slightest exertion left me breathless. I suffered frequently from severe headaches, my appetite failed, and my friends feared I was going into consumption. I had been doctoring, but did not obtain any benefit, and finally I had to give up my work and return home. It was at this stage that a friend brought me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and urged me to try them. By the time the box was finished I found they were helping me, and I [illegible] using the pills [illegible] completely returned, my appetite was restored, [illegible] had disappeared and I was feeling better than I had been for years. [illegible] Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial."

These pills are sold by all medicine dealers, or may be had by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Too Much Trouble.

Pat had seen nearly every clock in the place, but had discarded all of them as not being good enough for his purpose. The weary shopman had exhausted his whole stock except a few cuckoo clocks, so he brought these forward as a last resource, and vowed he would do his best to sell one or know the reason why.

"Do the clocks strike the hours?" asked Pat, noticing their curious shape, and half doubting their capacity to do anything.

"I'll show you what they do," said the salesman, and he set the hands of one to a few minutes to 12. When the little door flew open and the cuckoo thrust its head out, cuckooing away for dear life, Pat was thunderstruck. But when the bird disappeared he looked glum and pondered in gloomy thought for a moment.

"Well, how do you like that?" asked the salesman. "That's a staggerer for you, isn't it?"

"Faith and begorra, I should think it is," declared Pat. "It's trouble enough to remember to wind it, without having to think of feeding the bird."

STATIST FAVORABLY IMPRESSED BY C. P. R.

In discussing the recent Canadian Pacific report, the London Statist, which is one of the most conservative financial publications in England, has a two-page article headed Canadian Pacific [illegible]. [illegible] though the volume of traffic was all that could be desired, 1916 was one of the most difficult years ever experienced. Enormous business had to be handled with a serious shortage of cars, while the cost of material was rising by leaps and bounds. Fuel and wages were increasing, and labor scarce and less efficient. Had not the road been vastly improved in recent years and its capacity greatly increased, serious congestion must have occurred, making heavy control over expenditure impossible.

The Statist alludes further to the great improvement in train and car load statistics and to the increased economy shown by the conducting transportation items. It thinks that notwithstanding the advancing costs, the net earnings and profits for 1917 can be compared favorably with those of 1916, and that there is every likelihood that the growth of the company's traffic will produce wonderful [illegible] the future as in the past.

RUSSIA WILL STAND LOYAL TO THE ALLIES

French Premier Reads Message From Petrograd to the Chamber.

RUSS GRATITUDE

France Saved the Situation and Gave Them Time to Prepare.

PLAIN TALK.

Petrograd Cable.——Albert Thomas, the French Minister of Munitions, addressing a delegation of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates of Moscow, said thousands of French and British soldiers were perishing while awaiting Russia's co-operation in the east. On this co-operation, the Minister said, the soldiers had a right to count, and Russia's inaction at the front was equivalent to a separate peace.

Paris, May 22.—Parliament was reopened and the expected interpellations regarding the conduct of the war were presented in the chamber. Addressing the deputies in regard to the interpellations, Premier Ribot said:

"I recognize that the representatives of the people desire some explanations. These may be given publicly. The public, like yourselves, have the right to be informed. Secret missions must be reserved for other subjects.

"Concerning the interpellations on the last offensive it may be said there were some excessive hopes and some errors of execution, but the results obtained should be neither exaggerated nor belittled. Never have our soldiers proved more admirable.

CHANGES IN COMMAND.

"The Government has thought some changes should be made, and it has made them. It has reorganized the high command so as to relieve it of everything not concerned with military operations. The Minister of War now works in co-operation with the military committee of the chamber. I ask postponement of the discussion on this point until the work of bringing about this co-operation has been concluded.

"In reference to submarine warfare, I recognize that, while the tonnage loss has diminished, we must seek more energetic and decisive means of dealing with submarines. We will consider that situation further on Friday.

"As to the food supply, we are ready to discuss it as soon as possible, believing that the country has not been sufficiently informed."

DANGEROUS SOPHISMS.

Taking up the Russian situation, Premier Ribot said it was necessary to combat dangerous sophisms which tended to treat the restoration of 'our lost provinces' as being a question of annexation, and which also confused the question of indemnities for ravages in the invaded provinces.

"This indemnity is a contribution which is collected as a fine for wrong done," said the Premier. "It is a requirement which both law and equity demand. The same reparation should be required for all small nations which have been crushed, for Belgium, Serbia, Roumania and Montenegro.

"No conquests and no covetousness: that, in substance, is what the Russian Government declares. France replies that it would not oppress any nationality, even that of its enemies. It will call to its aid to defend the small nations, not vengeance, but justice.

"What France also wishes is a durable peace, but we do not wish military dispositions to endure, which can destroy this durable peace when once it is made. If the German people comprehend this, it would make peace easier to attain. This is the view of Russia at the moment when the United States is making preparations to enter the war. Now let Russia make her offensive, and we will be able to talk of peace, not in an equivocal manner, but openly, and this peace, if they do not ask it of us, we will impose it."

DEVELOPMENT OF REVOLUTION.

M. Ribot prefaced his references to Russia by asking for a postponement of the debate, "because of consideration to which the French Government has been invited by the Russian Government."

"We are following the development of the Russian revolution with the utmost care and sympathy," he concluded. "The eminent and courageous statesmen of Russia were surrounded for a time by influences which rendered their action difficult, but the men of intelligence who have now taken in hand the Russian Government have made declarations which give us complete satisfaction. They [illegible] that they wish a strong Government, and they desire above all to establish in the army that severe discipline which is an indispensable condition of the existence of the Russian nation."

He created intense interest by reading a telegram received from the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, which said: "Russia will never forget the elan with which France entered the war on our side and will always remember that at the moment of the present crisis in Russia's existence it was the splendid effort of the French people which attracted the enemy masses toward the west and thus permitted our Russian forces to gain time for reorganization."

Long-continued cheers greeted the reading of this telegram, after which the Premier continued:

MARCH HAND IN HAND.

"I accept for my country these words of confidence and gratitude. Yes, we march hand in hand with Russia, ever faithful. Yes, at this moment France retains on her front all those German hordes gathered from the Russian front, permitting Russia to recover herself and prepare that confraternity of arms which will demonstrate that there is no question of a separate peace.

"As to the conditions of that peace the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs has himself exposed the sophisms whereby Germany's formula of no annexation is made the pretext for Germany's holding the provinces she tore from France. She annexed these provinces, always French, until yesterday. There stands Germany, the culprit guilty of annexation. We ask simply for restitution of what belongs to us and not for annexation."

The Chamber fixed May 31st for the submarine debate and June 1st for the discussion of France's military policy and the question of delegates from France attending the International Socialist conference at Stockholm. The Chamber then proceeded to discuss the question of food supplies.

At the request of M. Ribot the interpellations on the purpose of the war and the effect of the entrance of the United States and the Russian revolution were postponed.

The Government submitted to the Chamber the estimates for the third quarter of the year, the general budget totalling 5,845,000,000 francs, and supplementary budgets totalling 1,022,000,000 francs.

The general budget shows an increase of 218,000,000 francs over the second quarter of the year, but is slightly below what was expected, enabling the Minister of Finance to state in presenting the estimates:

"For the first time since the beginning of hostilities the aggregate of Government expenses begins to show a certain tendency towards stability."

75 BLOCKS OF ATLANTA GONE

Three Thousand Homes Were Destroyed.

Atlanta, Ga. Report.—Atlanta went actively to work to-day to care for the destitute people from three thousand homes destroyed in the fire that raged yesterday afternoon and last night, throughout seventy-five blocks, and was stopped only after the dynamiting of beautiful homes on Ponce de Leon avenue. The property loss was estimated at [illegible] by Mayor Candler, who declared that his estimate was a conservative one, other estimates ran as high as 10,000,000.

Rumors of incendiarism were disposed of by Mayor Candler, who said that an investigation had failed to disclose anything to substantiate that theory.

Only one death was reported, that of a woman who died from shock, and sixty or more persons suffered minor injuries.

The fire started in a storage warehouse, and, fanned by a brisk wind, was carried to adjoining buildings. Then it swept from house to house in rapidly widening area.

Water, chemicals and dynamite used by the fire fighters of Atlanta and other cities, were ineffective until midnight, when control was gained as the blaze reached the outskirts of the city. From Edgewood avenue, near the business section, to Ponce de Leon avenue, one of the most exclusive residential districts, only a succession of standing chimneys was left.

Troops guarded the devastated area, and firemen worked vigorously to quell small blazes which still persisted.

Thousands of persons who yesterday were rated among the city's most prosperous, were refugees to-day, crowding the homes of friends, hotels and public buildings. Mayor Candler declared, however, that Atlanta would take care of the homeless, and that outside aid was unnecessary.

Besides actual relief work to-day, there was a tremendous task ahead of Atlanta in getting its scattered citizens together. Members of many families had become scattered, and some were sought for through the want ad section of the morning papers.

The burned area is roughly defined as including all that territory between Fort street, on the west and the boulevard on the east between Decatur street and Ponce de Leon avenue.

FRENCH TOOK STRONG POSTS

Gains Near Moronvilliers Were Important

And the German Losses Were Very Heavy.

With the French Armies on the French Front, Cable.——While the Germans were throwing masses of men against the French positions along the Chemin-des-Dames, only to suffer defeat with terrific losses, the French last night effected an attack on the Moronvilliers section and drove the Germans from some of their strongest positions. The French plans were brilliantly conceived and executed without a hitch. Their objective was most difficult, a hilly range filled with deep caverns afforded shelter to hundreds of men and machine guns, but the French infantry stormed the heights of Casque and Teton, respectively 7[illegible] and [illegible] feet in height, and carried them with a rush, while other columns captured the trenches lining the northern slopes of Mount Carnillet.

The result of these operations gives the French a commanding view on their left. The value placed on the possession of these hills is shown by the violence of the German counter-attacks in the course of the early morning, which everywhere broke down. They left more than 800 prisoners in the hands of the French, while hundreds of bodies of Germans strew the ground and lie in the cavernous shelters.

Monday night's War Office statement reads:

"The day was comparatively calm. The artillery actions were intermittent over the greater part of the front except in Champagne, where the enemy violently bombarded the positions we occupied yesterday in the region south of Moronvilliers. There was no infantry action.

"On the night of May 19-20 our aeroplanes dropped 2,200 kilos of explosives on railroads, stations and bivouacs in the region of Laon and Bethenville. On May 20 the aviation ground at Habsheim and bivouacs at Pont Faverger and Bethenville were likewise bombarded with numerous projectiles.

"The same day two German aeroplanes were brought down by our pilots, and a third by the fire of our special guns. Three other enemy machines were compelled to make a landing, having been seriously damaged."

HAD TO BUILD HUN TRENCHES

British Prisoners Compelled to Do So by Foe,

In Violation of the Agreement Made.

London, Cable.—In the House of Lords Lord Newton convicted the German Government of mendacity in their treatment of the question of employment of prisoners in the fighting zone. The Germans had given our authorities to understand they would at once withdraw British prisoners from the eastern front, but had sent 500 men there, and actually employed them in trenches. In January the Germans informed the British Government that no British prisoners were employed near the German lines on the western front, but at the beginning of April three British privates who escaped into the British lines stated several hundred British prisoners were employed within four miles of the German trenches since November, 1916. Not only that, but they had been treated in an extremely harsh and cruel way. The British Government, Lord Newton added, had demanded that the men be withdrawn. No answer had as yet been received. He hoped the Cabinet would not hesitate to take action of the most drastic character.

PROMOTER DIED SUDDENLY.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Report.—The citizens were greatly shocked when it was announced on the street this morning that M. Antoine Balzola, president and treasurer of the Niagara Spanish Aerial Car Tramway over the whirlpool, had died suddenly of heart failure at his residence at six o'clock this morning. He was the chief promoter and constructed the novel aerial car tramway over the whirlpool. His home is in Spain, and he was about [illegible] years of age.

HUNS HOLD BRAZILIAN SHIP.

London, Cable.—The German prize court at Hamburg has decided adversely on six pleas entered with it to secure the release of the Brazilian steamer Rio Pardo, which was captured by German warships Dec. 9, 1916, and taken into a German port. The Rio Pardo at the time of her capture was bound from Rotterdam for Hull, with a cargo consisting largely of provisions.

IS BRAZIL ABOUT TO TAKE STAND WITH ENTENTE AGAINST GERMANY?

President Urges Congress to Revoke Neutrality, and Latter Body is in Favor.

Rio Janeiro, Cable says—President Braz has sent a message to Congress recommending the revocation of the decree of neutrality in the war between the United States and Germany. Congress is expected to accept the recommendation by a large majority. The message declares that the order to the Brazilian authorities regarding the observance of neutrality was only intended to have effect until Congress met. It continues:

"To-day, in consideration of the fact that the United States is an integral part of the American Union, in consideration also of the traditional policy of Brazil, which has always been governed by a complete unity of view with the United States, and, finally, in consideration of the sympathies of a great majority of the Brazilian nation, the administration invites Congress to revoke the decree of neutrality."

AUSTRIANS TRY COUNTER MOVE

Attack in Trentino, but Fail, With Heavy Loss.

Daring Italian Move Across the Isonzo.

Rome Cable.—The Austrians have started a counter offensive movement in the Trentino, designed to relieve the ever-increasing Italian pressure on Trieste.

Artillery attacks were followed in some places by infantry assaults. The enemy gained a foothold in the Posina region but were driven out with heavy losses in men and supplies.

The Rome correspondent of the Times telegraphs from Italian headquarters, under date of Sunday:

"Yesterday's communique announces the withdrawal of the Italian force which crossed the Isonzo above Canale, seizing the hamlets of Loga and Bodrez. It is now possible to complete the story of this diversion, which had the effect of occupying considerable numbers of the enemy. The Italian force which crossed the river early Tuesday consisted of only two battalions. Within a few hours the bridges were destroyed by Austrian shell fire. The Italians were left with the swollen Isonzo behind them and several hundred prisoners still in their hands. The first Austrian counter attack was easily repulsed, and the prisoners transferred across the river by cable ferry, 400 in all. The little force then had to prepare for further counter-attacks, which were made in strength on Wednesday and Thursday. These attacks were thrown back with heavy losses to the enemy.

"On Tuesday I was able to have a clear view of this temporary bridgehead. It was an extraordinarily impressive sight to look at the thin line of men which were holding a two-mile front. The Austrians were completely blinded by the Italian manoeuvre, and the magnificent conduct of the picked troops who carried it out. They waited to collect further reinforcements, but the task of the Italians had been performed, and a new bridge thrown across. Their patrols had been well up the mountain beyond the bridgehead, actually reaching the summit of one important hill. They were convinced they had paved the way for an important advance, but an advance at this point was not part of the Italian plan.

"The work before our allies is still colossal. It looks as if it may be rendered much harder than need be owing to the uncertain conditions in Russia. The fighting has already been very bitter in those sections of the line where the purpose of the attack was merely demonstrative. The Austrian artillery fire is very formidable. The number of machine guns seems to have been greatly increased, but it will take a great deal to stop Cadorna and his men. The material preparations that have been made are remarkable."

APPEAL FOR HUNS.

Leading Americans Oppose Future Trade War.

New York Report.——An appeal to the Entente Allies' Governments not to make another world struggle probable by beginning an economic war upon the Central Powers as soon as the treaty of peace is signed, has been made by Jacob H. Schiff, Dr. Charles W. Eliot, George Haven Putnam, Charles S. Fairchild, and more than a score of other prominent Americans. The complete text of the appeal, which was addressed to Arthur James Balfour and Rene Viviani and their colleagues on the British and French commissions to the United States, was forwarded by the visiting commissioners, it was announced last night, to their respective Governments on May 19.

Asserting that the proposed economic war would impose on future generations burdens too great to be borne, the appeal declares that if the world is to be kept at peace, "economic peace based upon freedom of trade as well as freedom of the seas must be established and maintained."

This, it is asserted, "is the one

A LULL ALONG ITALIAN FRONT

Allies Won in Such Fighting as Occurred.

Foe Counters Failed in Two Places.

London Cable.——A noticeable diminution in the intensity of the fighting along the Isonzo front of the Austro-Italian theatre has set in. Only one attack by the Italians is reported. On the Trentino front, far to the west, the Austrians are keeping up their heavy bombardments and infantry attacks, which the military authorities in Rome consider to be attempts to divert the attention of the Italians from their offensive along the Isonzo. According to Rome all attacks in this region have been repulsed.

ITALIAN REPORT

Rome Cable.—Tuesday's War Office report said:

"On the Trentino front the enemy, notwithstanding the reverses he has suffered in the last few days, still persists in making desultory and fruitless attempts to divert the Italian general staff from its main objective. Raids were made in force last night against our advanced trenches at Gaventro Pass, Adamello, Pluberna Bridge, in the Chiese and in the Giumella Valley, at Rio Pionale. All were repulsed.

"Between Lake Garda and the Adige the enemy, after an intense and prolonged bombardment with artillery of all calibres, attacked our position on Monte Dosso Alto, southwest of Loppio Lake, and on Monte Zugna. He was driven back with heavy loss. Other local attacks which were attempted yesterday in the Posina Valley, on the Asiago plateau and in Carnia failed.

"On the Julian front, in the sector north of Gorizia, the artillery duel, already spirited, became more intense late yesterday, but was not followed by infantry action. The position which we captured on Hill 363, east of Plava, was consolidated. One gun and about thirty prisoners fell into our hands. East of Gorizia the enemy attempted repeatedly to drive us from Hill 126, south of Grazigna, but failed on account of the effective action of our artillery reserves.

"Last night one of our airships bombarded the enemy's rear lines near Vogrisca, in the Frigido Valley. It returned safely."

FRENCH CHAMBER.

Deluge of Questions re War Awaits Its Opening.

Paris Cable.——Four more have been added to the avalanche of interpellations at the reopening of Parliament to-day. Thirty-five Deputies had already announced their intention of interpellating the Government respecting various questions connected with the war. Deputy Renaudel, managing editor of Humanite, now announces his intention of interpellating regarding the effects of America's entry into the war and the Russian revolution on the French foreign policy and diplomatic conduct of the war.

Premier Ribot and War Minister Painleve appeared before the military committee of the Chamber yesterday, and gave a long exposition of the conditions under which the last offensive was carried out, and the military situation generally in this respect. It is probable that the secret session necessitated by the nature of the interpellations will not be held until after the Ministers have appeared similarly before the principal committees of the two Chambers. It may also be postponed until after the pending business is cleared, including bills dealing with war orphans, soldiers' pensions, indemnities for civil victims of the war, and for crippled soldiers, a bill fixing the method of settlement for rents unpaid since the beginning of the war, and an income tax measure, sent back from the Senate.

A motion drawn up by M. Klotz, President of the budget committee, respecting the discussion in a public sitting of the interpellations on national food supplies, will be submitted for ratification at a meeting of delegates from all groups in the House.

U-BOAT OFF MAINE COAST?

Portland, Me., Report.—It was officially made known to-day that the reported presence of a submarine off the Maine coast was being investigated by the naval stations.

A patrol scouring of these waters was ordered, following a report to the naval stations that a periscope was sighted late yesterday afternoon, and that at 6 o'clock last night a submarine was seen running awash off Machias.

On the heels of these reports came the word to-day from three fishermen that they had sighted from two different points what they believed to be a German submarine. They sighted the craft, they said, off the mouth of the Kennebec River at 5.15 this morning. When it was reported to a naval officer he furnished the Machias end of the story and confirmed press reports that an investigation was under way.

WORLD'S CROPS.

Acreage is Heavy, Outlook is Fair.

The condition of growing cereals on May 1 was good in Tunis, average in Spain, Netherlands and Algeria, mediocre in France, Great Britain, Italy and Switzerland.

Areas sown to rye: Spain, 1,815,000, or 100 per cent. of last year and 97 per cent. of average; Switzerland, 14,000 acres, or 105 per cent. of last year and 122 per cent. of average.

Areas sown to barley: Spain, 1,[illegible],000 acres, or 9[illegible] per cent. of last year and 112 per cent. of average; Algeria, 2,522,000 acres, or 95 per cent. of last year, and 99 per cent. of average.

Areas sown to oats: Spain, 1,416,000 acres, 112 per cent. of last year, and 167 per cent. of average; Switzerland, 111,000 acres, 108 per cent. of last year, and 122 per cent. of average; Algeria, 324,000 acres, 98 per cent. of last year, and 100 per cent. of average.

PRESS VIEWS FROM BRITAIN ON HOME RULE

London Morning Papers Not Confident as to Convention's Success.

UP TO IRELAND

She Must Settle Her Own Case—Ulster the Danger Point.

London Cable.—While most of the morning newspapers editorially welcome an Irish convention as a hopeful means of settling the difficulties in Ireland, none of them express confidence in its success, and none regard it absolutely certain that the convention will meet. It is pointed out that, although the speeches in Parliament showed a remarkable change in the atmosphere, and that the discussion and outlook on the whole is encouraging, the crux of the difficulty, namely, the exclusion of northern Ulster, remains.

Hope, however, is based in some quarters on the attitude of the Marquis of Lansdowne, who for many years has been an antagonist of home rule, and on the speech of Sir Edward Carson, which is regarded as a better augury than that of Sir John Lonsdale, secretary and whip of the Irish Unionist party. Satisfaction is expressed by several of the editorial writers that the settlement of the Irish question has been removed from Great Britain's hands, and that Ireland has been given the opportunity to work out its own destiny.

This satisfaction is accompanied by the earnest hope that the opportunity will be seized by the Irishmen.

The Daily Telegraph interprets the general feeling of Parliament as recognizing that the convention, if it is held, easily may fail, but it asserts that the success of it is not out of the question, and that the experiment should be made with good will.

The Daily Chronicle urges the convening at the earliest moment of the convention, saying that on the crest of the incoming tide it may be carried safely to land. The Liberal Daily News, referring to the representation in the convention not being limited to politicians, but including representatives of the social, economic and intellectual elements, says this variety of comprehensiveness contains a promise of a satisfactory issue for the situation.

The Daily Mail expressed the belief that the probabilities are the convention will meet, and adds:

"It will put Ireland very definitely on trial before the British Empire and the world, and test most thoroughly whatever capacity for constructive statesmanship she possesses."

The ultra-Conservative Morning Post says that asking Ireland to devise a plan for her own government may seem reasonable from the first view, but that it never must be forgotten that a government for Ireland is not purely an Irish question, because the security of Great Britain largely depends on Ireland, which holds a position through which every enemy who ever fought England has tried to enter.

Elaborating the view that what are fundamentals is a British question cannot be settled by Irishmen alone, this newspaper contends that the British cannot carry into effect a convention's decisions unless they do not injure the interests and security of the kingdom.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN'S VIEWS

London special Cable—— says—The Manchester Guardian considers the Irish convention "the biggest and most serious undertaking to which Ireland has set her hand for generations, and one which must be prosecuted with the vigor and [illegible] proportionate to its moment."

The Guardian thinks the best hope for the expedient is that the English parties mean to stand aloof. The Guardian continues:

"The task before the convention is extremely difficult, as the speeches of Sir John Lonsdale and Sir Edward Carson show that fires are still burning, and that the spirit of compromise does not brood everywhere over the troubled waters."

The newspaper, however, sees solid elements of hope, and declares that the pacification of Ireland affects British strength at home and credit abroad. It concludes: "It is of high importance for the solidity and effectiveness of the [illegible] on which we can count, not only from the United States, but from our own dominions."

THE IRISH PRESS.

Dublin Cable, via London — The Irish Times, commenting on the proposed convention, says it is folly to think the normal course of Irish politics has [illegible] individual treatment for the supposedly different task of leadership. The Irish Unionists do not pretend to be hopeful of success, although they refuse to take the responsibility for refusing their share in the Government's appeal.

The Freeman's Journal says the prospects for the convention have been improved by the discussions in Parliament. Premier Lloyd George's promise to accept the decision of the convention in regard to both the character and scope of the Irish constitution gives even greater importance, and will increase enormously the [illegible], will increase enormously the force of the appeal to all genuine Nationalists.

The Irish Independent says it is idle to pretend that anything short of full colonial Home Rule will be regarded by Irishmen as a final settlement, and a final settlement is what the Government pretends to have in view.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Last week's snowstorm caught some people without wood or coal and a rather empty flour box. A few months of worry about food and fuel and not only men, but women and children will be glad to go to war.

Conscription of wealth? Yes. But, on second thought of what use will it be if the results are to be turned over to spendthrift politicians. Time enough to conscript the goods of others, when the people are assured of proper management of the returns.

Oakville is situated on the paved highway between Toronto and Hamilton, and the motor vehicle traffic between these cities is tremendous. Count was made on a certain Sunday afternoon, when it was found between 1 and 5.30, 535 automobiles and 92 motorcycles passed over the roadway. With 140 vehicles per hour speeding through the main street, the quiet Sunday must be a thing of the past in Oakville.

"The influence that is shaping public opinion in rural Canada to day is not the big newspapers, but the small country journals which publish the letters from the boys overseas. Thousands of these impressionate letters are being read daily in farms and villages, and a great force is being developed which is becoming very coherent. Having this in mind I have little fear for the future of the Empire."—Peter McArthur.

The United States has taken the better course in setting the age limit for her army from 21 years and upwards. The 21 limit provides for young men who will by that time have their trades or professions. The 18 years simply takes young men who are in the midst of trades or college courses, and after a spell of war they come back, a great majority of them maimed, and without sufficient knowledge to take up their work as journeymen and yet too old to want to begin as apprentices.

Along with hosts of newspaper friends the editor of The Times extends its sympathy to Editor McGuire, of The Orangeville Banner, who is called upon to mourn the loss of a second son Lieut. R. B. McGuire, who was killed in action in the Vimy Ridge campaign. His first son to make the supreme sacrifice Lieut. Harry B. McGuire, was killed in action a little over a year ago. A third son, Lieut. Horace McGuire, is now at the front.

There are some very estimable people who cannot understand why a newspaper should not give free space to every entertainment which is held for patriotic, benevolent and religious purposes, and are apt to think, even if they do not always say very mean things when their requests have to be refused. This misconception is due to a very prevalent belief that newspaper space costs nothing, and to a failure to realize that advertising is almost the sole source of revenue of the publisher. There is no more reason why a publisher should give away his goods, even for a worthy cause, than a hardware merchant or a grocer. His space should be dealt with by him on a business basis, and he should be left free to make his contribution in the form which he prefers, and not have others make them for him.

We now have conscription in human flesh in Canada. Premier Borden was loudly acclaimed for his action in adopting conscriptive measures, which means that certain men may no longer do as they please about enlistment. But the Premier would be just as much commended if he conscripted wheat and coal. Why not conscription in fuel and food? Is the wheat and fuel to be thought of more value than man? If men are to be forced to go to war is it out of reach of Premier Borden and his government to force those who control wheat and fuel supplies?

The Record, the only daily newspaper in Windsor, says that no city of thirty thousand or under is well-served with two dailies, and advocates that these papers should be merged, pointing out that merchants are "held up,, for advertising in two papers, and many readers taking two papers. Politics is mainly responsible for the dailies, but as the day is passing when any responsible, privately owned paper will tie itself up to any political party, so the day is approaching, hurried on by the high price of newsprint, and the fact that advertisers in small cities do not deem it necessary to advertise in two papers, will have but one daily paper. This reasoning applies as well to small towns where two weekly papers exist.

An amendment to the Noxious Weeds Act passed at the last session of the legislature makes it now obligatory upon all municipalities, both rural and urban, to appoint one or more inspectors to enforce the provisions of the Act, and further providing that such inspectors shall hold office until their successors are appointed. In 1915, there were 603 inspectors appointed, but many of these held office only for a few weeks during the months of June and July. In 1916, as a result of the amendment above mentioned, 1,303 inspectors were appointed and these inspectors are responsible at all times for the proper enforcement of the Noxious Weeds Act.

The compulsory service bill promises to give some interesting sessions to parliament. The farmers of Ontario and other provinces are not unanimous concerning conscription, and letters are pouring into their parliamentary representatives. The Liberal convention at Tara should be an interesting one. This constituency is purely an agricultural one, and as this is the first big gathering of representative Liberals the speeches of the various men who aspire to the candidacy of the riding ought to be interesting. No doubt they will all want to state their position on the big public questions, and as conscription, prohibition, and all matters pertaining to the best way to win the war are the ruling things now, the speakers will be in good shape to say something interesting.

School Fairs

The rural school fair has taken a great hold in the districts. Not only have thousands of children become deeply interested but the parents and older brothers and sisters as well. It was a great stroke of business on the part of the Department of Agriculture when the rural school fairs were introduced, and as long as it can keep the contests and the prize-winning away from the money basis they will continue to grow in interest and educational value.

One of the great features of the school fairs is the privilege of having expert judges, and the greatest feature of that judging that any boy or girl can get exact information as to why a prize was given or was not given.

It will be interesting to note the growth of the rural school fairs in the following figures:

	1915	1916
Number of fairs held	234	275
" schools included	2,391	2,629
" children taking part	48,356	60,962
Attendance of children at fairs	72,860	83,079
" " adults at fairs	64,406	178,246
Total attendance	167,266	178,246

Lloyd Seaman Writes Home

In a letter to his mother at Port Arthur, Pte. Lloyd Seaman, a grandson of Robert McClure, well known here, says:

I guess you will have read in the papers all about the "spring push" long before this letter gets to you, but I don't think you realized what part your young hopeful took in it. I was picked for a party of signallers to keep up communications between the advancing infantry and the guns—a job which entailed not a little danger.

When the big day—Easter Monday—arrived, it found us waiting to go over with the first wave of the big attack. It was a new experience for me, and I could write whole books on the different emotions which in turn possessed me, but will confine myself to facts as much as possible.

The attack was to come off at daybreak (5 30 to be exact), and all night we had been waiting in an underground dugout wondering what was going to happen to us and knowing that we all couldn't come back.

It kept creeping on till 5 30 a. m. until we suddenly heard the terrific bombardment begin and knew that the strain of waiting was over. The first few minutes were awful, coming from underground to see the dead and wounded all about us, and then to creep over the parapet into a regular hell of fire.

However, we soon settled down to our job and tried to forget what was going on. We strung out our telephone wire, but before we had gone three hundred yards two of our unit—there were four of us—were shot down, wounded, and it left all the work for the two of us left. We dragged them into a shell hole and patched them up, and then we saw six Germans wandering around. We went after them with our revolvers, but they were so glad to surrender that they came running towards us with their hands up, and we made them carry back the two wounded boys.

The ground was torn and ripped up by our shell fire, and there was a raw, wet wind with rain and sleet so you can imagine how soft the ground was. It was up to the knees in most places, and I went in several times to the waist. We pushed on with the infantry, leaving some of our party (the entire party consisted of some from each unit in the brigade) at different stations along the line until finally we established the end station, consisting of ourselves, over the crest of the ridge, a distance of over two miles from the starting point.

It was a pretty lively time for us, but we accomplished what we set out to do and we received commendation from the colonel and the general. It was at a cost though, for we lost the finest officer—killed—that I ever met, a Varsity boy too. One of our linemen died from his wounds, but the other will live I think.

Two of us and the sergeant from our unit came back, and we were a pretty wretched looking little trio as we stumbled back across the mud to our dugout. When we finally landed there hungry wet and "all in," we found a fire (the warmest welcome I ever got) and best of all for each of us one letter and a big parcel from home.

We took off our clothes, made some tea and opened our parcels, all of which were packed with the same care yours always are. A strong desire to "snuffle" with the nerve tension full relaxed and all those home things before me sort of possessed me. I wonder if you ever could imagine what that parcel, or any parcel means to us out home?

I am in good health and spirits, able to dodge the shells. There is one little experience I had which eclipsed any previous to the day I went over the parapet. We were walking along behind the infantry carrying our extra reels of wire, when suddenly I realized that a sniper had a line on us. We had to just "slog along for about 150 yards listening to that rifle crack about every five seconds knowing just who it was meant for. But I guess we were under a higher guidance, for we both came through it. One bullet passed between my arm and body, another knocked my spoon out of my puttee, while a third just grazed the back of my hand which I did not notice until later. But I think I sprouted a couple of grey hairs in those five minutes.

But here I am still very much alive and in a way glad of the experience. It would cost me some nerve to volunteer for the like again, but having come through all right I am glad of it.

U. B. General Conference

The 28th general conference of the United Brethren church, was held at Kitchener May 10th to 18th. This is the first time the general conference of this church has been held in Canada, and was pronounced the most successful in the history of the church. Besides the officials of the various institutions of the church, there were present about 50 delegates (preachers) representing conferences in almost every state of the American Union from California on the west to Virginia on the east.

The reports of the conference showed marked prosperity in every line. The church can boast of a new publishing house, built within the last few years valued at $70,000, out of debt. The educational institutions will receive the special financial aid and boosting of the church during the next few years. The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor interests were also thoroughly reorganized with capable men placed at the heads who will give their time for the advancing of these interests.

An impressive service in connection with the conference was the memorial service in honor of the deceased Bishops, who died within the last quadrennium, Bishops Barnaby, Barkley and Wright, the latter being the father of Orville and Wilbur Wright, famous for their aeroplane inventions. Bishops Alwood, Hoskins and Wood were re-elected. was an inspiration to the local church at Kitchener, as well as to the Ontario conference at large.

During the conference the Women's Missionary Association sent the following resolution to Premier Borden:

Honorable Sir:—

We, the Board of Managers of the Women's Missionary Association of the church of the United Brethren in Christ representing a membership of 1926 assembled in annual session in the city of Kitchener Ontario rejoice at the passing of Provincial Prohibition as a war measure in Ontario and also the steps that the rest of the sister provinces have taken to preserve the man power of our beloved country, but realizing that while liquor is manufactured and imported these measures are not as effective as may be desired, therefore we humbly pray your honorable body to enact us Dominion wide prohibition or at least to forbid the manufacture of liquor in the prohibitive provinces and the importation of same into such provinces.

The above was signed on behalf of the Board by Miss M. Tims, President; Miss Ida G. Sellers, Rec. Sec; Mrs. J. E. Hoge, Mrs. C. Nicholson, Mrs. J. B. Bricker.

Garros, Now a Prisoner, Is Still the Greatest Airman of All Armies

WITHOUT disparaging the feats of skill and daring done by the German aviators men like Boelke, Baron von Althaus, and Lieutenant Immelmann, it may fairly be claimed that the British and French aviators are their superiors. The greatest achievement of an aviator in this war stands to the credit of a British flight officer, Lieut. Warneford, who single-handed attacked and destroyed a Zeppelin. It was as though a humming-bird destroyed an eagle. To the deep regret of the British Empire, Lieut. Warneford was accidentally killed a couple of days later when testing a new machine. Roland Garros, the famous French aviator, now a German prisoner, is one of the most daring and skilful aviators whom the war has developed, though indeed he was a famous trick flyer in days of peace. He had destroyed several aeroplanes before being forced to descend in enemy territory and surrender.

One of his exploits, which showed not only the daring of Garros, but his humanity, occurred some months ago. A new German machine, an Aviatik, was sighted approaching the French lines at terrific speed. Half a dozen flyers with their pilots dashed for their machines, but before one of them was seated they heard a whirring noise overhead, and saw Garros, first, as usual, and alone, rising for the contest. Garros flew low, keeping in the shadows. The Aviatik passed him and apparently did not notice the Frenchman. Then he suddenly rose in the rear of the German and began to circle and climb. Before he could get high enough he was spotted, and the German craft wheeled and dropped bombs, which missed Garros, who mounted higher. Then came the rattle of machine guns, and the observers could see white patches in the wings of Garros' machine where the bullets had struck. Garros did not fire. He continued to wheel round and round in a narrowing circle. The Aviatik could not pivot quickly enough to keep the range, and it, too, began to circle. At 400 yards Garros opened fire with his mitrailleuse. First the German gunner collapsed, then his pilot. The Aviatik burst into flames and dived 1,800 feet. The New York Times says "Garros circled gently to the ground and lighted 20 yards from the burning mass. As he approached it he uncovered and saluted. He stood there silent, perhaps sorrowful. As the other airmen rushed forward to the marsh yelling like Dervishes, Garros walked away. They saw tears running down his cheeks."

ROLAND GARROS.

Whole Regiment Missing.

When the war drum beat its call throughout Great Britain, among those who offered their services to their country were the eligible men employed on the Sandringham estate of King George. As a compact body they were incorporated in the Fifth Norfolk Regiment and in due time were sent to the front, their post of duty being on the Gallipoli peninsula, where the Anglo-French forces were making brave but futile efforts to force the passage of the Dardanelles. Because of the fact that the King knew all of the men from Sandringham personally he took a deep interest in the fate of the Fifth Norfolk and naturally the entire nation shared in the interest.

One day the regiment charged into a forest which was held in strong force by the Turks, and since that charge, which English writers are comparing with the charge of the 600 at Balaklava, immortalized by Tennyson, not one word has been heard of one of the number. Whether they were killed or captured is unknown. Efforts are being made in England to learn through diplomatic channels what fate befell them.

ELSINORE

The death of William J. Johnston, at Elsinore, on Saturday, removes a respected and highly esteemed resident of Arran Township. Four years ago he fell off a load of hay and had been in poor health ever since, but the immediate cause of death was the bursting of a blood vessel in his head. Deceased was 45 years of age and spent his entire life in Arran Township, and was a son of the late Joseph Johnston. He is survived by his wife and two sons. Two brothers also survive—Robert, of Arran Tp., and Joseph, Reeve of Arran Township. The funeral was held on Monday to Southampton cemetery under the auspices of the Orange Order of which deceased was a member.

Some of us grow more generous as we grow older, but Mr. Mose Ziegler has us all topped. Some friends who went out in a car for a bag of chop were given a sack of sugar instead. Possibly Mose thought they needed sweetening.—Beacon.

ALLENFORD

A cloud of gloom was cast over Allenford on Tuesday, when it was learned that Mary Hewitson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hewitson, had passed away. Deceased had been ill for the past five months from stomach trouble. She was born at Allenford thirty two years ago, and for many years clerked in Haskett's store. About a year ago she took a situation in a general store in Galt. She was a bright intelligent girl and beloved by a large circle of friends. For several years she acted as correspondent for The Times at Allenford, which position she filled very acceptably. She is survived by her parents and three sisters, Mrs. W. Haggerman, Humbolt Sask.; Mrs. Jas. Crow, Arran Tp., and Ava at home. The sorrowing relatives have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

Algonquin Park

The Highway to Health and Happiness

No better place could be desired for a real holiday for red-blooded men and women than Algonquin Park, situate about two hundred miles north of the City of Toronto. It is an unspoiled territory of nearly two million acres, starred with beautiful lakes and intersected by winding streams. No resort in Canada can approach it in the wealth of attractions it offers to the lover of out-of-doors.

Away up in the Highlands of Ontario, two thousand feet above the level of the sea, the Park is a wonderful spot in which to renew the energies of a tired body or refresh a wearied spirit. Its tonic air filters through hundreds of square miles of pines, balsam and spruce; the days are unusually long with bright sunshine while the cool evenings are a time of enchantment. The Park is a paradise for the fisherman and canoeist; the excellence of its sport draws anglers from every part of the Dominion and from every state in the union, while the canoeist can travel for hundreds of miles in his light craft and be in a veritable kingdom of his own.

The accommodation in the park is such that the most varied tastes can be placed. There are hotels for those who want to be in the wilderness yet enjoy all the comforts that good service and social companionship can bring; there are groups of log cabin camps, comfortably furnished ideal for family parties with central lodges containing recreation and dining rooms where you may dine and find everything ready for you on your return from the tramp; or if you have planned to camp under your own canvas you may step into a canoe at one of the little railway stations, and after a short paddle find a site unmarred by the hand of man yet within easy reach of the Park outfitting stores.

Many families now go into the Park expressly for the camping, making their headquarters at the hotels long enough to get supplies and camping outfit ready for the trip. Then in canoes, and with guides or without them, they launch out into the deep woods, camping where fancy prompts.

A handsome illustrated publication telling you all about this famous park is issued by the Grand Trunk Railway and a copy can be had free on application to C. E. Horning, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson X. June 3, 1917.

Jesus Betrayed and Denied.—John 18: 1-18.

Commentary.—I. Jesus in Gethsemane (vs. 1). 1. These words—The discourse and prayer, included in John 14-17. He went forth—Jesus and his disciples, except Judas, who had gone forth previously, left the upper room. Some scholars think they left the upper room before this (John 14: 31). If that is true, the now "went forth" from the city of Jerusalem. Over the brook Cedron—This is a ravine on the eastern side of the city in which a stream flows in winter, but is dry during the rest of the year. This ravine lies between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives. A garden—This was Gethsemane, the name meaning oil press. A garden is now shown to travellers on the western slope of the Mount of Olives, which is said to be Gethsemane. In it are several very old olive trees. The claim is made that one of these is the one under which Jesus prayed. This claim is probably without foundation, but it is certain that the garden was not far from there.

II. Jesus betrayed (vs. 2-9). 2. Judas also—Judas Iscariot, the betrayer, as well as the faithful disciples of the Lord, knew the place and knew that "Jesus ofttimes resorted thither." Jesus made no effort to escape the betrayal and what followed by hiding himself or by going out of his usual course. 3. Having received a band of men—Judas had made a bargain with the Jewish leaders to betray Jesus to them for about fifteen dollars. Arrangements were made to employ a part or the whole of the Roman garrison of the castle Antonia to arrest Jesus. It was considered necessary to take more than ordinary precautions, for he whom they were to arrest was no ordinary man. There was probably a fear that an attempt would be made by his friends to resist the soldiers and a riot might follow. In the company that followed Judas were Roman soldiers, Jewish officials and chief priests. With lanterns and torches. The ordinary equipment for night duty, since the paschal full moon would not render useless. It was possible that dark woods or buildings would have to be searched.—Cam. Bib. Weapons—Swords for the soldiers and staves or clubs for the rest. 4. Knowing all things [illegible]—Jesus understood the general plan and the details of the conspiracy against him. John here declares Christ's divinity by saying that he knew all that was coming upon him. Whom seek ye—Jesus went forth to meet the company that had come to arrest him, for the hour had arrived for him to be delivered into their hands. In asking this question he would make his enemies realize what they were doing and that their great preparations for arresting him were unnecessary. It may have been also to shield his disciples by calling attention to himself. 5. Jesus of Nazareth—The reply came without any apparent hesitation. Nazareth was held in contempt and for that reason it may be that the leaders of the company were quick to answer the question that Jesus asked. Jesus saith unto them, I am he—Jesus did not in any way resist his enemies, but took a course to show that he had nothing to conceal or to fear. Judas [illegible] stood with him—The betrayer was prominent in the company that sought for Jesus and showed his despicable character by using a token of friendship to deliver him to his enemies. From Matthew's account we learn that Judas kissed Jesus effusively. Judas came later to realize his awful sin. He returned the money he had received for betraying Jesus and committed suicide, but there is no record that he repented. 6. Fell to the ground—There was a supernatural display of power that caused the crowd to go backward and fall to the ground. It showed that an armed company of soldiers and Jewish officials were powerless before Jesus of Nazareth, whom they sought to arrest. 7. Then asked he them again—The enemies of Jesus had been overcome once, but [illegible] them commit [illegible] let these go their way—Jesus would not have his disciples [illegible] the sufferings that [illegible] the point where he was [illegible] himself up to Jewish rage [illegible] his [illegible] the saying [illegible] he had given [illegible] in his prayer [illegible] Father [illegible] hour [illegible] in the [illegible] Christ [illegible] in all ages.

III. [illegible] 10. Simon Peter having a sword [illegible] the [illegible] in Luke [illegible] John alone [illegible] the disciple [illegible] the high priest [illegible] Jesus if they should [illegible] sword. Peter's [illegible] to try to defend his Master [illegible] the servant [illegible] The sword shall [illegible] The healing of [illegible] the last miracle [illegible] cup [illegible] 11. [illegible] shall I not drink it [illegible] Lord suffer [illegible] Jesus had [illegible] that the cup of suffering [illegible] him [illegible] will [illegible] to God with [illegible] his disciples [illegible].

IV. Peter's denial of Jesus (vs. 12-18). 12-14. The entire [illegible] took part in securing him. They were [illegible] with his power [illegible] being hurled to the ground, and his saying that he could [illegible] the Father and would give him more than twelve legions of angels for his defence. They took Jesus first before Annas, the father-in-law of the high priest Caiaphas, for a preliminary hearing. Caiaphas had declared to the Jews that it "was expedient that one man should die for the people" (v. 14). 15. Simon Peter followed Jesus—The eleven disciples had forsaken Jesus and fled when he was arrested, but Peter and "another disciple," almost certainly John, followed Jesus to the palace of the high priest and went into the palace, but Peter remained outside. 16. Brought in Peter—The description here is minute and indicates that the writer of the narrative was a witness of what was done. John was interested in his fellow disciple and made use of his acquaintance with the high priest to favor him. Peter, in common with the other disciples, had been quick to forsake Jesus, but he was quick to come back to see what would be done with him. 17. The damsel that kept the door—The one to whom John spoke, requesting her to admit Peter. Art not thou also one of this man's disciples—This question came with suddenness and directness to Peter. The young woman recognized him as one of the disciples of Jesus and in her contemptuous question accused him. He saith, I am not—John had hurried on to the room where Christ was being examined; as at the cross (John 19: 26) he kept close to the Master; and in neither case was he molested. Peter, who "followed afar off," and that more out of curiosity "to see the end" (Matt. 26: 58) than out of love, encountered temptation and fell.—Cam. Bib. 18. Peter mingled with the servants and officers who were warming themselves about some burning coals, thus hoping to escape observation.

Questions.—What words had Jesus just spoken? Where was Cedron? Where was Gethsemane? Give the meaning of the name. Why did Jesus go there? Who came with Judas to arrest Jesus? Describe the betrayal. How did Jesus show his power? What request did Jesus make for the disciples? What rash act did Peter commit? To whom was Jesus taken? Give an account of Peter's denial.

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Love wounded.

I. When Judas proved to be a traitor.

II. When Peter denied discipleship.

I. When Judas proved to be a traitor. The "decisive hour" came when Jesus passed over the brook Kidron. He was under the guidance of perfect wisdom. He alone comprehended the nature of the crisis in the moral history of mankind. All his approaching agonies were simultaneously present to his mind. He was ignorant of what was coming. He had mentally gone through all the events of the coming hours. With him there was absolute knowledge that he was in harmony with the will of God. The "cup" was prepared in the Father's wisdom, appointed in the Father's love, designed for the Father's own, accepted for the Father's sake. The "cup" included all the bitterness of suffering, the agony of body involved in the crucifixion, the mental distress involved in his betrayal, denial and desertion, in the apparent success of his enemies' plot, and in the fickleness and ingratitude of his countrymen, the anguish of soul-conquest upon his consciousness of the world's sin, its estrangement from God, and the burden of his sacrifice. When the event of this lesson took place, Jesus was in the garden of Gethsemane, where he had passed "his agony." He was about to endure the indignities of the trial and the anguish of the cross. His thoughts were not of himself, but of his disciples. Knowing the danger to which they were exposed and the weakness which still characterized them, he was concerned on their behalf, that they should not be exposed to a trial which they were not then able to bear. His disciples would die as witnesses, he knew, but they were not ready spiritually for that, therefore Jesus cast around them the shield of his protection for the time in order that their weakness might have time to change into strength. It was necessary for the purpose of Christ's kingdom that the apostles should be spared. Jesus advanced to the spot where Judas had planned to betray him, with no trace of fear, agitation or weakness, as calm as though he had an appointment to meet him there. The kiss of Judas was unnecessary for Jesus introduced himself to the men who sought him. Until he had explained his real position, Judas had no power to capture him. Jesus revealed himself to the men who were hired to shed his blood.

II. When Peter denied discipleship. Peter, indignant at his Lord's betrayal and arrest, impulsive in his nature and impetuous in his action, seeing his Master in danger, drew his sword and [illegible] it. His act was directly opposed to the precept of his Master. Jesus [illegible] and [illegible] the use of carnal [illegible] in His [illegible] Peter was [illegible] for him [illegible] to protect Him. He not [illegible] of love, zeal, faith and sincerity. To follow, as Peter did, Christ who was being led by Roman soldiers to a mock trial and who in a few hours would suffer a terrible death by crucifixion, revealed bravery of heart of no small degree. Strange to say, Peter was unprepared for his faint-heartedness in the time of trial and danger. His introduction into the court of the high priest by John brought him into dangerous association with Christ's enemies, where he was recognized by those who had seen him in Gethsemane and who knew of his assault upon Malchus. There was a combination of fear and presumption in Peter's presence among Christ's enemies. It was the sincerity and strength of Peter's love which impelled him to follow Jesus when his companions fled without [illegible] which had secured Peter's conduct, when he was thrown off his guard, was in strong contrast to his former confidence. The vanity of violence was followed by the folly of fear in his vain attempt to conceal his connection with Jesus. He attempted to secure personal safety at any cost. The disciple disowned his Master, the servant, his Lord. The difference between Judas and Peter, between betrayal and denial, lay in the purpose of heart. Judas pursued knowingly a criminal course. Peter through sudden fear thought only of self-preservation without disloyalty of purpose.—T. R. A.

THE RURAL PROBLEM.

"What I think is the greatest rural problem is the abnormal drifting of young men from the country to the city. We must keep a more liberal percentage of our young people on the land if we are to make good. In reading up Roman history, I find the old writers lamenting the fact that the people were leaving the vineyards, and flocking to the cities, and Rome fell."

With these words Prof. E. A. Howes, Dean of the Faculty of Agriculture, University of Alberta, introduced his remarks on the rural problem of keeping the young men, and young women, on the farm, in his address before the convention of the Western Canada Irrigation Association at Kamloops, B. C.

"The only [illegible] is to [illegible] farm [illegible] conditions and surroundings. There is room for great improvement in the home conditions. Making the homes [illegible] has a great deal to do with holding the young people there.

"Another difficulty is the scant [illegible] that the boy gets when [illegible]. That is why we want particularly rural education in the public schools, in order that the boy may see that the occupation of the farmer is more [illegible] other profession. Agricultural education should have a place [illegible] it is going to [illegible] the right [illegible] of the public schools [illegible]. Then [illegible] can be recognized as a permanent industry in Western Canada.

"The last year or two [illegible] permanent improvement in [illegible] conditions [illegible]. There is no doubt that the [illegible] of the farm [illegible] the high prices for all farm products is having the effect in checking the movement to the cities. But prosperous conditions on the farm may bring about prosperous conditions in the cities, and the tendency is for the movement to again set in cityward.

The relation of agricultural education to this problem will again be discussed at the forthcoming convention of the Western Canada Irrigation Association, to be held at Maple Creek, Saskatchewan, August 1st to 3rd next.

HOW TO OBTAIN A BUMPER CROP OF POTATOES

Potatoes Yield More Actual Food Per Acre Than Any Other Crop—Seed From Immature Potatoes Gives Best Results—Plant Early and Control Insects and Disease by Spraying.

The price potatoes are selling for at the present time is an inducement for many people who have never grown potatoes before to grow them this year. Potatoes on the Toronto market at the present time are selling for about the same price per pound as wheat. Although prices next fall will certainly not be as high as they are now ($4 per bag in Toronto), they will certainly be high enough to give a good profit if they have been grown properly. Quite apart from the profit, it is a matter of patriotic duty to make the soil produce as much food per acre as possible, and in no way can this be done more effectively than by growing potatoes.

Ireland, which through misgovernment and the unsupportable burden of landlordism, has until comparatively recently been a country composed of poor men and potatoes have always been the staple crop. The peasants have had to economize, and found through experience that potatoes would produce more actual food per acre than any other crop that could be grown in their country. A good way to compare foods is by the amount of starch or its equivalent they contain. A fairly good crop of potatoes would be 250 bushels, and of wheat 30 bushels per acre. 250 bushels of potatoes is equivalent to 15,000 pounds, which contains 2,850 pounds of starch. 30 bushels of wheat is equivalent to 1,800 pounds, which contain 1,282.4 pounds of starch or its equivalent. We thus see that an acre of potatoes will produce more than twice as much food as an acre of wheat.

In growing potatoes great care must be taken in selecting the seed. The best way to do is to select the seed from the hills as the potatoes are harvested, choosing potatoes from hills which produce the greatest number of marketable potatoes. If this cannot be done the potatoes should be of a variety that is a high yielder and from a strain that is known to have yielded well in the last few years. Some good yielding early varieties are Extra Early Eureka, Early Ohio, Irish Cobbler and Rochester Rose. Good medium or late varieties are Davies' Warrior, Empire State, Rural New Yorker No. 2, Carman No. 1, Gold Coin, Green Mountain and Wee MacGregor.

CHANGE OF SEED.

The question is often asked, "Is a change of seed advisable?" The answer is "No," if the variety is vigorous and yielding well, but it sometimes happens that through disease and a succession of bad seasons that the strain becomes weakened in vitality and yield constantly decreases. Under these circumstances a change of seed is advisable.

Potatoes which are immature when dug will usually give better crops the following year than potatoes which have been prematurely ripened by the dry weather, or even that are well ripened normally. It pays, therefore, to buy seed potatoes from sections that are cooler and have a shorter growing season than the district in which they are to be planted. For this reason seed potatoes from northern Ontario should give better results in the southern part of the province than those imported from the United States.

It is, of course, necessary to use only clean potatoes. Some varieties of potatoes are less susceptible to rot than others. Varieties that are comparatively free from rot are Extra Early Eureka, Stray Beauty, Irish Cobbler, Early Ohio, Davies' Warrior, American Wonder and Delaware.

When potatoes are affected with "Little Potato" disease, or Potato Scab, they should be disinfected before planting. They should be soaked for two hours in a solution made by adding one pound of formalin to thirty gallons of water. Experiments have showed that whole potatoes, also, used as sets give better results than cut pieces, but the extra yield is not sufficient to pay for the extra expense of the seed. The sets used should weigh about one ounce, and have three eyes. When it is desired to get an extra early crop of potatoes to catch the early market, the potatoes are sometimes sprouted before planting. Medium sized potatoes are selected before they have begun to sprout, and placed in single layers in shallow boxes or trays with the seed end up. The boxes are then put in a bright, airy, cool place, where the temperature is low enough to prevent sprouting. After a few days the potatoes will turn green and the skin become tougher. The potatoes are now given a little more heat, but still kept in a bright place. From the seed end will now develop two or three strong sprouts. The idea of exposing the potatoes at first is to toughen the skin, most of the eyes will not then develop sprouts, and practically the whole strength of the potato is concentrated on the few sprouts at the end. This is what is desired, for the fewer the sprouts there are the larger the proportion of marketable potatoes. If the potatoes are given plenty of light and the place where they are kept is fairly cool the sprouts will become very strongly attached to the tuber and will not be broken off unless very carelessly handled. Tubers will develop more quickly from sprouts made slowly in a bright, cool place than from sprouts which have grown rapidly in a dark place, and the yield will be heavier. The sprouts should be about two inches long at time of planting.

Most crops do best when the seed bed is firm and compact, but potatoes grow best when the soil is somewhat loose. In loose soil the tubers will be smooth and shapely. On the other hand, if the soil is firm, potatoes are usually misshapen and not so attractive looking. A rich, deep, friable, warm sandy loam soil is therefore to be preferred, but potatoes can be grown successfully on a variety of soils. As a rule the land should be plowed in the spring rather than the fall, but if the soil is fairly heavy fall plowing may be preferable, because the frost may help to loosen up the soil particles. Potatoes should follow clover if possible. The manure should be applied in the fall on the clover sod. If the manure is well rotted, however, equally good results will be obtained by applying it in the spring. Applications of 15 to 20 tons per acre of manure will be profitable, but under no circumstances should long strawy manure be applied in the spring or the soil may become too loose and dry out too quickly. The manure should not be applied in the drills with the sets, as it tends to develop scab.

FERTILIZER REQUIREMENTS

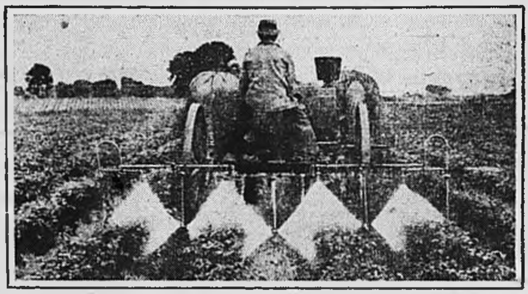
When potatoes are grown extensively artificial fertilizers are usually applied to supplement the barnyard manure. Potatoes require a potassic fertilizer like all other starch-making plants, but owing to the high price of potash at the present time it will not pay to use it and the barnyard manure should be depended on to supply the potash required. 400 or 500 pounds of acid phosphate per acre will probably be profitable and if early potatoes are grown a top dressing of 100 pounds of nitrate of soda per acre may be given after the plants are up a few inches. Alkaline fertilizers such as wood ashes, cyanamide and basic slag should be avoided, as they, like barnyard manure, tend to induce scab.

Potatoes should be planted as early as possible, but they must not be planted too early, or the young vines may be nipped with frost. A safe rule is to plant a week before the last frost is likely to occur. In most localities in Ontario May 15 is about the right time to plant the main crop of potatoes. With early potatoes, however, chances are taken, and they are planted several weeks before this. Early potatoes should be planted more shallow than late potatoes. At the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, it was found that planting one inch deep gave best results, but as a rule they should be planted four or five inches deep. The trouble when they are planted too shallow is that they are very liable to be pulled out when the land is harrowed after the potatoes are planted. The rows should be about 2½ feet apart.

After the potatoes are planted the land should be rolled and then harrowed once or twice before the plants appear above the ground. This will do away with much weeding and cultivating that would otherwise be required later on.

Level cultivation in some cases will give better results than ridging or hilling. In most climates or where there is not much danger of drought during the summer months ridging will give the better results, but if the soil is loose and there is danger of its drying out level cultivation should be practised.

Potatoes are attacked by several insects and fungus diseases. Fortunately destructive as these are, the methods for keeping them in control are comparatively simple, as most of them can be controlled by the same means. Insects such as the Colorado Potato beetle and the Flea Beetle can be killed by spraying or dusting the plants with arsenate of lead or Paris Green. Arsenate of lead sticks to the foliage better than Paris green, but the latter kills more quickly. A mixture of [illegible] ounces of Paris Green and 1½ pounds of Arsenate of lead in 40 gallons of water is better than either one alone. On account of the high price of Paris Green many will prefer to use arsenate of lead alone. 1½ pounds of arsenate of lead should be used to 40 gallons of water.



Take no chances with blight—spray and spray early. Keep the vines covered with Bordeaux mixture from the time the plants are about six inches high until the crop is harvested.

SPRAYING A PAYING PROPOSITION

The above gives the average of three years' tests made at the Ontario Agricultural College in spraying potatoes with Bordeaux mixture. The results show that frequent, thorough, spraying pays.

The Early and Late blights can be controlled by spraying with Bordeaux mixture. It will not kill the blight once it has started, but it will prevent it, so that it is necessary to spray early. Spraying should be started when the plants are about six inches high and the vines should be kept covered until the crop is harvested. Late blight starts on the under surface of the leaves, so that thorough spraying is essential. The figures given in the table of the results obtained at the Ontario Agricultural College show that frequent and thorough spraying pays. When the potatoes were not sprayed the yield was 179.1 bushels, but when they were sprayed five times the yield was 193.2 bushels. When the under as well as the upper surfaces of the leaves were sprayed three times the yield rose to 197.7 bushels per acre. This shows that if the potatoes are thoroughly sprayed less sprayings are necessary.

The Bordeaux mixture is made from six pounds of copper sulphate, four pounds of unslaked lime and forty gallons of water. Dissolve the unslaked lime in water and make the solution up to twenty gallons. Strain the solution through some coarse sacking to remove the lumps. Now dissolve the copper sulphate in water and make the solution up to twenty gallons. Mix the lime solution and copper solution together, stirring constantly while the mixing is taking place. Do not mix the lime and copper solutions before diluting, or a coarser precipitate will be formed, which is liable to clog the nozzles of the sprayer. It is necessary to test the mixed solution to be sure that enough lime has been added to neutralize all the copper, as if the copper has not been neutralized it will burn the foliage. This can be very easily done by testing the solution with some red litmus paper that can be bought at the druggists for a few cents. If the solution turns the litmus paper blue enough lime has been added. If the litmus paper, however, remains red, more lime will have to be added. As has been stated above, the spraying with the Bordeaux mixture should be started early in the season and continued until the crop is harvested. Whenever potato bugs appear the required amount of Arsenate of Lead or Paris Green should be added to the Bordeaux mixture to kill them. These poisons are just as effective when mixed with Bordeaux mixture as when used with pure water.

A PUZZLING CASE

"No, I do not think the evidence is strong enough against him. In fact, if this trial were taking place in Scotland, the verdict, I fancy, would be 'not proven.' But the English law knows no middle course. It is either guilt or innocence, and if Sir Gilbert is condemned for this crime—of which," pined the lawyer, gloomily. "I am utterly at a loss to come to any conclusion. Oh, yes, I know that you think I, being a barrister, should be infallible—that I should at once put my finger on the weak spot of all this conflicting evidence. That I should seize some one by the arm and cry: 'Behold the assassin!' but such things, major, are only done in books where the author knows the end of the story. God alone knows the truth of this strange matter, and unless, by mind you, I firmly believe he is innocent, he will, probably, be imprisoned for life, if he escapes the gallows."

"Still the evidence is not, at present, sufficient to convict him."

"Certainly not, especially now that Ilma Celinski confesses that she has borne false witness. But will she stick to the story she told you, major?"

"She says she will not; that is, if she finds out that Dallas does not love her. I can't say whether he does or not, but I am certain that he does not care for this blind Miss Maxwell, so Ilma Celinski will be satisfied with that, and retract her story. However, as I told you, both myself and Polnter heard her tell the truth, and can swear to it."

"I am glad of that. But I think the only way to get Sir Gilbert out of his difficulty is to force Dallas to tell the truth."

"Which he certainly won't, if it is harmful to himself."

"No, I suppose not. However, he will be here soon," answered Tancred, looking at his watch; "half past. I expect him every minute."

There was a pause of a few minutes duration, each of us being busy with his own ideas.

"Tancred," I cried, at length, "do you think Dallas is guilty of this crime?"

"Ah, that I cannot tell you. Things certainly look black against him. He said he would kill Mazzucata—he sent that Black Carnation from Paris, he changed those bouquets—yes, things don't seem in his favor, and I think he will have some difficulty in clearing himself."

"You can prove all that, I know, but as regards the dynamite cartridge?"

"Ivan can prove that Kutusoff made it and gave it to him."

"Certainly, but he cannot prove how he lost it. Dallas does not know Ivan—he was never in his company, so even supposing the cartridge dropped out of Ivan's pocket, how are you going to prove that Dallas picked it up?"

"Yes, that is difficult. But the crime may not have been committed with that cartridge."

"How else could the explosion have taken place? Why, everything points to that cartridge having been used for the handle of the bouquet—Mazzucata touched the spring by accident—it is exploded, and there you are."

"I don't say such a cartridge was not used," said Tancred, with some asperity, "but I am doubtful as to the special one which was in the possession of Ivan. Kutusoff must have made another."

"He might, and I dare say has made many. Still, you must prove that he gave one to Dallas, in order to bring home the crime to that gentleman."

"Well, I will see Kutusoff."

"Who will say nothing."

"He might not to me, but he is a friend of Ivan, who, I think, is well disposed toward Tressinger, so if I fail, we will set Ivan to work."

"You don't think Ivan is guilty?"

"No, I do not," replied Tancred, decisively. "His conversation quite exonerated him in my eyes."

"Still he had the fatal cartridge—he might have stolen that Black Carnation—he presented the bouquet—"

"True," said Tancred, interrupting me, "but the only two bouquets of that special appearance were in the possession of Dallas and Gilbert—Ivan had nothing to do with them."

"Suppose Ivan is the accomplice of Dallas?"

"I don't suppose anything so ridiculous. Ivan loved Mazzucata, and certainly would not help to destroy her in order to gratify the pride of a rival lover. No, major, Ivan did not commit the crime, and I don't know who did."

"But what is your opinion?"

"My opinion," said Tancred, slowly, "well, my opinion is that the discovery of the real criminal will surprise us all. Come in."

This last was in answer to a sharp knock. We both turned our heads sharply toward the door, which quickly opened, and on the threshold stood Lawrence Dallas.

CHAPTER XV.

Dallas was by no means pleasant at seeing me; in fact, I think he was somewhat disconcerted at the idea of my being present at what could not fail to be a painful interview. Judging by all the evidence I had heard from different people interested in the case, Dallas had acted in anything but an honorable manner; and of this he seemed to be aware, for he only greeted me with a cool nod, while his greeting of Tancred was coldness itself. On my part I was equally dignified, for, in spite of a long training in the world, I am quite unable to conceal my real feelings; and, as I looked on the conduct of Dallas in anything but a favorable light, I could not help showing my condemnation of it. Dallas had more command over himself, and, though obviously ill at ease, was able to preserve at least a semblance of carelessness; yet, I noticed that he addressed himself particularly to Tancred, to the pointed exclusion of myself.

"I am here, Mr. Tancred, according to my promise," he said, in what he strove to render a careless tone, though I detected a tremor therein. "May I ask if you wish to see me on private business?"

"Not private enough to exclude Major Granby," answered Tancred, coolly; "in fact, I asked the major to be present."

Dallas raised his eyebrows in a nasty, supercilious way, which made my blood boil.

"I am not aware that Major Granby has any interest in my private affairs."

"It's not a private affair," I said, hotly, in spite of Tancred's effort to keep me silent; "it is an affair with which the whole world will soon be acquainted."

"Indeed. Perhaps you will kindly enlighten my ignorance, and tell me what you both are talking about."

"We are talking about Mazzucata," said Tancred, promptly.

"Mazzucata!" repeated Dallas, starting. "And what have I to do with Mazzucata?"

"A good deal, according to Ilma Celinski."

"Your pardon, Major Granby," observed Tancred, rather sharply, "pray let me interview Mr. Dallas alone. Afterwards, you can ask him any questions you think fit."

"I will answer no questions, sir," cried Dallas, stung by this speech. "What do you mean by these insults?"

"I think you know, Mr. Dallas."

"I do not know," retorted the young man, obstinately.

As for me, seeing that Tancred desired me to keep silent—and I could not but admit that he was the proper person to interrogate the witness—I held my peace, but watched the verbal tussel between these two enemies with keen interest. Tancred was perfectly cool, but Dallas, in the most foolish manner, had quite lost his temper, and was now making for the door in hot indignation.

"Where are you going, Mr. Dallas?" asked Tancred, serenely, not moving from his chair.

"I am going to leave this room, sir, where I have been subjected to such insults."

"I hope not; for, if you do, it will entail on me the trouble of calling on the nearest magistrate."

Dallas had his hand already on the handle of the door, but at these last words he turned pale, and dropping his hand, looked inquiringly at Tancred.

"What do you mean, sir?"

"I mean, that if you don't remain here and answer any questions myself and Major Granby may think fit to ask, I will take out a warrant for your arrest."

"And for what?" asked Dallas, in a tremulous voice.

"For being concerned in the murder of Marietta Mazzucata."

"It's a lie, I did not murder her."

"I did not accuse you of such a thing. All I said was that you are implicated therein."

"I am not; it is false."

"Come, Mr. Dallas," said Tancred, persuasively, pointing to a chair, "don't you think it would be wiser of you to remain?"

"Of course, if you force me."

"Pardon me, I do not force you, Mr. Dallas. Leave the room if you like at your own risk."

Dallas paused for a moment at the door in order to regain command over himself, then, with a smile of bravado on his pale face, returned to his chair, threw his hat and stick on the table beside him, and placed his hands on his knees with a defiant look at Tancred.

"Now then, sir," he said, harshly, "perhaps you will kindly explain the meaning of this comedy."

"Tragedy," I grumbled in an undertone, "I only hope it will not turn out a tragedy."

"Major Granby, pray let me speak," remonstrated Tancred, upon which I apologized as I always do when I find myself to be in the wrong. Dallas, [illegible] up to this time I had never suspected of being of a violent disposition, shot a malignant glance at me, which filled my soul with righteous indignation. Indeed, so wroth was I at his insufferable insolence, that I was much put to it in holding my tongue, but my promise was given to Tancred, so I kept silent, with the firm determination to speak my mind as soon as I was permitted to do so.

"Well, sir," said Dallas, at this moment, "pray tell me what you wish me to say."

"I wish to know the truth concerning your connection with Mazzucata."

"That is easily told. I met Madame Mazzucata in Italy some eighteen months back, and asked her to marry me. She refused, and then I went to the East, from whence I returned to England some time ago."

"With the idea of again asking Madame Mazzucata to become your wife."

"Pardon me, I had no such intention."

"You told a different story to me on the first night of the opera," said I quickly.

"Possibly," retorted Dallas, with supreme indifference, "I spoke hurriedly, without thinking."

"You certainly did when you said you would rather kill Mazzucata than see her married to another."

"Did I say that," he replied, changing color, "I talked at random."

"It was a very dangerous speech to make," said Tancred, pointedly, "however, we will pass over that for the present. When did you arrive in London?"

"On the sixteenth of May."

"Think again, Mr. Dallas. Was it not on the eighth of May?"

Dallas winced, but still stuck to his assertion with the utmost effrontery.

"Of course, if you know more than I do, it is useless for me to reply to your questions, but in spite of your contradiction, I assert that I was not in London until the 16th of May."

"And on my part, Mr. Dallas, I do not assert, but know that you were in London on the 8th of May."

"It's a lie."

"Gently, Mr. Dallas. There is no need for you to lose your temper over this matter."

"I do not like my word to be doubted."

"That's very probable. Still, in this instance, I must beg leave to hold to my own opinion and deny your assertion."

Dallas bit his nether lip in a transport of fury, and afraid to again repeat his falsehood, contented himself with being insolent.

"As you know so much of my movements," he said, contemptuously, "perhaps you can tell me what I did with myself during these seven days you assert I spent in England."

"Willingly," replied Tancred, taking him up promptly, much to his astonishment and dismay, "you left your valet in Paris with the luggage, and told him you were going to see some friends in Amiens. Instead of stopping there, however, you came straight on to London, in order to find out the true position of affairs between Mazzucata and Sir Gilbert Tressinger. Ilma Celinski, whom you pretended to love, told you all you wished to know, and in order to frighten Madame Mazzucata into breaking off the match, you determined to send her a Black Carnation, of which flower she was superstitiously afraid. Not knowing where to get one, you asked Ilma Celinski, who informed you about Maxwell being the father of Mazzucata, and possessor of the Black Carnation. Thereupon, you went to Lippinton and stole a bud from the plant when you were in the greenhouse with Maxwell. On returning to town, you were afraid to send it direct to Mazzucata, lest she should guess the sender was in London, so you forwarded it to Paris, enclosed in an envelope, which you directed your valet to post in Paris, which he did. Then you left a letter at Amiens, which the station master was requested to post on the 15th, directed to your servant in Paris, telling him to come on. He did so, and you, pretending that you went on from Amiens on the 15th, met him in London, so to all appearances you arrived from the East on the 16th of May. Now, what do you say, Mr. Dallas? Is your time sufficiently accounted for?"

Dallas tried to answer, but his throat was so dry that he could not utter a word, but sat there looking deadly pale, with an expression of horror on his face as though he saw in his mind's eye the abyss which lay before him. Evidently, he was thinking that if Tancred knew this much, the chances were that he knew more, and the very idea of such a thing caused him to shudder at the consequence of such unforeseen knowledge.

"Well, Mr. Dallas," said Tancred, for the second time, "and what do you say now?"

"I say that all this is false."

"Impossible. I have evidence to the contrary."

"You have had me watched."

"By no means. All this evidence can be verified by your valet, and by Ilma Celinski."

"Ilma Celinski," repeated Dallas, with a gesture of despair, "then that woman has betrayed me."

"If you like to call it so, yes, but she did not play you false until you betrayed her. You said that you loved her, when you worshipped Madame Mazzucata."

"Yes, that is true, but now——"

"Now," interrupted Tancred, boldly, "you love Miss Maxwell."

"What? that blind woman," said Dallas, derisively; "there you are quite wrong. I do not care two straws about her."

"Then you still care about Ilma Celinski?"

"I hate her," said Dallas, between his clenched teeth, "the traitress—she has behaved shamefully."

"Not more shamefully than you, Mr. Dallas," cried I, indignantly, "seeing that you suggested that evidence which was intended to hang Sir Gilbert Tressinger."

"Who says I did such a thing?"

"Ilma Celinski."

"I am being betrayed on all sides. I congratulate you on your craft; gentlemen. But whither does all this tend?"

"To the exculpation of Sir Gilbert Tressinger."

"I hate him! I hate him!" cried Dallas, vindictively, "he stole from me the heart of the woman I loved."

"Yes," I replied, with irony, "the woman you loved so much that you murdered her."

Dallas sprang to his feet with a cry of rage.

"It is false! false, Major Granby. I acknowledge that all your evidence about Paris, about the black carnation, about my visit to Lippinton is true, but I do not acknowledge that I killed Mazzucata. I swear by all that I hold most sacred that I am innocent of this crime."

"Then why did you change the bouquets at the Hotel Europa?"

"Ilma again," said Dallas, bitterly; "the little fiend. Yes, I did change the bouquets at the Hotel Europa, and why? Because I thought that Sir Gilbert would personally give the flowers to Mazzucata, and that I would have the happiness of seeing her appear on the stage with my bouquet instead of his own. He defeated my object by throwing his flowers, as I did, from the stalls; but I swear that it was for that reason I changed the bouquets. Do you not believe me?"

"We can only judge your present conduct by your past," returned Tancred, diplomatically, "and how can you expect us to believe you after all the falsehoods you have told?"

The young man flushed red with anger, at being thus so contemptuously spoken to, and, angry as I was at his behavior, I could not but feel sorry for the position in which he was placed, knowing he could not resent Tancred's plain speaking, however he might wish to do so. At first, I thought he would leave the room, but he now seemed to recognize the extremity of his danger, and, swallowing his pride, spoke calmly and to the point.

"I admit to you, Mr. Tancred, that I have not hitherto confined myself strictly to the truth, but that was simply because I resented your interference in my private affairs."

"When your actions become dangerous to the life and liberty of another man, they are no longer private. You have acted in a scoundrelly fashion, Mr. Dallas, quite unworthy of a man who calls himself a gentleman. However, I think you are now coming to your senses, and if so, I will expect you to give us a full history of all your disgraceful conduct before leaving this room."

"And if I refuse?" muttered Dallas, savagely, dropping back into his seat.

"If you refuse I will apply for a warrant for your arrest."

"You have no evidence."

"Pardon me, the evidence of Ilma Celinski implicating you in the affair will be quite enough for a magistrate to grant a warrant. Your proposed victim, Sir Gilbert Tressinger, was arrested on far slighter grounds."

FARM AND GARDEN

SPRING VEGETABLE WORK.

There is really more detail work in vegetable growing than in the growing of the general farm crops. Success or failure depend upon the attention given these small matters.

With all vegetable crops the land must be thoroughly tilled before planting. The heavier or more compact the soil the more care is required in this operation.

The manure must be well mixed with the soil and the ground well worked to at least six inches deep. It is a mistake to rush crops into soil that is not properly prepared, for after planting it is impossible to make up for lack of preparation tillage.

The tillage after the crop is planted should be shallow, so that all weed growth is kept down and leave a fine earth covering on the surface of the ground to prevent evaporation from the soil. A depth of about two inches is sufficient for such cultivation. The cultivation may be deeper when the plants are young, but after the roots start to spread through the soil great injury is done by cutting or exposing the roots, which generally is the result of deep cultivation.

QUALITY OF MANURE REQUIRED.

It is best to apply partially rotted stable manure to the land in the fall, and plow it to a depth of five or six inches. If stable manure is used in spring it should be well rotted, especially where early vegetables are wanted.

Well rotted manure contains plant food that is in a more rapidly available form and can be used by the crop at once. For late vegetable crops, rough and partially decayed manure may be used to advantage if applied in the spring. But it should be borne in mind that, as a rule, manuring in the fall and plowing it under is best for all vegetable crops.

Commercial fertilizers are used to advantage in the vegetable garden. The most satisfactory fertilizer for that purpose is one containing 4 per cent. nitrogen, 6 per cent. phosphoric acid and 10 per cent. potash. The practice is to sow broadcast just before seeding or planting, scattering evenly and mixing with the soil by harrowing. Fertilizer scattered at the rate of one ounce to the square yard represents approximately 260 pounds to the acre.

COOL AND WARM SEASON VEGETABLES.

There are certain vegetables that do best in a low temperature, and may be started in April or early in May, just as soon as the ground can be properly worked. The principal cool season crops are peas, carrots, beets, parsnips, turnips, radish, spinach, lettuce, parsley, cabbage, cauliflower, celery and onions.

Plants for transplanting may be started at a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees. If grown in an atmosphere above this temperature they may be weak and unthrifty and not make satisfactory plants.

The warm season vegetables are tomatoes, cucumbers, melons, corn, beans, peppers and eggplant, and require a temperature not lower than 60 degrees to properly develop. They cannot be set in the open ground until danger from frost is past, or toward the latter part of May. Seed of these sown in the open ground should not be sown until the weather is settled and the ground warmed up, or after the middle of May. Warm season vegetables may be put on coarser and later soils in more northern locations. Southern exposure is always desirable for very early vegetables.

In order to continue a supply of certain vegetables, occasional sowings of the same kind of seed may be made every ten days until the middle of June, with cold season crops, as peas, radish and lettuce, and later with beans. In this way often a supply usually confined to a week or ten days may be spread over several weeks.

A double-wheel hoe is useful where handwork is necessary. With this the surface soil may be worked close up to plant and left in a fine condition, thus doing away with much of the costly hand hoeing and weeding. It cannot be used to advantage in soils that have become hard, nor where weeds have grown large. In small gardens it is indispensable, and also in onion growing, where a large amount of the work must be done by hand.

NOTES.

Two or three coats of thin cement wash applied to the inside of a leaky gutter with a paint brush will stop leaks.

Smear hay ropes with linseed oil before using. It will keep them from shrinking when wet.

Rub axle grease in your plows when through with them. They will not rust then.

The pests of the strawberry are more easily controlled when the location of the plantation is often changed. The leaf spot, or strawberry blight, appears as reddish brown spots on the foliage. It does not usually prove to be a serious pest, but if it should it may be controlled by spraying with Bordeaux solution, just before the blooming period.

In planting a strawberry bed, avoid newly-plowed sod. Plots of this kind are more usually troubled with the white grub. This attacks the roots of the plant, just below the crown, severing it from the roots.

The strawberry will grow in a variety of soils, from a light to a heavy clay or black prairie loam. The soil should be fertile. It should contain a good amount of decaying vegetable (organic) matter. This will tend to hold the moisture. This is a big item in strawberry culture, as they require a large amount of moisture, especially at the ripening period.

A light, sandy soil will bring an earlier berry, but a soil of this type is not so good to withstand draught, yet there are many growers successfully growing strawberries on a light sandy soil.

Frozen cream will not make the best butter.

To a considerable extent by increasing the yield per acre you lessen the cost of production.

To utilize all of the food product of the farm to the best advantage requires a variety of stock.

HEALTHY CHILDREN

It is natural for little ones to be well, and with care every baby can be kept well. The main thing towards keeping little ones well is to keep their little stomach sweet and their bowels regular. Baby's Own Tablets will do this. Thousands of mothers keep the Tablets in the house as they find them an efficient guard against illness. Concerning them Mrs. Hilaire Desmarais, St. Joseph de Sorel, Que., writes: "I believe Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine in the world for children. My baby was terribly constipated but the Tablets promptly cured him and now he is a big healthy child." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Artificial Coloring of Sugar Prohibited by the Government

FOR many years the Canadian Public has been eating Artificially Colored Sugars. Government reports show that some refineries have used Ultramarine Blue to make their granulated sugar look better than it actually is. Others made use of Aniline and Vegetable Dyes to give a brilliant appearance to their soft or yellow sugars.

The use of dyes or coloring matter of any kind is unnecessary in refining Cane Sugar. This is emphasized in a notification sent to all refiners by the Dominion Government prohibiting the coloring of sugar, and in cases where it is found, prosecution proceedings will be entered under the Adulteration of Foods Act.

We Wish the Public to Know that we Have Never Used Coloring Matter in Lantic Pure Cane Sugar and Never Will Lantic Pure Cane Sugar was first put on the market about two years ago. Since that time over 260,000,000 lbs. have been consumed by the Canadian Public, and we are now turning out 750,000 lbs. of Pure Cane Sugar each day.

The reason for this enormous business is not hard to explain. It means that the discriminating consumer has learned by actual use that Lantic Pure Cane Sugar is superior to all others.

[illegible] the most modern sugar refinery in the world, costing over $4,000,000, we steadfastly adhered to our original policy of making only absolutely Pure Cane Sugars of highest quality, in which

NO BEETS ARE USED
NO ULTRAMARINE BLUE IS USED
NO ANILINE DYES ARE USED
NO VEGETABLE DYES ARE USED

During the last two years we were told that we could increase our business in certain sections of Canada, if we would color our yellow soft sugars, as the public were accustomed to the more brilliant color. We refused and are glad we did so. The recent action of the Government has since vindicated our judgment.

Look for the Red Ball Trade-mark

To be absolutely certain of getting Lantic Pure Cane Sugar, see that the Red Ball Trade-mark is on every bag or carton. It is our guaranty to you of Canada's Purest Sugar.

Your grocer has Lantic Sugar in stock or will get it for you if you insist.

OLD MEN AS FIGHTERS.

Both as Privates and Generals They Are Prominent in War.

The present war has decidedly disproved the theory that every man over 40 years is unfit for hard work and belongs to the scrap heap. Not only are all of the German army leaders old men, but also most of the generals of the allies. Hindenburg, the victor of Tannenberg and the Masurian lakes, is 69 years old, General Kluck 67, Field Marshal von Mackensen 65, Field Marshal von der Goltz 70, and Prince Leopold of Bavaria, 70. And these men have won the greatest victories of the war.

Like the old generals, the old soldiers of Germany, and Austria-Hungary, the members of the landwehr and the landstrum, have proven that they are just as efficient as the younger men of the army, and in certain respects even surpass them. Some of the greatest victories in Russia were won by army corps which consisted almost exclusively of landwehr and these troops have stormed nearly all of the conquered fortresses. The Hungarian honveds, who covered themselves with glory in dozens of battles, are mostly between 35 and 50 years of age and among the Tyrolean sharpshooters, who hold the Italians in check on the southwestern front, many men of 60, 70, and even 80 years can be found.

The members of the landwehr and landstrum have, of course, all had thorough military training. When they were called to the colors some of them were fat and others stiff, but a few weeks of strenuous drilling put them in first-class shape. Experience has proved that they stand all kinds of hardships better than the young men, who often have not yet reached their full physical development.

A military writer who accompanied one of the landwehr brigades in Poland states that a regiment on a forced march covered 41 miles in 24 hours and not one man fell behind. A landsturmmer who acts as a despatch bearer was on his bicycle almost continuously for 36 hours.

United Prayer Service Well Attended

The united prayer service held in St. Andrew's Saugeen, was well attended on Friday evening. There were not more than a dozen from town, but the people from the district filled the church.

Rev. Dr. MacDougall, the new pastor, opened the service, and offered prayer. Mr. Archie Bell had charge of the music, and the choir in leading with the hymns, and with special selections, helped greatly in the service. Miss McRae sang very acceptably. "When Wilt Thou Save the People"

The program was in charge of Reeve Christie, under whose suggestions these union services are being held. Splendid addresses were given by Rev. Mann, on "The Great Essential," Rev. Mr. Hallman "Faith in God", Rev. Mr. Brubacher, "Confidence and Fidelity in Christ". Rev. Mr. Backserrough, on "Confession of Sins by the Nations" All the speakers dwelt on the need of the individual having a closer fellowship with God. Special prayers were offered by Rev. Dr. McDougall, Rev. J. J. Ferguson. The laymen taking part in the program were Messrs. J. H. Moir and E. R. Sayles.

A service of the same nature is being planned for Burgoyne.

A Fatal Accident

After being kicked by a horse, frightened by a passing auto on Friday afternoon, Abraham Brand died Saturday evening

Allen McCulloch stopped his horse to give Mr. Abraham Brand, aged 87 years, a ride home last Friday, and while proceeding down the road just past Tom Brigden's, Mr Thomson, in his new Overland, accompanied by Mr A. F. George, passed the rig, going the same way. The horse, which was a young one, took fright, and began to kick viciously, striking the aged man in the side, breaking three ribs, and injuring his left lung.

Assistance was at once given, and Mr. Brand removed to his home, where he passed away.

The late Mr. Brand was born in Kitchener, Oct., in 1829 where he lived until 1871, when he came to Saugeen township, where he farmed. He was married in 1854 to Martha Shank, who predeceased him some 11 years ago. Of a family of 12 children 9 survive.

Deceased was a man well-known, and well liked. He was a great walker, and although in advanced years, he walked from the mountain to town sometimes twice a day. He often remarked that his walking kept him alive. Of late he has been failing fast, and he was frequently given a ride home or to town, and it was in this way he met with the accident that caused his death. He was a staunch Liberal, and a Mennonite in religion. Those surviving are, Miss Susan and Asaph at home, Mrs. Brackow, Southampton; Mrs Hinds and Mrs. J. Schrack, Port Elgin; Mrs. (Dr.) Sproule, Panama; Mrs Winnicott, Huntsville; Samuel at Elsinore; Aaron in Brantford. The funeral took place on Tuesday to Port Elgin cemetery.

This will be your last opportunity to see them. Nearly three hours steady show. Machine and operator second to none. Admission 15c and 25c.

Fred Schildroth's Barn Burned

The severe storm on Saturday night was responsible for the complete destruction of Fred Schildroth's barn on the 2nd of Saugeen. About 10 o'clock a terrific crash of lightning struck the barn and it was soon in blaze. Implements were burned, also some pigs, calves and fowl. There was also burned oats and hay.

The barn carried some insurance. The loss is a severe one for Mr. Schildroth. By hard work of himself and neighbors they managed to save the house.

The barn and implements were insured in the Sydenham Co for $1600.

TO THE GOD OF HARVEST

Ever Blessed Father—We pray that thou wilt reveal Thyself in the harvest of Tomorrow. The world looks to our great land. Stricken fathers, hungrying babes, weeping mothers, turn to us with piteous appeal. Our hearts would fail us but for Thee, our sheltering Master.

Send forth the sowers with unfailing zeal; make clouds gather for drink for parched places; cause the sun to warm all planted seed into multiplied life; enrich the soil with the forces of enlarging growth that our barns be full, famine stayed in the world and strength given to Thy children to perform life's appointed tasks.

Make a rich harvest be Thy ministering messenger to this stricken world, becoming to us a living cord of means by which we may be drawn into closer fellowship with Thee and into more practical co-operation with one another. May we see the "angel in the sun". Amen.

I met Bob McQuarrie and Pierce Campbell also saw Morris Moulton and Herb Hartner, who is from Southampton. I went over to see Roy Thomson, but as you know he has been wounded, and was away. I am trying to locate Frank Geddes. Donald Robertson and I were together in the hospital in England. We have quite a bit of work to do, and we are working till midnight as well as all day now.

GRADING DIAMONDS.

Qualities in Stones of the First, Second and Third Water.

"A diamond of the first water should be entirely colorless and transparent, without any inclusion or flaw," says the Scientific American. "It is of the second water if it is colorless with small but unimportant faults or if it is without faults, but with some traces of color, and third water if it is colorless, but with larger faults or if it is distinctly colorless. The correct valuation is therefore very difficult and often subject to the jeweler's judgment. For this reason Professor Rosiwal gives to the layman the following hints:

"The requisite in stones of the first water is perfect lack of color or, what is more highly prized, a tinge of blue. In general, beautifully colored diamonds command fabulous prices and are to be found only in the treasure vaults of princes.

"Stones of the second water are numerous. They are supposed to be microscopically pure, but almost always show some inclusion. There are oftentimes traces of yellow color in this grade, and because this can be seen best in sunlight one should never buy diamond at night, for the prevailing lights cause stones that are even noticeable yellowish to appear clear.

"Most of the stones of the ordinary market are of the third quality, and the dealers try to cover up their faults by combining them into groups for bulky stones or for the popular pendants, diamond hearts, marquise rings, etc. While they may be colorless, they are often so full of flaws that they would be ranked as 'bort,' or diamond good only for mechanical purposes, if there had not been such a demand for the gems as to increase the price."

Aptly Described.

"I have been courting her for two years," said the disconsolate one, "and I am certain that she will refuse me when I propose."

"Ah, that is interesting," said the amateur photographer—"a sort of undeveloped negative."

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.
Yarmouth, N. S.

Gentlemen,—I beg to let you know that I have used MINARD'S LINIMENT for some time, and I find it the best I have ever used for the joints and muscles.

Yours very truly,
THOMAS J. HOGAN,
The Champion Clog and Pedestal Dancer of Canada.

NEWEST IN VEILS.

The very newest veils are charming and alluring. Both sexes admit it, for what man can resist a pleasing face behind an enhancing mesh?

Small, trim shapes for spring wear have made the veil unusually popular this season, for, while the slightly-roughened hair may look well, and even increase the illusion of youth under a broad-brimmed hat, the very narrow brim or the brimless chapeau demands a neatness that only the properly-adjusted veil can give.

Smartness is often obtained by inverting a richly-bordered veil so that the border ornaments the crown of the hat.

Beaded and metal designs appear in very narrow chin borders, but will disappear soon after early spring. Very fascinating is the Cleopatra veil ornamented with moons of cut steel beads, usually on a taupe mesh.

Soutache designs are shown both in deep and narrow borders, the deep borders being inverted and worn with the pattern over the tall military turbans and simple high-crowned sailors, while the narrow border effects are used in draped or in semi-draped arrangement.

Double borders are sometimes worn by ultra-fashionables, each border being in a different color. Thus a black hexagon has a two-inch border in champagne color, and a navy blue border three inches in width. The plain mesh of such a veil is used over the hat, the blue border over the central part of the face, and the champagne border on the chin. This, of course, is an extreme style.

There are many very attractive new shadow and scroll patterns. A shadow daisy design in navy blue has a centre of gold. However, black and white is the dominant combination, and is more popular than any of the colored effects. Taupe, brown and sand are also good. Among the black and white patterns there is one particularly attractive one of a slender fern embroidered in silvery white silk upon a fine, indistinct black mesh.

New woven patterns in delicately-traced designs in imitation of the fine hand-run scroll effects so firmly established among the high-priced veilings, are appearing among those most moderately priced. Sometimes these patterns are continued to borders intended to be drawn snugly about the lower part of milady's face, leaving the plain mesh over the eyes. Silk in cashmere colorings is used to develop some of the most dainty of the new hand-run patterns.

CATCHING RIVETS WITH NET.

Cutting off rivets makes as a strenuous occupation. Bits of metal are likely to fly in unlooked-for directions, sometimes injuring bystanders very severely.

Safety engineers on the Southern Pacific figure that loose rivet heads flying around with the speed of bullets are not conductive to the general good health and wellbeing of employees or of the public.

Hence, they have equipped all their rivet-cutting gangs with wire baskets mounted on long wooden handles. When using one of these devices a rivet cutter angles for the head when it comes off in much the same way as entomologists and youngsters seek to capture moths with butterfly nets—in fact, the rivet baskets and a professor's butterfly net look a good deal alike.

At any rate, the baskets have proved themselves to be a sure preventative of flying rivets; for they catch their prey before it has flown six inches—thus effectually stopping them in their dangerous flight.

CROSS, SICKLY BABIES

Sickly babies—those who are cross and fretful; whose little stomach and bowels are out of order; who suffer from constipation, indigestion, colds or any other of the minor ills of little ones—can be promptly cured by Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning them Mrs. Jean Paradis, St. Bruno, Que., writes: "My baby was very ill and vomited all his food. He was cross and cried night and day and nothing helped him till I began using Baby's Own Tablets. They soon set him right, and now he is a fat, healthy boy." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

First Use of Siege Guns.

A campaign surpassing the invention and resource of any that went before was that waged by the Turks against Constantinople in 1452-3. Its culmination not only brought the Turk into Europe, but it brought into warfare the use of artillery as a means of reducing fortified cities. Oddly, then, as in the present great war, it was German skill in the handling of cannon that aided the Turks. One Urban, a Wallachian reared in Germany, who had seen service in the armies of German, Hungarian, and Greek before he attached himself to the Sultan's forces, devised the cannon that for fifty days battered the walls of the eastern capital of the Roman Empire. On the recommendation of Urban, the Sultan, before he began his campaign against Constantinople, erected a foundry and in it was cast a gun with a mouth exceeding two and a half feet in diameter and capable of projecting to the distance of about a mile a missile of six hundred pounds in weight. Other guns of a smaller calibre were constructed under the supervision of Urban.

FINGER RINGS.

From Iron Ring of Babylon They Have Had Their Significance.

From the earliest period of civilized relationships the finger ring has been accepted as a symbol of fidelity and truth in the fulfilment of a pledge, according to a writer in the St. Louis Post Despatch, and for the greater part of 2,000 years it was used as the most convenient means of conveying the signet of the wearer.

According to Herodotus, the wearing of finger rings originated with the Babylonians, the ring of those times being of iron. That the custom was gradually transmitted from the Babylonians to the Hellenes is certain, the later Greek historians describing minutely the richly chased gold rings worn as talismans by warriors on their departure for the wars, while at the end of another century every freedman in Greece possessed a signet.

Coming down to the Roman era we find the freedman, in imitation of the Babylonians and Spartans, bearing their iron signet as evidence of the simplicity of their lives, the custom prevailing down to the last days of the republic. Ambassadors alone were permitted to wear the gold ring, this privilege, under the influence of the splendors of the Augustan era, being extended to senators, chief magistrates and equites. Tiberius, however, limited the wearing of the gold ring to the possessors of large property qualifications. Severus conceded the distinction to all Roman soldiers and under Justinian all citizens, freedmen or slaves, enjoyed the right, silver rings being worn by freedmen and iron by slaves.

The third and fourth centuries of the Christian era saw the first use of the ring as a religious symbol, the monogram of Christ being the most revered device, and this custom has in one form or another continued down to the present day.

In the Middle Ages the signet ring was held to be of the greatest importance in religious, legal, commercial or private affairs. Among betrothed couples of the fifteenth, sixteenth and eighteenth centuries many rings were inscribed with words supposedly of talismanic power, such as Caspar, Melchoir and Belthasar, the names of the Magi, while in the nineteenth century nearly all engagement rings bore the familiar "Mizpah" (the Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from the other).

In direct contradiction to the ring of beneficent influence is the poison ring, dear to the hearts of all lovers of the weird, blue lights, the melodramatic.

Historic examples of this sinister agent are the ring containing a hollow bezel with which Hannibal, pursued by the Romans, ended his life at Libyssa; the ring of Demosthenes, the anello della morte of the Borgias, which carried a secret point made to work with a spring, this point communicating with a receptacle for poison in a cavity behind, in such a way that the murderer could give the fatal scratch while shaking hands with an enemy.—Buffalo Commercial.

MIGRATING PLANTS.

Weed That Followed the Bug That Devastated It.

It appears that there exists between certain plants and certain animals a curious association that seems almost like mutual affection. The catnip, which came from the East with the cats, is said never to flourish where there are no members of the feline family to feed on it. The "buffalo grass," in our own country has, it is said, practically disappeared with the buffalo. Then, too, there is the burdock, which seems to cling tenaciously to human kind, evincing an unwillingness to grow where there are no humans in sight.

One of the most extraordinary instances of the apparent migration of a plant as if to "keep company" with an insect was the removal of the homely solanum rostratum from the vicinity of the Rockies eastward. Something like fifty years ago the farmers of the Mississippi valley became aware of the presence of a new pest in their fields. Its ravages soon assumed alarming proportions. A stocky, gaudily striped beetle, which multiplied at an amazing rate, had begun to devour the potato vines. The potatoes, deprived of their vines, rotted in the ground, and an important crop was lost.

This beetle naturally received from the farmers the name of "potato bug." It was found to have begun an eastward march from the then uncultivated strip of eastern Colorado and western Kansas, and it subsequently became known as the "Colorado potato beetle." It was also found that in the region of its origin this beetle had fed upon solanum rostratum, a plant belonging to the same genus as the potato. Doubtless the insect had been quite content with this article of food. But some settlers planted a field of potatoes and the beetle at once fell in love with them.

Migrating eastward in eager search of its new food, the Colorado beetle multiplied with astonishing rapidity. In a few years it had covered the whole country and had devastated potato fields to the Atlantic coast. Then some of the beetles, or their eggs, were carried in vessels across the ocean, and the insect began a new career of conquest in the Old World, for it spread over the British Isles and the continent of Europe.

But what about solanum rostratum, abandoned by its old friend? One would suppose that, left free from the devouring attentions of the beetle, it would have been content to remain where it was. But this was not the case, since the weed seems to have set out immediately on a journey in search of the beetle.

The prevailing direction of plant migration in this country appears to be westward. With the settlement of the country, the plants of Europe and of eastern America tended to crowd out the native vegetation. But the solanum proved an exception to this rule. Apparently it realized that its destiny was to be eaten. Nothing but the potato beetle would eat it, so it came East to find that insect.—Exchange.

Rubbing It In.

The playwright's own latest play was being produced. Sitting in the last row in the orchestra stalls, he listened to its leading phrases. The piece was a complete failure. As the playwright sat, pale and sad, chilled to the heart by the fatal silence, a woman sitting behind him leaned forward and said:

"Excuse me, sir, I have something belonging to you. Knowing you to be the author of the play, I took the liberty at the beginning of the performance of snipping off a lock of your hair. Allow me to return it."—New York Times.

She says, "How do you wash your curtains? They always look so nice."

When we go home she doesn't treat him as if he's a martyr just returned for a taste of the old comfort.

I like her because she credits me with a bit of sense, instead of imagining that I've everything to learn:

"You see, you've earned money yourself, therefore you know the value of it. I was not so fortunate when I started." Rather nice of her, wasn't it?

"Don't drop your girl friends," she said. "A husband's very nice, but I know they're not all-sufficient."

I thought it jolly sporty of her when she said that it had always been her wish to see her boys happily married.

She lets me know when she's coming round, a thing I appreciate, because I don't like her to catch me in the middle of my work, she knows that.

She doesn't keep saying, as she goes over the house, "Now I should do this," or "I should have that there." Consequently I frequently ask her opinion.

When he has a cold she doesn't say, "Dear me!" in the tone that insinuates he wouldn't have had it under her care. She says, "Well, he always was subject to them."

She always asks so nicely after my mother and my people. I think a lot of her for that; she realizes that they are still my people.

Maybe I'm silly, but I always feel I could hug her when she says that she's never seen Jack looking better.

She doesn't incessantly criticise my method of bringing up baby, but admits that many of the modern teachings are improvements on the old ones.

There are times when Tom isn't in the sweetest of moods, but she doesn't make him worse by siding with him, but whispers to me: "Same sort of temper as his father, my dear. I know."

What I like about her is that she doesn't view our marriage from her son's point of view alone, but takes me into equal consideration also.

I've always got the feeling when I'm with her that she likes me for myself, not just because I'm her son's wife and she's got to put up with me.

I wanted everything to run so smoothly when she visited us, and I worked like a nigger (we've no maid.) But she said, "Now, I know what there is to be done. I didn't always have servants, so we'll either let the work go or do it together." I know real relatives who don't look at it that way.

My mother-in-law pleases me because she doesn't say everything she thinks, and, as my ways are not always her ways, I'm grateful to her for that.

She always treats me as if I were such a success, as if she always knew I would be, that I just can't help living up to it.

When she's not feeling well she sends for me to go and see her sometimes, just like a real daughter. There's something about that I always like.

She often praises my cooking. Isn't it nice of her?

THE "RULING LIGHT"

It does somehow get us down to the quintessential difference between the British idea of Empire and all others that have figured in history that General Smuts should be with us heart and soul in our present struggle and be hailed everywhere as one of the most powerful leaders and spokesmen of the British Commonwealth. To the enemy his appearance and that of his "old friend and comrade in arms, General Botha," both as leaders of incomparable skill in the field and as statesmen, powerfully helping to unite the nations under the British flag, is the most perplexing manifestation of these times. They have not the clue to it nor the mental habit which can interpret it. They shrugged their shoulders and thought it another whim of the mad English, which by-and-by would inure to the advantage of Germany, when, at the end of the South African war, we withdrew our army and trusted the men who had been in arms against us to join with their former enemies in working out the free constitution which was to make a nation of South Africa. We have our reward, and when General Smuts appears to receive the freedom of the City of London he is able to claim that now, as always, he is a consistent fighter in the cause of freedom. "When I look at the effort of this nation," says General Smuts, "I declare without flattery that liberty, like wisdom is once more justified of her children."

The same reflection may occur to us as we read the speech on the same occasion of the Maharajah of Bikanir. We have read a German book on the Indian Empire which, after reckoning up the number of troops that we kept in India, declared it to be an absurdity that we should claim to have any Empire at all when we were unable to maintain more than one British soldier to every 4,000 of the population of India. The writer was thinking of those Colonial possessions of his own country in which the military establishments were a large majority of the European population and maintained on a footing of war against the native populations; and he could think of no other test by which an Empire could be judged. We with a contemptible number of troops light-heartedly relying on a civil administration to win respect and support from the overwhelming majority of Indians who surrounded us were "an image with feet of clay" offering an open invitation to a really virile nation like the German to come and demolish us or stir up our Indian fellow-subjects to drive us into the sea. We may find the answer to this in the message from the Indian Princes which the Maharajah of Bikanir is charged to "lay at the feet of his Majesty the King-Emperor," and which he recited at the Guildhall yesterday. The Maharajah has reminded us more than once that our rule in India does not rest on the sword, and let us never forget it. The consent of the 350 millions of India to our government was never assured by the 70,000 troops that we kept there. It rested on the belief that we governed justly and wisely, and could be relied upon to advance with the times and bring the people of India into association with the Government of their own country. The loyalty of the Princes and people of India in the present war is encouraging proof that what we have done so far we have done well, but both look to us to continue the work and to develop the Government of India on the lines of the free Empire, and we have to see to it that they are not disappointed.

General Smuts puts into the forefront of his speech the ideal aspects of the war. He, if any man, knows the value of guns and munitions and multitudes of fighting men, but he is still of Napoleon's opinion that the moral forces are the dominant forces. "Silent invisible forces have," as he says, "been set in motion in this great tragedy, and when the end comes, it will be recognized that it was not so much the valor or strength of our armies that carried us to victory as the inspiration of a great cause." His appeal to us to have faith in this cause, to be patient and constant, neither too much elated by success nor too much depressed by ill-fortune, comes to us at a timely moment, and may be commended, especially to the civil population. There may be times ahead of us in which we shall be called upon to submit to real privation and to make sacrifices beyond any that we have contemplated, but let it be intimated to the Government that we do not need a panic-stricken agitation to make us submit to these necessities but will accept them cheerfully for the cause, if and when they are decreed. Let the appeal to the public be for the cause, let them be brought to understand what the success of Germany by her present methods would mean not only to us but to the whole world, and, as General Smuts says, forces will be set in motion which will be even more powerful than armies. Let the appeal be merely to fear and self-interest, and the greater part of this force will go to waste.

So when General Smuts, appealing eloquently to his own experience, hopes that "freedom will be the ruling light which will guide us to victory," he is doing more than make a phrase in a peroration. If all the Allies and the neutrals can be brought to believe in very truth that their freedom depends on defeating the German attack by sea, we may be certain it will not prevail; and we may rely on every effort and sacrifice to prevent its prevailing. And if all the world can be persuaded that, when they come to the terms of peace, the Allies will really make freedom "their ruling light," the invisible forces of which General Smuts speaks will everywhere rally to their side.—Westminster Gazette.

A BROAD POLICY

In order to encourage the settlement and cultivation of vacant lands in the Western Provinces, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, through its Colonization and Development Department, of which Mr. J. S. Dennis is the head, has undertaken an active campaign to try and induce absentee owners to cultivate their holdings.

A circular has been issued to some 8,000 absentee owners, pointing out the profits which can be made by cultivating their lands, and showing how many farmers sold their last year's crop for more than the original cost of their farms.

The company offers the advice and assistance of its Colonization and Development Department, free of charge, in supplying reliable information as to how to go about getting the land under cultivation and will send, on request, the fullest details as to routes of travel, customs regulations, passenger and freight rates and similar data.

In undertaking this campaign the company is following its usual broad policy of Dominion wide development, realizing that every new settler means greater production to meet the food shortage which at present threatens the world, and which Canada, with its extensive and fertile unplowed areas, can provide.

CLEANING UP DEFENCES OF NEW FOE LINE

Canadians Busy Destroying Gun Positions and Cutting Wire.

KICKED LIVE SHELL

And Our Boys Suffered 35 Casualties, With Five Deaths.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent With the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Headquarters in France, Cable.——Our heavy howitzers continue their work of destroying the enemy's gun positions to the south-west of Lens, while trench destruction and wire-cutting proceed all along the front. The wire-cutting is a slow, laborious task, where the defence system has been well constructed, as the Mericourt-Oppy line undoubtedly was. It takes about ten shells per lineal yard where the belt of wire is thirty feet wide or more to ensure a passage for the infantry. When the stretch of wire and trenches under treatment extends for miles along the front the purely physical work involved is very great, even if the enemy's retaliation is only half-hearted.

From a position on Vimy Ridge yesterday I watched wire-cutting and trench destruction. Across the plain there ran a tell-tale chalk line showing the enemy trench. Standing alone this might indicate only a dummy trench, constructed to draw fire, while the real trench was placed some distance back, but a belt of rusty wire in front proves that the chalk-line is really a trench, representing the Mericourt-Oppy defensive system. Into this rusty streak and chalk line beyond the shells from our batteries drop with remorseless precision, throwing up geysers of the brown surface of the earth, mingled with the underlying chalk.

In all the wide expanse there is not a man in sight. With the shells passing high overhead from our batteries, concealed from observation, if the enemy is holding the trench in any strength, he is having a hard time of it. The probability is that he has temporarily abandoned the trench, which, from our aerial observation, is known to be badly wrecked, and is holding the line by the occupancy of a series of strong posts in isolated positions and provided with machine-gun emplacements.

The Bosche is exceedingly clever in concealing these gun emplacements. A small haystack left in a field, as the custom is here, may have beneath it an elaborate concrete emplacement for a nest of machine guns. I have seen such emplacements with reinforced walls over four feet thick. They can be destroyed only by the direct hit of a heavy shell. As a few machine guns, well handled, can cut up an assaulting battalion, the artillery must keep pegging away till all the known machine-gun positions are destroyed as effectively as the wire.

There is nothing romantic about this sort of warfare. In truth, it is horribly monotonous for the gunners, many of whom, if at home in Canada just now, would be sitting for graduation class photographs, or worrying over anticipated supplementaries in the examination results. Here they are dealing with deadly things. Happily the losses from the enemy retaliation continues to be light. The most serious recent cause of losses was entirely accidental. A soldier kicked an unexploded shell, which, in going off, caused thirty-five casualties, including five deaths. This is the worst accident in the history of the Canadian corps, a reminder of the terrible power of high explosives and the need for vigilance in handling them.

To-day the pipers of the entire corps gave an entertainment behind the lines. Two hundred pipers of the old [illegible] were not [illegible] with our pipers. There were 122 in the massed band. If the enemy aeroplanes were anywhere within five miles of us, they must have thought our whole corps had joined a pipe school.

ASK ASSURANCE FROM ENTENTE

That They Back Ribot's Views, Says Russ Socialist.

Army Delegates Adopt Platform as to War.

Paris, Cable.——Marcel Cachin, one of the French Socialist delegates attending the meeting of the National Council of the French Socialist party, writing in Le Parisien, says:

"Since from now onward that the war objects of the Russian republican Government are the same as its own, the Russian army wishes to feel the same certainty as regards the Allied Governments. Premier Ribot's speech in the Chamber of Deputies will be very useful from this point of view, but more must be done. It will be necessary for the combined Allied powers, in complete agreement, to express themselves in the same way."

RUSS ARMY'S VIEWS.

Petrograd Cable, via London.——The congress of delegates from the front, after a debate on the war, has unanimously voted the following resolutions:

First, the army in the trenches declares that it is indispensable to take every measure to put an end as quickly as possible to the international carnage and conclude peace without annexations or indemnities, on the basis of the right of all nations to dispose of themselves, proclaiming at the same time the watchword, "Whoever wishes for peace must prepare for war"; second, the army, pointing out that the Russian soldiers have been fighting hitherto under conditions infinitely worse than those of the Allies, that the Russian soldier has had to march almost unprotected against the enemy's bullets, and break with bare arms the barbed wire entanglements which the Allies and the enemy pass freely after artillery preparation, declares that the Russian front must be provided with munitions and everything necessary to maintain the principle, "the more metal the less gun fodder."

In conclusion, the congress declares that the army appeals to all to whom free Russia is dear to rally around the council of soldiers and workmen's delegates and the provisional Government, and not to permit "adventurers to let the army become manure for foreign fields."

APPEAL FOR WAR LOAN.

Petrograd Cable, via London.——The executive committee of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates has issued a stirring appeal to peasants, workmen and other citizens to subscribe to the "liberty loan." The support of the loan is urged as a means of strengthening the confidence of the provisional Government.

AUSTRIA ASKS FOR MORE AID

Must Have German Troops to Save Trieste.

Meanwhile Italians Continue Their Advance.

Italian Headquarters, Cable.——There is a good deal of artillery activity. Behind the lines movement is unceasing. The enemy knows it, and is disturbed. He is shelling roads on the Carso—even the little villages this side of the Isonzo—with angry persistence, but without much result. Observation shows he is busy himself getting away guns and other material to safer places. He succeeded in removing most of the guns when threatened by the Italian advance, but our allies captured forty undamaged guns and many more were destroyed. When Selo seemed to be threatened with immediate occupation the Austrians blew up the breeches on a battery of heavy guns. The same thing happened at other places.

North of Gorizia the Austrians keep counter-attacking at Vodice. They have thrown wave after wave of troops against the new Italian lines, and their losses have been very heavy. Moreover, they have lost more ground. The Italians are sweeping down the south-eastern slope of the mountain, taking a trench here and there and picking up a few prisoners.

The Austrian command seems gravely preoccupied. There is news of a council of war at Laibach, and the report that an appeal was made to Germany to send the further help necessary if Trieste is to be saved. The enemy was certainly pushed hard for men in the last attack. When the fresh troops whom they had placed in line a week or ten days ago were broken by the Italian attack the only reserves available were tired men who were sent out of the trenches to march with battalions who had been in the second line. Some of the troops who had just arrived from the eastern front were still weary from the journey.

Between Jamiano and the head of the Gulf of Trieste the Italians have again cut into the Austrian line and occupied portions west of the Village of [illegible], thereby bringing their right wing closer toward Duino and the railway line leading toward Trieste.

DRIVE POLES TOWARD RUSS

Geneva Cable, via Paris.——The Polish State Council has decided to suspend its official functions as a protest against the hostile policies of the German authorities toward Polish national aspirations, according to a communication from Warsaw received by the Polish agency at Lausanne. Two well-known Polish deputies have been arrested, says the despatch, and the Germans seem by their severity to be driving the Poles into the arms of Russia."

RUTHLESS REPRISAL DEMANDED

British Press and People, Roused by Air Raids, Are Protesting.

A REIGN OF TERROR

War Believed Entering On Most Savage Stage of Horror.

London, Cable.——There has been an outburst of fury from British press and platform following Friday's air raid on the southeast coast. The indignation is directed against the too considerate treatment England gives German prisoners and the people demand powerful reprisals.

Public opinion is fast formulating to force the Government to take extreme measures. British treatment of German prisoners has long been under criticism. The prisoners have been kept at long distances from the danger zones, though British prisoners in Germany have been systematically exposed to danger. It is now demanded that German prisoners be thoroughly distributed among the coast towns in the danger area and that German towns be bombarded by aircraft of the Allies.

Various developments indicate that Germany is prepared to announce a policy of unlimited terrorism against the whole world, hoping to cow her enemies. This is indicated by the submarine efforts systematically to destroy fishing fleets everywhere, the persistent sinking of hospital ships and neutral vessels, even when they are guaranteed safe-conduct, and the increasingly cruel treatment of prisoners held in Germany.

Special significance apropos to this is attached to the fact that the German censor is now permitting prisoners to send letters to England describing the horrors of their lives, with insufficient and often indecent food, and how they are compelled to dig trenches immediately under the fire of British and French guns in the most dangerous places.

It is apparent that Germany disregards all possibilities of reprisals, and believes she can terrorize and sicken the enemy countries into granting peace. Berlin hesitated long before committing the country to ruthless submarine war, but having cut loose from humane considerations she is now determined to make ruthlessness her rule, whether against combatants or non-combatant, belligerent or neutral.

The realization that the war is entering its most horrible, most savage stage is bursting on England and France with new intensity.

KAISER'S HATE FOR BRITISH

Amsterdam Cable, via London.——Emperor William, during his recent visit to the Arras front, says the correspondent of the Cologne Gazette, delivered an address to his troops, in which he said:

"The enemy, relying on its experience in the Somme battle, and on his unprecedented supplies of munitions, has been trying to break the German resistance.

"The French flatter themselves with the hope of liberating their country—a good enough motive, but the British have no such justification. They fight only to increase their power, and don't inquire where the right may be.

"Our people and our army stand firmly together. How long this may last must depend upon God's will, but, meanwhile, we must keep firm, and the people in the Fatherland will give us their gratitude.

"In the meantime your comrades in submarines are doing everything possible to cut off the enemy's sources of living."

BRITISH BUSY IN EAST AFRICA

Task of Pursuing the German Troops Resumed.

Chief of Main Enemy Force is Captured.

London Cable.——An official communication issued this evening concerning the operations in East Africa says:

"The exceptional wet season has ended and the improved weather conditions have brought a renewal of the military activity. The early days of May witnessed a general southward movement of the German forces in the Rufiji valley and in the coastal area, and of some to the Matandu valley, while farther south raiders invaded Portuguese territory and approached the border of Nyassaland, burning native villages, terrorizing the inhabitants and removing food supplies to German depots.

"There were many patrol encounters and occasional collisions between larger forces. The German column which evacuated the Mahenge district in February moved rapidly in two main parties, one to the Portuguese border and the other, commanded by Major Wintgens, breaking northward, evading our columns and reaching Kitunda, on their way to Tabora. On May 6 the latter were pursued by British, Rhodesian and other troops. Major Wintgens was captured on the 22nd in the vicinity of Lukalanka, 61 miles southwest of Tabora Bay.

"A Belgian column is co-operating with the British base on the central railway."

SEND JEWS FROM THE HOLY CITY

Turks Have Twice Ordered Evacuation of Jerusalem.

But Germans Prevented Fulfilling of Order.

Information received in Zionist circles from Palestine, the Turks have twice given orders for the evacuation of the Jews from Jerusalem, but that the orders each time were suspended owing to representations from the German Government, which feared for the safety of the shrines and other holy places, and still more the effect upon the world's public opinion. The order of expulsion, however, is still hanging over the heads of the residents of Jerusalem, and the Consulates and public institutions have their belongings packed and their affairs in order so as to leave should the Turkish commander, Djemal Pasha, enforce it as a general measure.

The expulsion of the Jews from Jaffa, according to the same source of information, was due to the chicanery of the Turkish officials, who, when the Jews in Galilee sent horses and carts to aid their co-religionists in their exodus, requisitioned all the horses and then provided for their transportation certain infested railroad [illegible], which caused an immediate outbreak of spotted typhus among the wanderers.

The Jewish colonies were permitted to remain owing to urgent representation of German officers, who pointed out that the provisioning of the Syrian army would be affected if the Jewish farmers were expelled.

GERMANS SOLID BEHIND KAISER

Former U. S. Ambassador Says All Are Imperialist.

War by No Means Over or Victory Sure.

New York Report.——Dr. David Jayne Hill, former Ambassador to Germany, in an address to the [illegible] of the American Defence Society here today, warned that Germany is far from defeat, and discounted the theory that the Hohenzollerns alone are responsible for that country's imperialistic ambitions. He asserted that the present war is a struggle of political systems.

"The people of Germany," declared Dr. Hill, "are more loyal to the Emperor than the Democratic party is to Wilson to-day. The President has said that we have no hostility toward the German people, but do not the German people support the Imperial German Government to a man? Didn't a wave of general rejoicing go all through Germany when the Lusitania went down? How many Germans in Germany can you find who are not imperialistic? I have never found one."

"This," added Dr. Hill, "is going to be a different world if the Central Powers win the war, and it is by no means certain that they will not. Unless we conscript ourselves for this battle and lay our wealth and our lives at the altar of the defence of our institutions, we will find our descendants in the vortex of world-dominating schemes of autocracy."

U. S. WAR BILLS.

House Holidays, but Leaders Are Busy.

Washington Report.—Congress was not in session to-day, both Houses having adjourned over the holiday, but leaders took the opportunity to survey progress on war measures.

Chairman Simmons, of the Senate Finance Committee, in conference with Treasury officials, pointed out that the principal questions of the war revenue bill yet to be determined relate to the Administration's proposed automobile license taxes, excise taxes on coffee and tea, higher, higher second class postal rates, and taxes on public utilities. Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo is urging the committee to report out a bill carrying about $1,800,000,000, as provided in the House measure, but committee sentiment apparently is in favor of reducing it to around $1,500,000,000, the difference to be raised by short term bonds.

Conferees of the Senate and House on the $3,342,000,000 war budget bill to-day still had further changes to consider, notably the provision to regulate the requisition of an American merchant marine, for which $750,000,000 is authorized.

The Administration's food survey and production bill will be taken up in the Senate again to-morrow, and its early passage is looked for. The bill is the House substitute for the measure the Senate has been considering.

CRUISER AND HOSPITAL SHIP

Torpedoed and Sunk by German Submarines.

Total Loss of Life Did Not Exceed Ten.

London Cable.——The British hospital ship Dover Castle and the mercantile cruiser Hilary have been submarined in the Mediterranean and the North Sea, respectively, it was announced to-day. Four of those on board the Hilary were killed.

The Hilary was evidently a converted cruiser, formerly the Booth liner of the same name. The Hilary was built in 1908, was a steel screw steamer, of 6,329 tons, and was registered at Liverpool.

The text of the official announcement reads:

"His Majesty's hospital ship Dover Castle was torpedoed without warning at 6.30 o'clock Saturday in the Mediterranean. At 8.30 she was again torpedoed and subsequently sank. The whole number of hospital patients and the hospital staff were transferred to other ships, and the crew were also saved, with the exception of six men, who are missing, and are feared to have been killed by the explosions.

TERRIFIC AIR BATTLES ARE CONTINUOUS

British Fliers Give the Huns No Respite Night or Day.

A DEADLY FIGHT

Six British Smash Eight Foe Planes in Close-Up Struggle.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Front in France, Cable.——The recent lull in the fighting has had no effect whatever upon the British aerial offensive, which continues day and night with unrelenting intensity. In the last few days there have been witnessed some of the most desperate air battles of the entire war. One or two of these have been fought at the unprecedented height of 19,000 feet, or more than three and one-half miles from the earth.

Recently there was a duel in which a British pilot, having run out of ammunition for his machine gun, got close enough to his antagonist to shoot him down with his revolver. This incident served to recall the fact that when the war began the only weapons which aerial pilots had were pistols and carbines.

Commenting to-day on the dazzling altitudes at which many combats occur nowadays, a pilot said that when he first went to war in 1914 he flew a machine which took an hour and a quarter to reach 6,000 feet.

"That's nothing," said one of his comrades. "The old bus I had in those days couldn't reach 6,000 feet at all."

The aeroplane which could not negotiate 10,000 feet well under ten minutes would be scrapped quickly now.

THRILLING AERIAL BATTLE.

A notable feature of the air fighting in the last ten days has been the tendency of the German machines to break in pieces soon after being shot out of control.

The toll of German planes destroyed in May will mount far into the hundreds. In last Sunday's fighting alone thirty were accounted for. Fifteen were seen to crash to the ground, fourteen were driven down completely out of control, and one was shot down by artillery.

One of the melees on Sunday, between six British and eight German machines, was as thrilling as any aerial battle ever fought. It was at close quarters throughout; so close, in fact, that wings scraped against wings, and fighting pilots could look each other squarely in the eye. No sooner would a British pilot swoop up to the tail of one of the German machines than another German was on his tail. This German, in turn, would almost immediately have another British pilot pouring bursts of machine gun bullets at him. At one time seven machines were following each other in headlong fashion toward the earth.

It was nearly eight o'clock in the evening when the British offensive patrol sighted the eight Germans, well over their own lines. The enemy machines fled, but were eventually overhauled and brought to combat. The commander of the British formation dived at the nearest German, but the latter turned sharply beneath him and escaped the first burst of fire. The commander then attacked another machine, just in front of him, pouring in many rounds at ranges shortening from fifty to twenty yards. The German went down 4,000 yards in a spin, then turned over and continued to fall, completely out of control.

THREE GERMANS SHOT DOWN.

By this time another hostile aircraft was on the commander's tail. He tried to shake off the German, but could not do so, and deliberately went down in a spin. When he flattened out he found the German still with him, and so he again went down in a spin. The German was then attacked by a British pilot, who had followed him down and sat on his tail, riddling his machine with bullets until he went tumbling to earth, swaying back and forth like a piece of paper in a gale.

Spinning and diving, this remarkable battle kept up until three Germans had been shot down. The others having fled, the British patrol returned without a single casualty. The pilot who brought down a machine with seven shots from his automatic pistol already had accounted for two other Germans, making a record of three for the day.

One of the most remarkable escapes from death which a pilot ever had occurred today. While over the German lines his machine was hit by a shell, which tore a hole through it and exploded on the engine, wrecking it. The pilot's leg was fractured in two places, but he brought his machine back over the lines to within five feet of the ground, where he lost consciousness and crashed to the earth. The machine was so shot about that those who extricated the young flier had to pull him through the hole which the shell had made.

Ninety British fliers drop tons of bombs on military establishments back of the German lines.

KAISER AGAIN IN PARTNERSHIP WITH THE GOD OF BATTLES

More Blasphemy by the War Lord — Same Old Lie About Foe's Attacks.

Amsterdam Cable, via London.——According to the Deutsche Tages Zeitung, Emperor William concluded his recent speech to the soldiers on the Arras front with the following words:

"We will continue to fight until we secure a complete victory against those who have attacked us. May the God of armies give us blessing in the war which has been forced upon us, so that our children and grandchildren may live free in the German fatherland."

THE DECISION NEAR.

Copenhagen, Cable, via London.——The correspondent of the Berlin Tageblatt on the western front reports that Emperor William, during his recent visit to the Arras line, addressed delegations from the troops fighting on the Aisne. He thanked them with evident emotion for their heroism in meeting French attacks, and said in part:

"The decision lies near at hand. You will turn it in our favor as you have on every previous occasion, because you realize what you are fighting for—the future of your children and grandchildren, the future of the beloved fatherland of us all."

PICTURES BRITAIN AND AMERICA AS THE REAL ENEMIES OF RUSSIA

Labored Effort by German Writer to Cause Breach Between Allies.

Amsterdam Cable, via London.——George Bernhard, in the Vossische Zeitung, tries hard to prove to the Russians that England is really Russia's enemy, and that an equally weakened Russia would best suit England's book. He continues:

"The United States has consistently supported England's standpoint. On various occasions we personally discussed peace aims in detail with Ambassador Gerard, the last time shortly before his departure. He emphasized to us, not once but repeatedly, that President Wilson felt the greatest interest in the restoration of Belgium, but that the United States would raise no objection to German annexation in the east."

Herr Bernhard advances the foregoing as complete proof of the complete indifference of Russia's allies to her interests, and hopes that Russia will soon realize this fact. He adds:

"American financial interests are already getting their firm and octopus-like grip on Russia's economic body. Instead of developing the national popular economic system so ardently desired by Russians, their country will soon be like a lemon squeezed dry by the Americans. It is Germany alone that can save Russia from such financial serfdom."

A Memorial Sunday

Two very profitable and very appropriate meetings have been held in this district for especial prayer for the allied cause. They have been spiritually blessed meetings, and the expression of the people is: "It was good to be there."

It is understood that these meetings are to be extended to the countryside, and another may be held shortly.

This is something in which the churches should lead. There is a disposition on the part of all classes of people to take things more seriously, and they are ready for more complete devotion to God.

In the great city of Detroit last Sunday thousands of christian people went down on their knees to acknowledge God in a great "Memorial Sunday" that He might grant a bounteous harvest. Although the day was rainy, thousands upon thousands thronged the churches at the various services.

This war will touch every home in this community before it is finished and we believe every person desires to be found doing worthy things and in worthy places. The opportunity of the church stands out to-day as never before. It should lead, and right here and now, in a greater devotion to Empire and to God. It strikes us that the business of the church is to create the right frame of mind. People are looking for leadership. What an opportunity for the ministers and the christian people! If the church of the living God cannot lead us, then to whom shall we look?

We are living in a new world. We need leaders to-day as we never needed them before. A memorial Sunday, might be planned for this district. Let us put away denominationalism for the greater cause of Christianity.

The Half-Grown Man

Edward Bok, in The Journal holds out little hope for the type of man who can do nothing else but look after his little business. He says: Fewer in number is becoming "the half-grown man," and fewer yet will his number be in the future. The man, I mean, who is a successful business man: wrapped up in his material affairs, in the making of money, and naught else. A man is full-grown only when he adds to his business success the sense that he owes something to his fellows: to his neighbors: to his community: that he is his "brother's keeper," as he his. Men are realizing this far more and more, but there are still many who see this only through a glass darkly. They see no reason why they should be asked to be also busy evenings in some service that means the betterment of others, particularly in in their own community. "I am too tired after a day's work" is the universal cry of such men. But they forget that work for others does not tire as does work for self. Such work is refreshing in that it differs from the day's routine. A man never reaches the height of his success in the world of his business until he gains that sense of elevation that comes from complete absorption in some channel of human betterment outside of his business. It is this which is making so many of our big men of to-day bigger. It is bound to do it: work for others always strengthens and uplifts. And the day is already here when men are judged not alone by their success in the world of their material endeavor: the question is here and now and everywhere asked: "I know, but what else does he do? What does he do with the time that he has left?"

Why the Farmer Buys the Auto

The sale of automobiles in this district the past two months has been remarkable. And yet, why should it be given any more than passing notice. The increase in the use of this rapid means of getting around is caused by the purchases made by the farmers. And they need the auto and have more use for it perhaps than any other class of men in this section of the country.

The day is fast passing when man can afford to take a day to come to town and back home again. The careful and wise farmer finds that the auto can do this job in a couple of hours, and besides offer some pleasure for his family.

The other day a farmer came into The Times office. He had just alighted from his car. He was neatly dressed, and was spending a few hours with his family at a friend's, making back home in time for the evening chores, and this man had some chores, mind you. There were 300 acres under work by himself and his brother. On this farm there were 54 head of cattle, 9 horses, 63 sheep, and 40 hogs, beside the many other things around a farm.

This man's testimony is that the interest on investment in a car, its depreciation in value, its upkeep are as nothing compared with the help it gives him and his family, and besides provides a means of pleasure.

The automobile has become a part of the equipment of well regulated farms in this district.

A new use has been found for stale bread. It used to be food, but since it is now scarce and expensive some people in old London have been using it to clean wall paper. Three or four stale loaves will clean the paper in a drawing room and make it look like new. Apparently reports of lack of food in the old country must be rather exaggerated, and will make Germany wonder if her submarines are really starving Britain.

Mrs. John Thornburn and son Lindsay, are slowly recovering from an attack of scarlet fever. Nurse Mawhinney is taking care of them.

Mrs. (Rev.) J. Howe of Huntington, Ind. is visiting her many friends here.

Miss Mamie Bell is in Walkerton this week.

"The Village Doctor" given in Paisley on Friday evening, by the young people of S. S. No. 13, realized $92.00 for the Red Cross of that town.

It would have cheered the hearts of the boys at the front, or in the hospitals could they have seen the girls of the G. Y. C. sixteen of them, cheerfully working on pyjamas, socks, etc., at the home of Miss Pearl Nicholson on Tuesday p. m., of last week. These girls meet once in two weeks and are a hive of busy bees, endeavoring to do their bit. Next meeting at Rhoda Carr's.

$150 was gathered for the Y. M. C. A. by those collecting on the 12 Con. of Bruce.

160th Has a New Commander

Colonel Donald Sutherland, who left Woodstock a short while ago after recovering from his second wound, has been given command of the 160th Bruce Battalion, which is in England, and will go to the front as a unit.

This means that Col. Weir will be sent back to Canada.

There are many conflicting reports about the battalion going to France as a unit however.

Foxes are more plentiful here than for a number of years and are causing much damage to the fowl pens. A lot are being shot and dug out, many of the boys acting as middlemen to the fox farmers. With the high price of eggs it is figured out that it pays better to down Jimmy Fox now than to wait till hide is graded as No. 1 on the market.

UNDERWOOD NEWS

The death of Thomas McCoubrey of Underwood, marked the passing of another of the pioneers of the County of Bruce. He was born at Bangor, Co. of Down, Ireland and when but a boy, emigrated with his parents and brothers to Canada settling in Galt in 1845. Shortly afterward, they settled on a farm in Flamborough Tp, where they made a small start. One year before the land in Bruce Co was put on the market, they took up 400 acres of land in Carrick Tp but his father died in Flamborough before moving. The three brothers hewed out a home in Carrick, and Mr. McCoubrey could talk intelligently on Robertson's history of Bruce. In Carrick, he met Miss S J McCool to whom he was married in 1865 and about 1874 moved to the Tp of Bruce near Bain de Dore, where with his wife and daughters he made a comfortable home. About six years ago, he moved to Underwood, where the death took place on Friday, May 25th. The deceased was a highly respected citizen and a member of the Underwood Presbyterian church. He is survived by his wife and two daughters; Jane of Underwood and Mrs. Robert Robinson, 6th. of Bruce, and one brother, Andrew of Halgcliff, Sask. The interment took place on Monday, May 28th, services being conducted in the Underwood Presbyterian church by Rev. A. McNabb. Burial at the Bain-de Dore Cemetery. Aged 83 years, 7 months 13 days.

The I. O. O. F lodge here attended service in the Methodist church on Sunday. About 100 members were in attendance and listened to an instructive sermon by Rev. Hawke. Special music was rendered. The church was nicely decorated for the occasion with flowers and the three links, the emblem of the society, worked in evergreens with the words Friendship, Love and Truth, was placed in front of the pulpit.

Mrs. Fred Thede returned home from Kitchener hospital last week very much improved in health.

Mrs. Thos. McCoubrey who has been very ill for the past week is slowly improving.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Mr. Pierson is able to be about again after his severe illness, the effects of a bad cold.

Among others Mr. Adam J. Esplen has a motor car.

The busy season being over farmers will be able to go fishing. Some good catches are reported, so the story goes.

The church board decided to have a special Sunday service shortly and call for a "paper" collection. This service is to take the place of a garden party, and some gifted speaker will be secured for the occasion if possible. A feast for the mind alone should not be out of place these economizing times.

Rev. Mr Ferguson from Blind River, preached here the last two Sundays. He is a man of mature experience and of good physique, an earnest and interesting speaker and has a strong voice that can be heard distinctly.

Rev. Mr. McCallum has resigned the moderatorship of Burgoyne and Dunblane congregation on account of his intention to leave Tara shortly. Rev. Mr. Mann of Port Elgin, has been appointed moderator in his stead.

The Young Peoples' meeting last Wednesday night took the form of a programme. John Lyness acted as chairman, Beth Stewart, Arthur Burgess and Rena Gowanlock gave readings, a song by Miss Wallace, and quartette, and music by the orchestra. Rev. Mr. Ferguson gave a short address on the work of the "Christian Endeavor Society." There were about thirty present. It is proposed to have one meeting each month take the form of a programme.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XI. June 10, 1917.

Jesus Crucified.—John 19: 16-30.

Commentary.—I. Jesus placed on the cross (vs. 16-24). 1. Then delivered he him—When Pilate became convinced that he could not satisfy the mob without condemning Jesus to death, he gave him over into their hands. See Introduction. To be crucified— The Jewish mode of execution was by stoning. The Romans executed the worst criminals by crucifying them. This mode of execution would agree with prophetic references to the death of Christ (Exod. 12: 46; Psa. 22. 16, 31: 20, Zech. 12: 10). Compare these texts with John 19: 24, 37; 1 Peter 2: 24. The Roman government had jurisdiction over Palestine at this time, hence crucifixion was the mode of execution in his case. 17. Bearing his cross—It was required of the person who was to be crucified that he should carry the cross or assist in carrying it. The way was hilly and Jesus became exhausted and sank beneath his burden. The soldiers compelled Simon, of Cyrene in Africa, to bear the cross for him. There is a tradition that Simon afterward became a Christian. The appearance and conduct of Jesus moved him to accept Christ. Golgotha—This was the Hebrew name for "the place of a skull." It was outside the walls of Jerusalem (Heb. 13: 12). The traditional site, the place where stands the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, is within the walls, and does not well answer the description given in the scriptures. At the north of the walls is a hill which bears a striking resemblance to a human skull. This is believed by many to be Golgotha. There is here a garden tomb which was possibly the very place in which Christ lay. The top of the hill is now used as a Mohammedan burial place. 18. They crucified him—Jesus was fastened to the cross by spikes driven through his hands and his feet into the wood. The cross was then raised and let down into the hole made to receive it. The pain borne by the victim was excruciating and death did not usually take place until the second or third day. To Jesus was offered the stupefying drink that was prepared by thoughtful women to relieve the sufferings of those crucified, but he would not take it, wishing to have his senses fully alert during the awful ordeal. Two other with him—These were bandits who were being justly executed. Jesus in the midst—In mockery Jesus was placed in the position of honor. Those who were engaged in putting Jesus to death, the Jews who had falsely and unjustly secured the sentence of death against him, and the Roman officials and soldiers who were brought into the case were not fully aware of what they were doing. This was the basis of the prayer of Jesus for them while he was on the cross. While this is true, those who crucified him were not excusable for attempting to heap ridicule upon him. It was not in the power of any to detract from the dignity and superiority of our Christ, even though they had him, for the time, in their power.

19. Pilate wrote a title—The cause of one's execution was usually written on a board or tablet and carried at the head of the procession, as it moved toward the place of execution, or was suspended from the neck of the prisoner. After He was crucified, it was nailed to the cross above his head. The King of the Jews—In this case the charge was that of treason, but the accusation was written half in mockery. 20. Read many of the Jews—Pilate had it written in three languages. Hebrew was the language of the common people, Latin was the official language and Greek was the language of the foreign population. Greek was the language of culture; Latin, of power, and Hebrew, of religion. 21. Write not, The King of the Jews, etc.—The Jews were naturally displeased with Pilate for placing this title on the cross of Jesus, but he was having a sort of revenge for their insistently demanding His death when he desired to release Him. 22. What I have written I have written—There was to be no change in the superscription. 23, 24. According to custom the executioners were entitled to the outer garments of the victim, and in this case, as Jesus' robe was without seam, lots were cast to decide who should have it.

II. Jesus' care for His mother (vs. 25-27). 25. There stood by the cross—There were many present at the crucifixion to "rail on" Jesus (Mark 15. 29), but there were some present who had loving regard for Him. The three Marys are mentioned by name and there were other women present (Matt. 27. 56). 26. When Jesus therefore saw—He was conscious; and in the midst of His sufferings He was solicitous for His mother. The disciple ... whom He loved—John, who modestly refrained from mentioning his own name. Woman, behold thy son—It is probable that Joseph was dead and Mary was a widow. Jesus arranged for a new and tender relation between His mother and John, that she might be well cared for. John was at the cross and received this high honor. 27. Behold thy mother— A large responsibility was placed upon John, but not a burden. "John's devotion to his dying Lord, alone of the disciples exposed to the peril of the cross, is thus abundantly recompensed. As John's was the greatest, the largest earthly reward."—Adams. personal love it was honored with

III. Jesus giving up his life (vs. 28-30). 28. knowing that all things were now accomplished—The entire course of events leading up to the final one of laying down His life was finished, and the scriptures were fulfilled, saith, I thirst. The burning thirst of those who are being crucified is indescribable. In his human nature Jesus bore all the pain incident to such a death. 29. there was set a vessel full of vinegar—This was probably the sour wine, contained in a large jar for the use of the soldiers while they were on duty, filled a sponge with vinegar. The sponge, saturated with vinegar, was fastened to a stalk of hyssop and reached up to Jesus' mouth that he might quench his thirst. 30. It is finished—His earthly life of teaching, miracle-working, and suffering was coming to a close. He was making an atonement for the sins of the world. He was the sacrifice, and by his laying down his life, the atonement would be atonement would be completed. gave up the ghost—"Gave up his spirit"—R. V. He laid down his life. He was not deprived by others of it. He alone had the power to lay it down and he also had power to take it again. The seven sayings of Christ on the cross are as follows: The first was, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke 23:34). The second, "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise" (Luke 23:43). The third, "Woman, behold thy son!" and "Behold thy mother!" (John 19:26, 27). The fourth, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Mark 15:34). The fifth, "I thirst" (John 19:28). The sixth, "It is finished" (John 19:30). The seventh, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Luke 23:46). The first three have reference to others, the next three to his awful conflict and with the last he commends his spirit to the Father.

Questions.—Where was Christ crucified? Who carried his cross to the place of execution? At what hour was Christ crucified? What sayings of Christ on the cross does John record? What were his other sayings? What classes of persons were present at the cross? What inscription was placed over Jesus? Why was it written in different languages? What took place in the temple when Christ gave up his life?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Finished work.

I. The world's rejection of Jesus.

II. Christ's atoning sacrifice.

I. The world's rejection of Jesus. The Jews were profoundly anxious for Jesus to be put to death by Roman crucifixion. They wished to stamp out in disgrace and shame all his claims. They wanted the supreme court, the heathen power, to crush and defile the idol of the people among whom were some of their leaders. They wished to deliver themselves from the responsibility of the act, and to avoid being called to account. They wished to have a Roman guard to prevent having snatched from them the realization of their inhuman purpose. The Jews wished to disconnect the name of Jesus from all their ideas of the Messiah and represent him as a usurper. Pilate was irritated at having been dragged into the position in which he found himself. How to maintain his popularity with the Jews and save his conscience constituted a difficulty. To him the hour had come when he must reveal the spirit of his life by one great act of decision. He must crucify Christ or his self love. His decision was to announce his life-purpose for the world to read. When he had written and placed upon the cross of Jesus that threefold inscription, his position was finally taken. He unconsciously published to the world the glorious fact of the royalty of Jesus, though he meant it only in scorn to mortify the Jews. The superscription testified to Christ's majesty, his victory, the foundation of his kingdom, his jurisdiction and government. Many and dissimilar were the groups gathered around the cross. Some were drawn by hatred, some by curiosity, some by the duties of their office, a few by the impulse of faith and love. Jesus was subjected to every indignity and shame. A few friends stood by in this hour of greatest trial and affliction. They manifested wonderful self-control, as if their souls had caught the calm spirit of the crucified One. Theirs was more than the ordinary affection of human kindred and friendship. It was love arising from pious attachment, from Christian hope and faith in him as the Messiah and Saviour. There was an inner circle of three women more courageous than the rest, who stood under the shadow of the cross. They could hardly have placed themselves in a more perilous position. It marked their fidelity, courage, affection, sympathy and privilege. Mary was then experiencing the bitter truth of Simeon's prophecy, "A sword shall pierce through thine own heart also."

II. Christ's atoning sacrifice. When providing for the spiritual needs of the world, Jesus provided for the temporal needs of His stricken mother. He kept death at bay until He performed the last duty of love pertaining to this life. Death was to close all earthly relationships. Jesus acknowledged a mother's fidelity and devotion. He was bearing the burden of a world's sin and sorrow, yet there was room in His sacred heart for affectionate thoughts for His beloved mother. He gave her His last solemn blessing and bequeathed to her His best earthly legacy. While He gave a son to His mother He gave a mother to His beloved disciple. It was an evidence of His loving confidence in John. None could be nearer to Mary than Jesus' most intimate and trusted friend. There was a pathetic grace and beauty in the language in which Jesus commended the two to each other. By His Spirit and providence Jesus had prepared both for the new relationship. When Jesus had "endured the cross, despising the shame," His offering of filial obedience, subjection and consecration was ready to be presented to the Father, by whose will He had come into the world of sin and misery. He had drained "the cup" to its bitter dregs. Reconciliation, not merely legal, but moral, not for Israel only, but for all mankind, was brought about by the work of the divine Mediator. There was the atonement made, the fountain opened, the work of redemption finished. In His sacrifice Jesus met man's desperate need as a transgressor. He satisfied the law's demand in God's government. He fulfilled every ancient prophecy concerning Himself. The completeness of His obedience, the depth of His humiliation, the reality of His atoning work and the certainty of His Messiahship were forever established. All that God required as an expiation for sin was met in the sacrifice which Jesus made of Himself upon Calvary. He had looked during the whole of His ministry to that solemn hour.

FARMERS' FRIENDS—THE BIRDS

Birds Destroy Insects Which Annually Cause $180,000,000 Loss in Canada.

Farmers are usually far more tolerant than friendly toward bird life. In fact, if a hungry robin eats a few cherries, or a nest of sparrows make a nuisance of themselves in the eaves of the house or over the barn door, the farmer is very apt to consider them very harmful and undesirable.

Those who have made a study of bird life are able to tell us most astonishing stories of their value in destroying insects, mice, etc. The rapidity of increase among insects of most kinds is appalling when one stops to think of it. One of our Canadian Entomologists has computed that one single pair of Colorado potato beetles, if left to multiply unchecked for a single season, would produce sixty million. The per centage of increase we will leave for others to figure out. It is estimated that a pair of gypsy moths unchecked for eight years would produce enough progeny to destroy all the foliage in the United States. Death to the gypsy moths.

MEADOWLARK.

Not only are insects so prolific, but they are most prodigious feeders. think of a small larva or worm which can consume within twenty-four hours two hundred times its own original weight in food. And the worst of it is that this food is our own good cabbages, roots, apples, grain or anything they may conceive a liking for, and which we have planted and cared for at a cost of twenty-five to one hundred dollars an acre.

What are we going to do about it? What can we do about it? The most sensible thing we can do about it is to leave nature alone, and if necessary to assist her to make our work more profitable. Nature has an exquisite poise, which man has all too frequently disturbed and for which he very often has to pay very dearly

Bird life has a predominating insect diet, and if we curtail the freedom of our birds by gunfire, traps, snares or laws permitting their wanton destruction we disturb this equilibrium which nature shows, and increase for ourselves trouble from injurious insect pests. Experiences in Hungary, Russia, United States, and in fact all over the world, have confirmed the fact that birds are a great friend and powerful ally of the agriculturist in waging war against insect pests. In Canada alone the annual loss to the country by the destruction of forests and crops caused by injurious insects is estimated at $180,000,000, most of which is due to the scarcity of insectivorous birds. In the United States the loss to the agricultural interests of the country through insects was placed at over $700,000,000 a few years ago.

While the reproductive power of insects is most extraordinary, yet the number of birds required to keep them in check is really not so large since birds also require immense amounts of food to maintain their active existence. The young particularly require large amounts of food to produce their very rapid growth and development. The fact too that birds can fly so swiftly and so far increases their efficiency as insect destroyers, since they are able to reach a spot very quickly which offers good food.

Ontario is comparatively rich in species or kinds of birds, yet of the thirteen thousand species known to science only about three hundred and twenty-five have been found in this province. The range of many of our birds is extending steadily northward as agriculture progresses and the larks, bobolinks, orioles and bluebirds are now found in Northern Ontario, where they were unknown up to a comparatively short time ago. All of these species are among the farmer's good friends.

Robins and chipping sparrows particularly like the presence of human beings, as evidenced by the fact that they build their nests where no attempt is made at concealment.

A word of commendation should be spoken for the robin. There can be no doubt that this bird, whose cheery song we listen for in spring time does do considerable damage to fruit in orchard and garden but if we weigh the evidence carefully we will find that what fruit and other produce is eaten, is paid for during the season. The robin is particularly helpful during the early part of the season, when it feeds itself and young almost entirely on cut worms and the larvae of the June beetle. The larva is very pernicious, and the "white grub," as it is called, is very destructive to growing plants of many kinds, cutting them off at the surface and causing their death.

The bluebird, far less common now than formerly, is another of our friends whose real friendship none can dispute. It eats neither grain nor fruit, but confines itself to insects when they are at all available. Nest boxes placed low down in the orchards where they will not arouse the envy of the sparrows, would do much to increase their numbers in Ontario.

The meadowlark is another of our feathered co-workers which is fast disappearing. The fences in springtime used to abound with them, while now we can only see an occasional one. The meadowlark comes to us in March and leaves in November, and during all these months it feeds on insects entirely, never touching grain or fruit of any kind. It is particularly fitted to search for cut worms and other insects feeding underground. Early in the season they eat wire worms, cut worms, caterpillars and beetles, while later on they feed heavily on grasshoppers. Protection from cats crows and skunks would help toward an increase in their numbers.

The Baltimore oriole is a bird generally considered as an ornament rather a useful citizen. This feathered songster feeds almost entirely on leaf eating insects in trees, and consequently is of greater value to the fruit grower than to the grain farmer.

In truth, there are scores of birds whose good offices are rather more despised than appreciated, but whose services to the farmer are of inestimable benefit.

There are very few birds directly injurious to agriculture, although some, like the crow, the blackbird, the grackles and the cowbird are either of no particular benefit to the farmer or they are serious enemies of our real friends. The cowbird is a most pernicious foe to our valued birds and should be exterminated as a lazy, good-for-nothing sponger.

One word about our sleek and sly friend the house cat. Careful observation of cats which were supposed to be exceptionally good ratters, and which were watched, have shown that tabby may make away with from fifty to sixty birds in the course of a year. Just figure the loss in bird life if the 21,000,000 cats in the United States averaged only ten birds per year.

SUNDAY AT HOME

A LIFTING HOPE.

There is no prison of the mind,
Death's sting is drawn when we can say,
"Visions and dreams alone can bind
To-morrow's hope with yesterday."

The violet lifting lovely head,
The red, red rose blushing fair,
Grow best in cities of the dead
And from the grave of man's despair.

There is no prison of the mind,
There's no death when the sting is drawn;
Prisoner or prince, dream on and find
Your darkest hour before the dawn.

Henry Leverage, in the Star-Bulletin.

TRUST IN THE LORD

I was brought low, and he helped me—Blessed be the Lord, because he has heard the voice of my supplications. The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped ;therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth: and with my song will I praise him.

It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes.—Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God.—He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation.—There failed not ought of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel; all came to pass.

When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. — Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

IMMORTALITY.

The soul revels in immortality; it looks forward, but it looks backward and feels itself old, as if it never had a ship launch on the sea of being. Is it really old? It came from far beyond the unit bound; was it a sphere of dew unshaping itself to the entrance of time, was it a being or a prehistoric beach whose sands were never trod by human feet, was it old when Time was young, did it take part in the chorus when the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted aloud for joy?

"The Old Soul came from far
And, all lives having known,
She nowhere touched a bar,
But all was as her own;
And this could none forget
Who once her lock had met!

The Old Soul came from far,
Moving through days and ways
That are not—and that are!
She turned on all her gaze—
Illumed—deceived—illumed;
Yet still the road resumed."

When a body was prepared for me, did I stand ready for the launch, did I belong to the Divine Reserve? Ready to leap, to fly, to swim; travel with untiring feet, gather without encumbrance, think without weariness, love without sin. My ancestors! who are they? I am lost in wonder. I have only one answer: I came out from God, I am here by his fiat, I stay for His pleasure; I wear an insubmergable tunic, therefore I cannot drown, I wear an asbestos shirt, so I cannot burn. I am immortal till my work is done, and that is Never! The business of my soul is with God, and the work He puts into my hand.

I uncover my head before Christ's supremacy. I gather from him fresh fuel to feed the fires of immortality. Silent indeed seem the heavens, but that silence is eloquent with testimony. God will not bribe man into virtue by using the vision of heaven as a perpetual sweetmeat. He will not frighten man out of vice by the vision of the rod of a painful schoolmaster. But this silence in the interest of the preservation of character, taken in connection with a thousand dim hints and suggestions, is eloquent with testimony regarding the immortal life. By a thousand whisperings nature intimates immortality for man. Jesus Christ, dying, spoke in full, round tones, bringing life and immortality to light. Like a great bell of hope, mellow, ceaseless, glorious in its music, the words of the Soul's Saviour ring across the world: "Because I live, ye shall live also." In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you." "His grace will to the end
Stronger and brighter shine,
Nor present things nor things to come
Shall quench the spark divine."

ROVER.

The Story of an Exceptional Sheep Dog.

The farmer looked up from his work and eyed his dog intently.

"Good dog, that," he remarked. "Yes," I replied, "but she's only young yet." "She's the look of a good ratter. I had a dog once," he continued, "a collie, and the most intelligent dog I ever saw—and I've seen some good dogs. He saved me once from a serious accident. How did it happen? Why, I'll tell you. I had been working on the threshing machine, and the machinery had just stopped. I was getting down when I slipped, and before I knew what had happened I was entangled in the machinery. The machine was a good way from the house, and my farm-hands had gone to the other side of the farm, so I was in a pretty serious position. Whilst I was wondering what was best to be done I heard a 'whiffling' and barking round the machine. I looked round and saw Rover, who, failing to find me returning to the farm, had come to meet me, and had tracked me to where I then was. When he saw me he gave a joyful bark and tried to reach me. However, after one or two attempts, he gave it up, and, at my bidding, returned to the farm, where he sat down and whined in the kitchen.

"My wife, wondering what was the matter, came to look at him, when he caught hold of her skirt and dragged her to the machine. When she saw me she fetched some 'hands' and had me got out. I was not very seriously hurt, but I remember when I was in bed that week after Rover used to come and whine at the stairs door every day until he was admitted, and he stayed with me the whole day.

"I remember another time," he continued, after a pause, "we used to have our sheep which were going to the butcher's specially marked a day or two before, so that they could easily be hunted out on market morning. Well, one morning the butcher drove up in his cart and had a short chat with me before we fetched the sheep. When we started for the field, which was about a quarter of a mile away, Rover was missing, and when I whistled I heard no answering bark.

"We [illegible] along the road to the field, and when we were still a good distance away, the butcher said, 'There's a dog among the sheep.' 'Wait till I get hold of him if there is,' I replied. As we got nearer, to my astonishment, I saw it was Rover, who had seen the butcher, known his errand, and had run on in front while we were talking, and, having finished sorting, was driving them in an orderly way towards the gate, and when we got there we found they were the exact sheep that had to go."

One other anecdote he told me.

"On market days," he said, "we all used to go into the inn after the sale. I was not there that week. There was a townsman in the saloon 'cracking up' his dog to the farmers. 'I'll bet anyone,' says he, 'my dog is the best in Derbyshire.' 'Done!' said a farmer who lived near me. 'I'll take that at 5 to 1 in sovereigns.' 'What's the dog you say is better than mine?' asked the townsman. 'Farmer M[illegible] dog Rover.' 'I'm not taking you,' says the townsman, 'I've heard of that dog; I mean any but that.'

"I have had several good dogs," the farmer concluded, "but none so good as Rover."

A Strong Will.

"Rastus," said the judge, "you say that you entered the henhouse and then, deciding to resist temptation, left it. Is that right?"

"Dat's about it, judge."

"Well, now about the two hens that were missing?"

"Ah tells you, judge, Ah took dem. Ah reckoned dat Ah was 'titled to dat many for leavin' the res'."—New York Times.

Mothers.

How times have changed! No more they sit

The "pies that mother used to make,"
Nor any shawl or cap permit.

But now from golf to dance they flit
So strenuous and lithe and fit,
That daughters wear, [illegible] their wake—
How times have changed!

Parades they lead with glee and grit,
And use their nimble, scathing wit

How times have changed!

A PUZZLING CASE

I saw, plainly, that Tancred was trying a game of bluff, for as we were doubtful of the attitude taken up by Ilma Celinski, it would have been a difficult matter to have got a warrant issued. Still, the only way to deal with Dallas was to put him in deadly fear—if not of his life, at least of a public exposure—and that this course was a good one was proved by the way in which he surrendered to Tancred. From defiant he became meek, from excited he became quiet, and throwing off his air of injured dignity, which he now found was quite useless, he assumed a bold, brazen manner which was absolutely appalling. Up to this time, in spite of his questionable behavior, I certainly supposed Dallas to be a gentleman, but now, really I cannot trust myself to speak on the subject, and the sooner I set down the end of this disgraceful scene the better.

"If you think you will release Tressinger by putting me in his place you are very much mistaken," he said, with brazen assurance. "I see you have the whiphand of me, so I may as well tell you all I know, but such a confession will in no way help you, for, in spite of your kind suspicion, I know no more than you do who killed Mazzucata."

"We will judge of that for ourselves when we hear your confession."

"Very good. I merely warn you not to be too sanguine. As I admitted before, I met Mazzucata in Milan and asked her to marry me, but she refused. I then went away to the East, thinking travel would cure me of my love, but found my mistake; for when I returned to Paris on the seventh of May I was more in love than ever. I had hoped to find Mazzucata in Paris, but she had left a few days before with Tressinger. Then I heard all the gossip about them, and, being jealous, determined to go to England secretly, and see for myself how matters stood. I told my servant that I was going to Amiens, as I did not wish him to know London was my destination."

"But your reason for such secrecy?"

"Because I am an exception to most people, and like to be a hero to my valet. Dabsworth knew that I was in love with Mazzucata, and I did not wish him to know I was going to England on her account. Oh! I know you will think it a weak reason—still, it was my only reason, for I hate servants' gossip, and, besides, did not want Dabsworth to gossip with Tressinger's valet, whom he knew, about my infatuation."

"Well, sir, for the sake of argument, we will grant that this was your reason for secrecy, though I think it is but a slight one."

"You can think what you please," retorted Dallas, in a sulky tone. "I am now telling you the truth. When I left Paris I came straight to London, and had no difficulty in finding out all I wished to know. Mazzucata was engaged to marry Sir Gilbert, and I, who loved her so dearly, was left out in the cold."

"You are well known in town, Mr. Dallas," I said, at this moment, "so how was it that you gathered all this information without being seen?"

"Because I never showed myself," he replied, cunningly. "I stayed at a third-rate hotel in the Strand, and sent for Ilma Celinski, who I knew was in love with me. She came to my hotel and did all I wished; told me of Sir Gilbert's infatuation, of Mazzucata's love. I was enraged, and knowing Mazzucata's superstition about the Black Carnation, I thought if I could send her one it would frighten her into giving up any idea of marriage."

"Dog in the manger. You could not marry her yourself, and did not want anyone else to have her."

"Exactly," replied Dallas, coolly. "You have hit it, my dear major. Well, I did not know where a Black Carnation was to be found until Ilma told me. She also informed me that Mazzucata was the daughter of Maxwell, a gardener at Lippinton. So down there I went——"

"And stole the Black Carnation."

"Pardon me, I did not steal it. Maxwell gave me the flower of his own free will."

"He denies that."

"Then he is speaking falsely. No one could steal a bud from that plant without his knowledge so closely is it guarded—no—he gave me the flower himself."

"How did you induce him to do such a thing?" asked Tancred, rather puzzled.

"I can't tell you his reason. All I know is that I asked him for a Black Carnation, to send to a lady, and he refused. When he heard the lady was Madame Mazzucata, he consented to give me a flower, and I came away with a blossom."

"Strange," murmured Tancred, to himself, "he would not give the flower until he heard it was for his daughter. What does it mean? Mr. Dallas," he added, aloud, "did Maxwell know that you were informed Mazzucata was his daughter?"

"No, at least, I never told him so. I mentioned the name of Mazzucata. He gave me the flower, and I left Lippinton. In order to make things safer for myself, I decided to post the flower from Paris."

"Yes, and sent it in an envelope with an English stamp and postmark, thus showing your hand to Dabsworth."

"That was an oversight, I admit, but as I am not used to such intrigue, the mistake is inexcusable. At all events, I sent it to Paris, and it duly came back to Mazzucata in England. Then I wrote, as you know, from Amiens, for my servant, and, as you say, ostensibly arrived in London on the 16th of May. That is all I have to say about the matter."

"But is Ilma Celinski's story about the changing of the bouquets true?"

"Perfectly true. But my bouquet was made up exactly the same as that of Sir Gilbert's—white flowers and black rose. I had no second Black Carnation."

"But in Ilma's evidence she says the Black Carnation was on the table, so suppose we substitute the name of Dallas for Tressinger, and say that the flower was placed in the bouquet by that gentleman."

"I tell you, Mr. Tancred, I did not do anything, save change the bouquets, and my reason you already know. There was no carnation on the table, and, as far as I know, Gilbert's bouquet was as innocent as mine."

"Do you swear that your bouquet had no cartridge concealed in it?"

"Yes, I swear it. Where could I get a dynamite cartridge and arrange it to explode at a set time. I know nothing of such things; and when the explosion took place, I was as thunderstruck as anyone in the theatre."

"If, then, you knew the bouquet thrown by Tressinger, which was your own, was perfectly innocuous, why did you tell Ilma Celinski to make those false statements in court?"

"Because I hated Tressinger, and still hate him."

"So much so that you wish to see him die on the gallows?"

"No," said Dallas, vehemently; "much as I hate him, I would not have let the matter go so far. I merely wished to punish him by imprisonment, but at the trial I intended to let the real story be known."

"A pretty position you would occupy then."

"It would not matter to me," retorted Dallas, with great coolness; "as I merely intended to send you, Mr. Tancred, a confession of all I have told to-day, and then leave England before you could lay hands on me. As it is, I am going to leave England shortly."

"Not until Tressinger is free, and this mystery solved," said I, hastily.

"Oh, certainly, I will wait till Tressinger is free, as, now that he has been punished, I wish him no further harm; but, as to the solving of the mystery—that is impossible. I can't wait in England all my life."

"Then you don't think we will discover who killed Mazzucata," said Tancred, after a pause.

Dallas shrugged his shoulders.

"Not unless chance reveals the secret. I have told you all I know, and you see it does not help you in the least. Neither my bouquet, nor that of Tressinger's contained any explosive, so you must search for a third bouquet, to discover the culprit. Well, gentlemen, have I your permission to go?"

"For the present, yes," replied Tancred, as Dallas took up his hat and stick; "but don't you try to go away, for I will have you watched."

"As you please," he retorted, with the utmost indifference; "I am afraid I have disappointed you, by not confessing to the murder, but I can't help that; of one thing you may be certain, that, had I been guilty I would have cleared out of England at once, as soon as I knew Major Granby had been to Lippinton."

"I have my doubts of you yet," said I, as he moved towards the door.

"Have you, indeed! I am much obliged; but your ideas are all wrong. Good-by, Mr. Tancred; and you, major won't you shake hands?"

"Sir!" I said, drawing myself up to my full height, "I only shake hands with gentlemen, and you have forfeited all right to that title."

It was a hard thing to say, I admit, but he deserved it thoroughly, and the shot went home, for he blushed crimson, and without another word, turned on his heel and left the room.

"Well," said I to Tancred, when the scoundrel had departed; "what is to be done now?"

"Nothing," he replied, with a sigh, "except, wait for the report of Melchizedek."

CHAPTER XVI.

After this eminently unsatisfactory interview with Dallas I made up my mind to have nothing more to do with this case and to go abroad in search of forgetfulness. It was, no doubt, a rather selfish resolution; but just think how my health was suffering under this constant strain of unsatisfied curiosity. Besides, I had done my best to find out the truth, yet was as far from a discovery as ever. I had interviewed Dallas, Tressinger, Ivan, Ilma Celinski, Maxwell, Dabsworth, and Phillis & Co., yet had obtained no satisfactory clue from any of them, which was extremely discouraging. The best thing for me to do was to throw up the case, and let others solve the mystery; therefore, having come to this conclusion, as before stated, I determined to go abroad.
